Election Campaigns Need Reformations

WASHINGTON (WCNS)— As new hearings on limiting campaign spending begin in Congress this week, agreement on the issues involved is far from unanimous.

The one issue with which all members of Congress do agree, however, is the need for reform. As Republican Minority Leader Hugh Scott (Pa.) told the Senate last month, "It is my feeling, and I know others join me, that we must now be about the real business of reforming our election campaign laws. The problem has been with us too long to ignore."

Four basic issues face Congress in the task of reforming the election laws: disclosure of contributions and expenditures; limitation on donations and services; regulation of media advertising, and tax breaks for contributors.

Republicans, including Republican National Chairman Bob Dole (Kan.) and Sen. Scott, generally favor full disclosure and reporting of expenses. This first step, Ken Davis, an aide to Scott, explained, "has a cleansing effect of making large donations less and less likely because of the negative effect that publicity has on the source of a large contribution."

Democrats, speaking through Joseph A. Califano, Jr., of the Democratic National Committee, urge strict limits be imposed and perhaps federal financing of federal office campaigns.

What is often cited in rebuttal to such calls for limitations is the advantage incumbents would hold against challengers. "Below the surface," Davis said, "this is an attempt to keep incumbents--the majority of whom are Democrats--in office. They can appear to be reform-minded by urging limitations, and at the same time assure their incumbency."

Republicans, however, believe limits of a different sort are possible. One favorite is the limitation of individuals' contributions of $5000 for President, $2500 for Senator and $1000 for Representative. This proposal of Rep. John Anderson (R-Ill.), according to his aide, Dave Stockman, would apply to media advertising, telephone expenses and postage. "We took items that are obvious to the public's eye," he said, "and that are available at standard rates."

Rep. Barber Conable (R—NY) would add limitations on all contributions, but set at a high enough level "that allows for a rough-and-tumble campaign in the most expensive areas," his aide Paul Nelson said.

An even more controversial proposition is the regulation of media advertising. Democrats last year failed to get Presidential consent to a tv and radio spending limitation because, as President Nixon pointed out last year, it is unfair to limit only the mass media and leave the print media untouched.

Sen. Scott's proposal would go beyond the Democrats' original proposal of last year and not only limit tv and radio costs by offering special rates four weeks before primaries and six weeks before general elections; but also limit print advertising by reducing mailing costs for candidates during the same pre-election periods. The repeal of the equal time provision which requires television and radio broadcasters to offer equal time to all candidates has attracted support among most Republicans as well as Democrats.

The final issue in limiting campaign spending involves the financing of campaigns and political activity. Democrats have urged the federal government to underwrite candidates' expenses.

Republican proposals, however, seek to encourage a broader case of contributions through the use of tax incentives and limitations on the aggregate amount any one person, organization or committee (from labor unions to political parties) can donate to a candidate's campaign.

"There must be increased stimulation of citizen participation in the political process," Sen. Dole told the Senate during its hearings earlier this month. While the GOP receives 80% of its money from contributors of $100 or less, according to its finance office (the average donation being $13.63), the party must still reply on 20% of its expenses coming from large donations.

Scott's proposal, similar to that of Conable and Anderson, would "provide a maximum of $25 tax credit or, as an alternative, a maximum of $100 tax deduction."

"There's a feeling on both sides," Scott's aide concluded, "that we've got to do something. People don't know if they can trust their representatives in Washington. In most cases their fears are unwarranted. But if they believe these rumors, we're in trouble."

An unrestricted grant of $1500 has been given to UMass by the Combustion Engineering Co. of Windsor Locks, Conn. Left to right, John R. Dixon, chairman of the UMass mechanical and aerospace engineering department; Robert J. Morrissey, UMass director of placement and financial aid; and David Gauthier, manager of employment and training at Combustion Engineering. The grant will support combustion and air pollution studies in the mechanical and aerospace engineering department.

Perpetual Scholarship Will Be 1971 Class Gift

By JUDY EPSTEIN
MDC Staff

Class gifts will remain a living legacy of UMass heritage for both the past and the future. Some of these gifts can still be found on campus dating back to the school's beginning.

The most popular class gift given were trees and stretches of sidewalks. Unfortunately, construction on campus has often "uprooted" these namesakes. Mr. Johnston of the Alumni Office recalled a humorous anecdote concerning one particular class tree.

Upon the site of a new chemistry building it was discovered that the 1921 class tree had disappeared. A new tree was planted in its place over a steam pipe and was killed. The tree was relocated elsewhere a second time.

Other class gifts have continued to play an active part in campus life. The granite benches, given by the classes of 1913 and 1921, still remain by the pond and outside various buildings on campus.

The statue of Metawampe, given by the class of 1950, still stands his spectral guard in back of the Student Union.

In days past, freshman caught stepping on a sidewalk class numeral by an upper classman, suffered dire consequences-most often a dunking in the pond.

There are gifts on campus that have never had use. In the top of Old Chapel remains a set of 11 bell chimes, given by the class of 1911, and an electron charillon, a joint class gift of 1958 and 1961.

Several classes have left scholarships through the UMass foundation. These gifts are tax deductible, perpetual scholarships.

In fact, this year's class gift is to be of the same type. A scholarship fund is being made in honor of Marty Shapiro, a student who passed away this year who was active and devoted to student activities.

According to Norm Patch, chairman of the Senior Committee, this scholarship will serve in three ways. It will honor the name of the student loved and missed by all, it will be a living class gift to be utilized by those in the future and it will appease the financial state of some of those who will might be affected by possible tuition increases.

Class gifts have lived on not only in the name of the class that gave them but also in the name of the people who will benefit from them in time to come. Although some are obliterated and some are stashed away, they and their classes will not be forgotten.

The class of 1921 gave this bench as its class gift. This year's class gift will be a perpetual scholarship. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton).

BERKELEY, Calif.,-ELECTION DAY IN BERKELEY--Two elderly women and a long-haired young man leave a polling place in Berkeley today after casting their ballots. At stake in today's election are filling the position of mayor, four seats on the city council and a plan for separate police departments in black, white and student areas.

Berkley Radicals Try For Council Majority

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP)-Having gained a 4-4 deadlock on the City Council, radicals vowed Wednesday to fight for appointment of another to give them clear control of the government in this university town.

Three self-styled radicals were elected as councilmen in Tuesday's election. Warren Widener, a Negro who supported the radicals, was elected mayor-with a seat on the council.

The council now must appoint a ninth councilman to fill the slot which Widener vacated to run for mayor.

What kept radicals from gaining complete control was the election to the council of Edward Kallgren, a white attorney who describes himself as an independent liberal.

If the radicals can get their candidate, Rick Brown, 28, appointed by a council vote in May, they say they will embark on a program which includes a tax on income over $12,000 to replace the property tax.

Brown, the fourth member of the radical slate, was top runnerup in the 33-man council race.

A revolutionary proposal to divide the police force into three separate forces-for black, campus and predominantly white communities-was defeated by about a 2-1 margin in the election.

Widener had opposed the plan but said he would join with the radicals in seeking the election of Brown, a graduate student at the University of California campus here.

Kallgren, who holds the key to the election, said he had not decided whether to support Brown.

The appointment of another council member will be the new council's first order of business. The council takes office May 1.

"It takes five votes to make an appointment," Asst. City Attorney Robert Berkman explained. "Nothing can be done without five votes." The council will continue with eight members until someone gets a majority, he said.

Kallgren, who had support from both moderate and conservative voter groups, said the election produced "no radical takeover of Berkeley."

The slate of April Coalition candidates "have been characterized as radicals, but as far as their goals and ideals are concerned, they're not that radical," he said.

Widener's own victory in a nine-man field was by a narrow 21,921-21,865 margin over moderate Vice Mayor Wilmont Sweeney who said he would demand a recount based on "the sheer fact that I lost by 56 votes out of 44,000."

The new radical councilmen vowed they would try to restructure the Police Department to provide greater local control in this community of 113,000, despite the overwhelming defeat of the proposal to do this.

Short-haired Hippie: A Friend Of Many

Among the many "students' best friends" that daily roam the UMass campus is a small mongrel named "Hippie." Although he appears to be a miniature golden retriever, Hippie's breed is a mystery. But whatever he lacks in pedigree, Hippie makes up in personality.

Hippie's guardian is Billy Austin of 18 Nutting Avenue. However, his domain ranges from Southwest to WOPE with his favorite spot being The Hatch. There he circulates and socializes with dogs and humans. His carefree existence and socializing would be destroyed if he were confined to a leash as required by the new Hatch law. His diet might also suffer.

Hippie is a contender for first place in the begging category. His unique method of resting his head on a convenient knee and longingly eyeing a morsel seldom fails. If he is ignored, a golden paw against your leg will remind you of his presence.

Always ready for a few friendly pats, Hippie will perk up his head at the sound of his name and immediately greet his caller. He is not known to discriminate between races or sexes; he will respond to any friendly hand or morsel extended.

One of Hippie's many friends, Betty Marr of Coolidge Upper, talked about him as he leaned a tired torso against her. He had just finished a rigorous game of frisbee.

It seems the 2 year old Hippie's real owner resides in Cleveland, Ohio, and Billy Austin is his Amherst guardian. Last summer, however, Hippie jetted out to Cleveland for a summer's visit with his master. Then in September he returend to his countless UMie friends.

Hippie never fails to show excitement when he is greeted. His actions are reminiscent of the infamous Snoopy's famous spring dance. Even his ability to make friends by leaning against whoever is near can be traced to Snoopy.

A true charmer, Hippie captured the heart of a non-animal lover. He said "He's the only dog I can tolerate," and he is the only dog allowed in some classes on campus because he is so well mannered.

Although Hippie has many campus friends, he is usually a one-man dog for as long as you interest him. He can be enticed by a game of frisbee, an invitation to a private room if he can have an elevator ride, or the opportunity of getting a dining commons meal.

When his hunger has been satisfied or he is worn out from playing, he will lie down briefly at the feet of his benefactor until someone or something else attracts his attention and he moves on.

Hippie is truly a student's best friend, for awhile at least, although he may consider the students at UMass his best friends.

Minority Enrollment Rises Across State

In the last two years, black students enrollment has grown substantially in some colleges and universities in the state, but most public institutions continue to lag behind in admission of blacks.

According to the latest figures from the US Office for Civil Rights, the percentage of black students in the enrollment of public and private colleges has finally caught up with the percentage of blacks in the state population.

In 1968, blacks made up slightly less than 2 percent of the total enrollment. This fall they constituted 3.1 percent, exactly the same as the black portion of the state population, according to the 1970 census.

But many of the largest gains came in the handful of nationally known, high prestige schools that have large numbers of out-of-state students. The state and community colleges that, in other states, provide the gateway to higher education for minority and low-income groups have made only minimal gains in black enrollment.

Blacks made up 2.3 percent of the enrollment of all public colleges and universities. The percentages were 1.6 in the state colleges (compared to .9 percent two years ago) and 1.1 percent in the community colleges. Only at the University of Massachusetts branches in Amherst and Boston do black enrollment figures reflect or exceed the statewide black population (Blacks made up 4 percent of the enrollment at Amherst and 6.7 percent in Boston.

In addition, not all colleges report. Although the New England Board of Higher Education lists 176 colleges and universities in Massachusetts, only 100 reported to the civil rights office.

Most of the colleges that showed significant gains in black enrollment had special recruiting and scholarship programs for blacks. Public colleges and universities are hampered in this area because of a lack of scholarship money.

Only UMass at Amherst and to a lesser extent at Boston was able to mount a large-scale effort to recruit black students and provide additional tutoring once they were in school.

In addition to 5189 black students, Massachusetts colleges and universities reported 2441 other minority students (Indians, Spanish-surnamed, Orientals) out of a total enrollment of 169,324.

Nationally, black students make up 6.6 percent of the enrollment in higher education, although blacks constitute slightly over 11 percent of the total population.

Opposing Quarterbacks Unite At UMass

(EDITOR'S NOTE: With the appointment of Dick MacPherson to replace the retired Vic Fusia to the head coaching helm, UMass football has undergone a complete change of faces on its coaching staff. In order that university sports enthusiasts get better acquainted with the new men who will assist coach MacPherson in the fall, the Collegian will carry a special series of sketches, written by staff reporter Mark Vogler, which will focus in on the background and interest information pertaining to each of the six assistants. Today is the last of the five part series.)

Football is a funny game. You never know where your travels will carry you. The guy you competed against yesterday might be working with you tomorrow.

Take for instance the fall of 1958, a period which will live in the annals of the Redmen coaches' log for what it's worth. In one of the grid matches that season Bob Pickett, then the front line quarterback for Maine and Bill Maxwell, who was calling the signals for UMass at the time, matches their passing power for the first and only occasion.

As it turned out, Pickett unloaded a good game and the Maine men rolled to an 18-6 victory. Classified as foe as far as football lore is concerned, both quarterbacks were total strangers to one another. To both it was just another game.

Now, nearly 13 years afterward by some strange series of circumstances, the two have been brought together as assistant coaches on the 1971 UMass football staff. An afternoon which dimly sticks out in their minds, or perhaps was long forgotten, has developed into some rather interesting table talk for the sake of coffee breaks.

Coach Pickett has often kidded his new colleague about the old acquaintance but didn't want to pass comment, insisting that he'd rather hear the loser's side to the story. Maxwell's version is a bit innocent as he attempts to stray away from the subject matter.

"Coach Pickett did give me a little ribbing about that. I didn't know him before hand or before joining the coaching staff. It's a little strange and actually I didn't realize we had played against each other until recently.

"The most significant thing that I could remember about that game was looking across to the defensive alignment and spotting the smiling face of middle linebacker Roger Ellis the went on to play for the NY Titans-Jets). He was enjoying what he was doing, having a very fine afternoon, and it was enough to spoil your confidence."

Pickett, a three sports standout at Cony High School, polished off his schoolboy days with a year at Maine Central Institutional Prep School before entering his own state University. Commanding the quarterbacking station for a good part of his collegiate career, the Augusta native spearheaded the Black Bears to a pair of pennants in the Maine State Series — a league which also comprised Bates, Bowden, and Colby. Besides carrying the passing load for Maine, Pickett was quite often inserted in the defensive backfield.

With intentions of pursuing coaching as a profession, he made it big upon his graduation in 1959. Undertaking his first tutoring task as an assistant at Laconia High (N.H.) things began with a boom for Pickett as the school captured the state crown with a 7-2 mark. He was then promoted to head coach where he served for two years before moving on to Portsmouth High (N.H.). Success also awaited him there as he primed two state champions in the course of his four year stay — in 62' (8-1) and 64' (7-2).

Pickett switched to the college scene in 1966 in directing the freshman forces at his alma mater. He guided them through a 3-1 campaign, dropping their lone contest to BU in a 7-6 heart breaker. If his success as a high school mentor didn't speak enough for itself, Maine needed no further proof after the way he handled the frosh assignment. A year later Pickett was promptly elevated to the varsity level where he remained before coming over to UMass.

Nearing his 13th year of coaching, Pickett remarked of the factors which convinced him to accept his new position at UMass:

"I was happy at Maine, but at the same time I'm glad to be with the Redmen. I feel that the atmosphere at UMass is one that I definitely want to be a part of — because of my profession and because their philosophy toward education and football is one that I want to be a part of.

"I feel very honored that Coach MacPherson chose me for this position and I wouldn't have come here if I didn't have such high regard for him as head football coach."

To the man on the street the average assistant coach would tend to seem like a gadabout — constantly drifting from one assignment to another. In all actuality he is seeking something better, for in the coaching field you can always go higher. Asked if he himself was gunning for some ultimate goal in his career Pickett didn't commit himself.

"I'm quite content to be where I am now, but I think being satisfied is something that someone should never want to be. I think when a person becomes satisfied he's no longer gonna be 100 percent useful at what he's gonna do at a given time.

"That's one thing we stress among football players, to never be satisfied, that one can always give a little more and try harder. I don't think anybody would want to feel as though they ever reached their potential. If such were the case one would never achieve 100 percent of his capabilities."

Maxwell was a distinguished four letter man in his days at Mansfield High. Captaining the three major sports he also ran the mile for his track team.

A nifty passing arm and a master mind to match, Maxwell came to UMass at a time when the football program was in a growing stage. Besides his double-duty as a signal caller and defensive half on the grid iron, he was quite the lacrosse player at the university. In fact he secured UMass MVP honors in the sport in 59' and 60'.

Campus service organizations, Angel Flight and Arnold Air, will have representatives at the tables outside the Campus Center Bookstore to collect contributions for the Holt Family this Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M. This is part of a nationa project.

Ella Tamshe To Speak On Soviet Jews

Russian-born Israeli student Ella Tamshe will visit the UMass campus on Thursday April 8th.

Ella is, a 22 year old girl, emigrated to Israel with her family in 1967 just after the Six-Day War. While in the Soviet Union she was a teen-age activist in her people's struggle for equal rights.

As a young girl she joined the Jewish underground in Vilna and in Riga, and fought dauntlessly for the right of the Jewish people to display their culture in communal, social and educational activities, and to emigrate if they so desired. Several times she narrowly escaped arrest by the KBG, the Soviet secret police.

Ella's family applied to the Soviet authorities for permission to emigrate in 1955. This was an extremely dangerous thing to do in view of the Soviet regime's repressive policies toward its citizens. In 1966, some eleven years later, when the Tamshe family finally received permission to emigrate to Israel, Ella's father was immediately fired from his place of employment.

Miss Tamshe will speak on the plight of the Soviet Jews Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. Her lecture will be preceded by a special showing of the film "Let My People Go" at 7:00 and 7:45 p.m. The film includes scenes recently smuggled out of Russia.

Ed Assembly Considers Amendments

A series of Constitutional Amendments will be considered at a meeting of the Education Assembly of the School of Education on Thursday morning (April 8th) from 9:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. in the School Auditorium.

The major amendments concern the reconstitution of the Educational Assembly, changing procedures for Referendum, adding recall provisions for School Council members, and strengthening the Executive Committee.

All students are invited to come and participate.

Copies of the proposed amendments are available in the School Council Office. Dean Dwight Allen will be available to answer questions.

Myrna Hill To Speak At Militant Forum

"There is a theory held by some people that you can't be a Black nationalist and a feminist at the same time.

"That theory is incorrect, and is based on a misunderstanding of what both movements are about. Both movements are revolutionary."

So reads a recent article by Myrna Hill, a Black Feminist from New York City. She will be speaking at 8:00 tonight in Room 174 of the Campus Center. The discussion, "The Relationship between Feminism and Black Natnalism", is sponsored by the Militant Forum series of UMass Young Socialist Alliance.

Hill is a staff member of the New York Women's Strike Coalition as a representative of the Third World Caucus. She is also a member of the Third World Women's Alliance and the Third World Task Force of the Student Mobilization Committee.

In comparing feminism with nationalism, Hill contend that both Blacks and women are kept in a state of constant high unemployment, so as to serve as a reserve labor supply during such national emergencies as World War II.

"The essence of natnonalism is the very rational claim that the Black minority of America has a right to national self-determination. And the essence of feminism is the valid claim of female human beings to determine and control their own destinies, free from exploitation," she said at the Congress to Unite Women in Boston last weekend, where she was an invited guest.

The discussion is open to the public.

Silverman To Cause Radio Ruckus Tonight

Tonight on "Cyclebreaker" something very serious, and something not so serious. A tape recording of testimonies given by Vietnam Veterans in Detroit testifying as to the atrocities that they had seen in their terms of duty in Vietnam. The recording that will be played is part of a soundtrack produced by Winterfilm Productions for a film about the Detroit testimonies.

Also on "Cyclebreaker" Mark Silverman returns for another riotous, chuckle filled performance. That's on "Cyclebreaker" beginning at 6:30 PM on WMUA FM.

Beginning at nine PM will be another two hours of the wonderful Irom Firesign Theater. These are specially produced recordings done for select radio stations around the country. These recordings cannot be bought in any local record stores so be sure to tune in WMUA 91.1 FM.

New Black Center Coordinates Events

The Five-College Afro-American Studies Executive Committee announces The Establishment Of A Cultural And Social Coordinators Center.

It has beenour experience during the first semester to note that on certain days as many as three separate events of interest to Black people were being held. Some weeks passed with no activity at all. In an effort to better coordinate these activities so that a maximum of Black people can take advantage of these line offerings and so that there can be a greater balance of these activities, the above mentioned service is now available," they said in a news release.

"ANYONE— Individual or Group--Black or White--planning some event of interest to the Black Community (speakers, conferences, art shows, poets, talent shows, dances, etc.) are asked to please call the Five-College Black Studies Office located at Amherst College (542-2300) weekdays from 9-5 to clear with Miss Thompson, secretary the planned events and dates with our Five-College Master Calendar, they said.

An added feature of this service will be that on Friday of each week, the Five-College Black Studies secretary will release to the media (Black radio and school newspapers) a schedule of the events for the coming week in the Black community, they said.

Pickett And Maxwell

Maxwell points to his first and last games in a Redman uniform as the best of his career. The team registered an unimpressive 6-16-2 mark over that span, but their quarterback had the distinction of being a victor in his finale. Passing for two td's and pulling off an intereception at the whistle, he paced his mates to a 19-6 win over the Wild Cats of UNH.

Professing a greater love for football than he did lacrosse, Maxwell continued to play after graduating in 1960 with a short semi-pro stint in the New England Football League (1960-65). Competing on the Whitman Town team he received club MVP recognition in 1962.

With various lacrosse coaching assignments along the road, Maxwell secured his initial grid coaching chore as an assistant for Silver Lake Regional High from 1960-62. He then assumed complete control of the helm at Wareham, assembling Tri County League Champions in his first two years. He also coached basketball for four years, his workmanship attributed to a Bay State Tourney Title in 1966 backed up by recognition as coach of the area all-star team (selected by the New Bedford Standard Time).

In his nine year tenure at Wareham Maxwell teams compiled a 40-38-2 mark. Maxwell had scouted opponents with MacPherson while a student assistant at UMass. This did figure and was probably a favorable factor in Maxwell's appointment to the staff.

"I was rather surprised that the opportunity was presented to me, stated the new assistant. I read about Coach MacPherson's appointment in the paper. I was pleased for him because I had come to know him while an undergraduate student.

"I met him at a coaches' clinic in Boston and he spoke in regard to the possibilities of coaching here. You usually think of the prospects of going from high school to college as a promotion in this field.

"I knew that my record wasn't too hot and I expressed this to Coach MacPherson. But he said he wasn't hiring for the record alone. He was hiring for more than an athletic record, he was hiring a person, a person who could relate with other people and one that could be a teacher as well as a coach."

As head freshman mentor Maxwell will be responsible in seeing that the schoolboyers are well prepared in making the transition to collegiate ball. His duty during the varsity game will entail scouting future opponents.

Coach MacPherson wasn't fooling around when he vouched for the new assistant's capabilities. After all, freshmen success looms as a cornerstone to UMass' football future. He feels Maxwell is the man to improve upon last season's winless Irosh record.

"I choose Bill Maxwell because he represents what the school of Phys Ed is trying to produce in its grads. He's competent, loyal, enthusiastic, and ready and willing to guide the young men of today. He has compassion and understanding for today's youth. He'll be a great coach to lead our freshman program."

Bob Pickett's experience and background both as a player and a coach make him a pretty sound selection as defensive coach. MacPherson admits that this assistant has a very clear understanding of all the angles of the game.

"Bob Pickett is a warm and sincere person who has in all actuality participated in all phases of football and worked at all levels. He was a great recruiter for Maine in the North Shore area of Massachusetts and we wanted that talent heading west rather than north. He will be responsible for our defense. And I'm sure that the 1971 Redmen will be outstanding in this area."

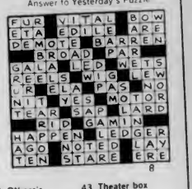
Champion O's Nip Senators

BALTIMORE (AP)—Frank Robinson's slicing double to right field snapped a fifth-inning tie and gave the world champion Baltimore Orioles a 3-2 victory over the Washington Senators yesterday in their 1971 home opener.

Robinson's hit scored Dave Johnson, who had singled off loser Casey Cox and moved to third on a single by Boog Powell. Cox retired the side after issuing a one-out intentional walk to Merv Rettenmund, loading the bases.

Dave McNally, who won 66 games the past three seasons, including 24 last year, went the distance for the Orioles after a shaky start.

The Baltimore left-hander retired Elliott Maddox with the bases loaded to thwart a first inning threat and then yielded two runs in the third on four consecutive two-out hits.



Singles by Frank Howard, Mike Epstein and Joe Foy-the last two off infielders gloves-produced one run and Maddox singled home another before McNally retired Paul Casanova.

Washington rapped nine hits off McNally, who ran his lifetime record over the Senators to 20-4. He has beaten them 13 times in 14 decisions since the start of the 1968 season.

Bad Weather Sets Crewmen Back

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

The inconsistancies of our "if-you-don't-like-it-wait-a-minute" weather can set the coaches of UMass spring sports to pulling out their hair. Yesterday's Nor'easter cancelled a tennis match (snow? what snow?) and caused agony for the baseball and lacrosse teams. However, most affected by our late and varied winter has been the UMass Crew Club.

FIGHTING THE ELEMENTS-Already behind in their pre-season training, the UMass crewmen have been working against mother nature to ready themselves for this Saturday's opening race.

Sentenced by tyrannical snow and ice to almost four months' hard labor (lifting weights) in the basement of the WOPE Building, the UMass oarsmen were unable to practice their trade on the Connecticut River until a few weeks ago when the ice finally broke up. Now they have to face periods of calm and storm while the weather decides if it's winter or summer. This time of indecision is commonly called "spring."

The late start onto the water has chopped off about 50 miles from the crew's average spring training. Normally, the oarsmen should have rowed 275 miles in all at this time, but they have completed only about 225. Coach Mike Faherty is somewhat dismayed by the absence of these 50, which he terms "foundation miles," that is, early workouts for correcting mistakes and making a complete transfer off the simulated stationery shell that was used in indoor workouts. The regular bulk of rowing is now allotted to conditioning and training for the five scheduled races during the next five weekends.

Coach Faherty can only call this season's competition "tough."

This Saturday opens racing with a meet downstream on the Connecticut River in Middletown, Conn., against Wesleyan University, Coast Guard Academy, and the M.I.T. Boat Club.

The Redmen face the two toughest-to-beat crews of their schedule next Saturday, April 17th, as they travel to Syracuse, N.Y. Syracuse University's oarsmen were ninth-place National Intercollegiate Rowing Champions last year, and Georgetown was tenth place. A good number of both school's participants of last year are returning undergrads.

April 24th calendarizes UMass against St. Joseph's College, the defending Dad Vail champs, and Marist College, whose crew Faherty compliments as "the best team in New England." The place: Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

The closest thing to a home meet this year is the Rusty Callow Regatta in Worcester on May 1st. The New England championship is at stake for this day's events. Supercrews Trinity and Marist will be there.

League-standing determinant, the Dad Vail Regatta, finalizes the season with two days of racing, May 7th and 8th, in Philadelphia. UMass placed fourth there last year, and now stands set to give St. Joseph's, Trinity and Georgetown, the top three finishers of last year, a hard run for their effort.

B's Win Cup Opener

BOSTON (AP)—The Boston Bruins overcame Montreal's clutch-and-grab tactics and withstood the loss of Bobby Orr in the final period to defeat the Canadiens 3-1 last night in the opener of their National Hockey League playoff series.

Orr, the highest scoring defenseman in NHL history, scored once and assisted on Boston's second goal before he was given holding and misconduct penalties by referee John Ashley with 10:55 left in the final period.

Orr was called for holding Montreal's John Ferguson and then had uncomplimentary remarks for Ashley.

After receiving the misconduct, the Boston star pushed past a linesman and had to be physically restrained by teammates from going after the referee.

Ashley earlier had given 10-minute misconduct penalties to Montreal's Pete Mahovlich and Phil Roberto and Boston's Dallas Smith.

The Bruins capitalized on a two-man advantage at 3:57 of the first period as Orr connected on a long slap shot.

Montreal which tried to outmuscle the Bruins at times, tried to score on a power play at 1:34 of the second period. Ferguson received credit for the goal as the puck trickled into the net while Orr and goalie Gerry Cheevers were tangled on the ice.

Midway through the period Orr tied Smith, whose long shot was tipped in by Wayne Cashman, putting the Bruins in front to stay.

Fred Stanfield added an insurance goal at 8:47 of the finale after linemate Johnny Bucyk had checked Marc Tardif free from the puck in the Montreal zone.

Cheevers turned in a brilliant performance with 30 saves, including a couple on breakaways. Rookie goalie Ken Dryden of the Canadians was equally brilliant with 39 saves.

The two teams will meet again at the Garden Thursday night when the Bruins will seek their 12th straight playoff victory in defense of the coveted Stanley Cup.

Baseball, Track Openers Previewed At Varsity M

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

What better type of weather could one ask for than yesterday's semi-blizzard to usher in the opening comments of a baseball and a track coach prior to each ones opening contest three days away.

With the key to their talks "weather permitting", head Redmen baseball coach Dick Bergquist and head track coach Ken O'Brien along with athletes from both sports previewed their weekend encounters yesterday at the UMass Varsity M Club Luncheon at the Newman Center.

Baseball led off the program, with Bergquist giving praise to his pitching staff and noting some changes in the Redman lineup for opening game at A.I.C. to add some punch to their attack.

Due to the snow the baseball team was forced inside yesterday for the first time since it came back from its spring trip and Bergquist said his Redmen would use this inside practice to review their situation plays for the opener.

Bergquist had Brian Martin and Lou Colabello speak to the gathering on the improvement of baseball in New England by the former and the pre-season conditioning of the pitchers by the latter.

Martin cited the added games on the Redman schedule as well as on other teams in the region as the key to the improved calibre of baseball.

He also felt that his would be the best competitive year ever in Yankee Conference play with the winner given an automatic berth to the NCAA tournament.

He ended his comments with a brief description of the Cape League which he called "the best organized baseball league in the country." This league is sponsored by the pros and brings together the best collegiate players in the country for a 42 game schedule during the summer.

Colabello, who pitched the Redmen to the college world series two years ago, put the major stress in conditioning on running and calisthenics, including jump roping, wrist rolls, pick ups and a new aspect of the Redman training, the mile run, which he said "developed competition between the players."

He noted that the pitchers begin a week before the rest of the team in the first week of February. From there they build up strength and stamina through conditioning and begin tossing baseball after ten days with the goal of the hurlers being 100 pitches thrown down south on the spring trip.

On Saturday, the Redmen play away at A.I.C., weather permitting, and on Monday they play their home opener against Tufts and come back on Wednesday to host a strong Yankee Conference contender in UConn.

O'Brien called the new track facility at UMass "one of the best in the nation and certainly the best in New England." On Saturday his trackmen open their season hosting Boston University and Northeastern, who finished first and second in New England during this past indoor season and along with the Redmen represent three of the top five teams in New England for this inaugural meet on the new track.

In evaluating the meet, O'Brien felt from last years meet between these three teams and the indoor performance that the results would be somewhere near 68-65-61 in a close meet going either of three ways.

This will be a meet of team closeness spiced with outstanding individual performers including UMass' Ron Wayne, Eddie Arcaro and Dave Evans, B.U.'s Ford Dennis and John Cherry and Northeastern's Tom Sirois and Jim Carisella.

Sprinter Walter Mayo, a senior, spoke on the new togetherness and added spirit of the team this season due to the new track.

He pointed out that in the past the team was fragmented around the campus finding any type of area conducive to practice, resulting in no one knowing who was who on the team.

This season the story is different, with this new dimension of togetherness making the outcome of the season look much brighter.

As for Mayo, himself, who has been one of the best sprinters in New England during his collegiate career, he has his sights set on a hundred yard time of 9.5 or 9.6 seconds.

Next week at the Newman Center, football and golf will be featured with head coaches Dick MacPherson and Dick Page the special guests.

You Don't Appeal To The Masses

Vets Told To Change Image

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

The appearance of Robert Corry at last night's Veterans for Peace meeting caused a great deal of debate throughout the 2 1/2 hour meeting. Corry, who has attacked the organization through letters to the editor of the Collegian, told the 35 people who attended that the present organization's affiliations with other groups on campus turns off other veterans. He said that to start a truly active movement to unite veterans on campus, the present group has to come out with real statements and to stop turning off veterans by the images presented in their propaganda.

Corry, a veteran of Viet Nam, said the group would have to do more and work harder to get all of the 1,400 veterans on campus together."

"By appealing only to politically oriented people you can't appeal to the masses whom you are trying to convert," Corry told the group. A member of the group then told the audience that Bernie Lougee was one of the very few who had worked hard from the beginning of the group's organization a few months ago and that those now complaining about the organization and it's officers were no where in sight to help out in organizing the group. Another veteran stated that the group had no money for publicity and that this was a reason for the small turnout at meetings.

Immediately after that discussion, Corry made a motion that the Veterans for Peace change their platform. This was seconded and after a short debate, the wording of the statement was changed to one that would create more appeal. The corrected platform now reads, "As former members of the U.S. Armed Forces we urge immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces in Indo China."

Following this, Bernie Lougee proposed that a committee be formed to get the opinions of Veterans on Campus concerning the war. This motion unanimously passed.

Earlier, at the beginning of the meeting, 4 members of the group made a video tape recording describing the atrocities that they had seen perpetrated daily upon Vietnamese prisoners by the American and South Vietnamese forces. This was done to show to the people who have never been in combat how evil and messy war really is. The members' testimony included citing cases of children being shot, run over by military vehicles, and the shooting of surrendering prisoners. One of the group noted the fact that the U.S. pays the Vietnamese people 6 times as much for a water buffalo killed accidentally than for a human killed.

Speaking on the April 23 trip to Washington, Lougee told the group that signatures are needed to be brought to Washington and that a Benefit Dance will be held this Friday to raise funds to provide transportation for Veterans to the gathering. A final action of the meeting concerned starting a petition to the Governments involved in the war, asking them for immediate release of all prisoners.

On Tuesday, April 20, the next meeting of the Veterans for Peace will be held to discuss the Washington Moratorium and to bring up ideas for improving the organization.

Scott & Byrd Believe Nixon

All Out By '73

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two top Senate leaders, Republican Hugh Scott and Democrat Robert C. Byrd said Thursday they believe President Nixon plans to remove all U.S. troops from Indochina by the end of his term in January 1973 — provided North Vietnam frees U.S. war prisoners.

Scott, the Senate GOP Leader, and Byrd, the Democratic whip, said in separate news conferences they drew this interpretation from Nixon's comments in briefing congressional leaders before Wednesday night's announcement of further U.S. troop withdrawals.

"He did not state a definite date," Byrd said, "but I had the very definite impression from what was said that the President has a date in mind." Asked if the date was before the end of Nixon's term, the West Virginia Democrat replied "I think that is substantially correct as I understood the President."

Scott said the date is flexible — depending on what happens with the prisoners.

The White House, meanwhile, said it is standing by Nixon's refusal to fix a date for total U.S. withdrawal. The President said he expects to be held accountable by American voters if he fails to redeem his 1968 campaign pledge to end U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

Although Scott saw significance in Nixon's emission of any statement about maintaining a residual U.S. force in Vietnam, he said the administration still has no intention of completing the U.S. pullout while Americans are held by the Hanoi government.

On this point, Sen. Charles Percy, (R-Ill.) urged the adminstration to tell the North Vietnamese at Paris it could agree to a fixed withdrawal date in return for a phased exchange of prisoners and a guarantee U.S. forces would be permitted to withdraw without harassment.

In this way, the Illinois Republican said in an interview, Hanoi's insistence on a fixed U.S. withdrawal date "could be used to bargain with."

Percy was one of a dozen Republican senators who sought Monday night to convince Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird that the time had come for the administration to tell the American people exactly when all Americans would be out of Vietnam.

He called Nixon's acceleration of the troop withdrawal rate from 12,500 a month to nearly 14,300 a month "a plus" but said he would have liked it to go up to 16,000.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits, (R-N.Y.) the host for the Monday night session, called Nixon's speech "a disappointment to those of us who had counseled and hoped for an unequivocal policy of total U.S. military disengagement at an early date."

Hussein Seeks Peace With Arab Guerillas

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A high-ranking Syrian military delegation met with Jordan's King Hussein in Amman on Thursday to seek a peace settlement between the king's army and Palestinian guerrillas.

The meeting was unusual. Syria has been one of the sharpest Arab critics of Hussein and harbors a guerrilla force hostile to the monarchy.

Guerrillas and army troops traded machine-gun fire in the Jordanian capital as the talks went on. There were no reported casualties.

The Syrians, headed by Army Chief of Staff Maj. Gen. Mustafa Tlas, met with the king on their own initiative in hopes of working out a plan to relocate guerrilla commando bases and provide for their resupply. Palestinian sources said top guerrilla leader Yasir Arafat was expected in Amman to meet with the Syrian delegation.

The Syrian bid to mediate the conflict may be successful because Damascus can exert heavy pressure on the guerrillas, who are massed close to the Syrian frontier and now receive their supplies from commando dumps inside the Syrian border.

Amman radio said Tlas and his team, working with the guerrillas and Jordanian officials, will establish areas where the commandos can establish secure bases.

Because of the mission's presence, government officials say they expect an arms removal inspection tour of the city Friday to go smoothly.

The tour will be made by a guerrilla-government liason team set up under the Amman cease-fire accords of last year.

Despite the sporadic exchanges of fire between guerrillas and Hussein's army, the commandos were reported to be nearing completion of their withdrawal of men and heavy weapons from Amman.

Egypt's Middle East news agency reported a conference of representatives of Arab leaders on the fighting in Jordan will take place in Cairo Saturday.

It will be attended by Egypt, Libya, Syria, Sudan, Lebanon, Kuwait, South Yemen and the Yemen Republic.

The representatives will discuss ways to "stop the blood bath in Jordan," the agency said.

In Tel Aviv, a prominent Israeli newspaper listed Thursday what it called essential conditions for a partial Israeli withdrawal from the Suez Canal.

The military correspondent of Haaretz said Israeli troops could not retreat more than eight miles - to a point where they could still observe the vacated sector.

Correspondent Zeev Schif said the area would have to be patrolled by an international police force, containing some Israeli but no Soviet troops.

Israel would reserve the right to re-occupy the vacated territory if it was taken over by Egyptian forces in preparation for an all-out war for the Sinai Desert, he said.

Egypt's foreign minister Mahmoud Riad says his country will never accept adjustment of its borders with Israel and will continue pressing for the complete withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied Arab territories.

The Question Is: How Much?

Room And Board Are Going Up

BY ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

UMass students can expect at least a $100 increase in room and board next year according to figures offered by Vice Chancellors Thomas Campion and Randolph Bromery at a meeting with student leaders yesterday morning.

Campion and Bromery proposed four board plans and two rent alternatives that could meet the increased costs projected for next year. They are soliciting advice from students about the composition of student advisory boards that will study and recommend which plans to use.

The major reasons for the increased costs that account for a hike are rising labor costs, an increase in utilities cost last year and a projected rise in the next two years, and the selling of bonds for the permanent financing of one dining commons and a number of residence halls, Campion explained. He added that the fact that there has been no board increase in two years but expenses have increased is also a major reason.

The present board plan is a 15 meal, Monday-Friday plan which is mandatory for everyone who lives in Southwest. In other residence areas it is mandatory for everyone except seniors, those over 21, fraternity-sorority members and those exempt because of medical problems. Cost is $530 a year. The following options were presented to be discussed and studied before any decision is made about a board hike:

—Plan 1 - Continuation of current plan with additional exemptions for Southwest residents, consistent with the rest of the campus. Special diet accomodations would be provided for. The cost would be $581, or a $51, (9%) increase.

—Plan 2 - A choice of a 10-meal (no breakfast) or 15 meal plan with the same exemptions as in Plan 1. The cost for the 10 meal plan would be $543, or a $13 (3%) increase, and for the 15 meal plan, it would be $613 (16%) increase.

—Plan 3 - The same options and exemptions as in Plan 2 except that those living in residence halls but not eating in dining commons would help pay for amortization of the dining commons at a rate of $62 a student. (This figure was arrived at by dividing the number of people living in residence halls into the total annual mortgage payment.) That $62 fee would be included in board rates, in which 10-meal plan would cost $530, no increase, and 15 meal plan would cost $602, a $72 (14%) increase —Plan 4 - Same as Plan 1, a 15-meal plan, but with exemptions to juniors as well as seniors. To insure debt payment of dining commons, those living in residence halls but not eating in dining commons will pay a building fee of $62. Cost of 15 meal plan would be $600, or a $70 (13.2%) increase.

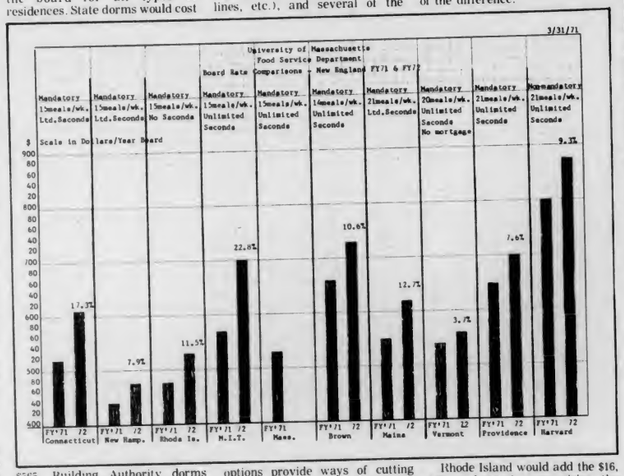
One additional option was brought up — if seconds were eliminated an estimated cost savings of $16 per person per year could be applied to board rates.

The current rate of room rent is $500 in "State" (traditional) dorms and in Brett and Gorman Houses, and $560 in Building Authority dorms and Lewis and Thatcher, and $650 in suite-type dorms in the Northeast Area.

State dorms were formerly owned and run by the State of Massachusetts. They include: Butterfield, Greenough, Chadbourne, Brooks, Hamlin, Knowlton, Baker, Crabtree, Leach, Arnold, Wheeler, Van Meter, Mary Lyon, Dwight, Hills, and Johnson. Building Authority dorms are financed by that body and include Southwest and the suites.

Options offered in room rent plans were as follows:



—Plan A - A $50 increase for all types of residences. State dorms would cost $565, Building Authority dorms $625 and suite type dorms $715. Differs from plan A in that $175,000 more money would be made available for alterations, refurnishing, repair and student projects.

In their report before the group, Campion and Bromery stated that this year employees received a 6% cost of living increase, and another 6% is projected for next year. This is in addition to annual 4% step increases they added. This was only one reason for the board increase, they said.

Cost of food for the same number of people has risen $181,000, labor $602,000, and maintenance and other operational costs $99,000, it was reported. Because there has been no increase in board for two years the dining halls have been operation at a substantial deficit which will be paid off in the next three years through the board hike, Campion and Bromery said.

The board increase would have to be higher except that efficiencies have been carried out in last two years (more self-service lines, etc.), and several of the labor costs and mortgage payments are lower.

Campion explained that the board figures for Rhode Island and New Hampshire appear to be much lower than UMass but actually they are not. He said if $16 were added for a seconds policy, $39 for higher labor costs and $15 for higher mortgages, New Hampshire would have $70 added to their scale, explaining away a great part of the difference.

Rhode Island would add the $16, $39, and $52 for amortizing the commons, he said. The additional $107 would more than make up the difference with UMass board rates, Campion concluded.

The costs of maintenance labor and of utilities in residence halls at UMass are pointed out in the self explanatory charts printed on this page.

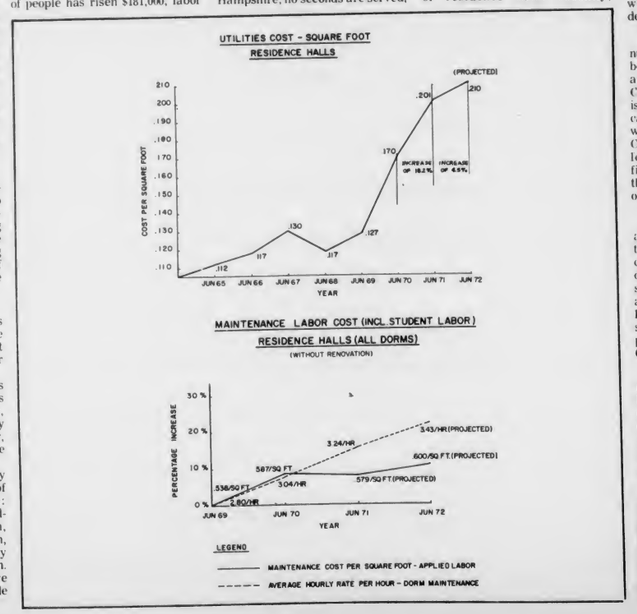
A reason for both a board and rent increase is that the University Building Authority (BA) was able to sell the bonds for the amortization (permanent financing) of one dining commons and a number of residence halls recently, Campion said. He added that this means that the annual debt service payment is now at an annual rate 8% higher than two years ago.

Amortization is self liquidation of the costs of building, Campion clarified. He said the BA sells bonds to pay for the buildings such as the dining commons. If interest rates are too high, the BA can't sell bonds because they could not afford (nor are they authorized) to pay back the high rates of interest to the bond holders. The BA therefore takes out short term notes at lesser interest, he said.

Student room rent pays for the short term notes, which in turn pay for the interest on the principal debt, Campion said.

Selling of bond issues on building authority projects has increased debt payment by more than $600,000 for fiscal '72 over fiscal '71, Campion concluded. He used this as his rationale in the report to come to the conclusion that student rent must be increased to finance the amortization described. There is a limit to the time allowed to repay the principal of the bond, he said, thus the hike in room and board rate is necessary to pay the debt of the thirty year bond.

Other reasons offered specifically for an increase in room rent were increases in the cost of living, the 9% rise in cost for building and maintenance materials and the cost of utilities, which has risen 18.2% in the last year and is expected to increase by 4.5% next year.



The report estimated the cost of renovating two dorms will be approximately $400,000. Campion said it is essential to get the funds to renovate soon for this reason:

"There were 17 dorms constructed between 1935 and 1950. Since that time major renovations have been carried out on only two, Lewis and Thatcher. At the rate of one a year, it would take until 1987 to complete renovation on all those dorms, at which time it would be necessary to begin over again with Lewis and Thatcher and some of the newer Building Authority dorms." The pace of renovation must be increased to two dorms a year to complete renovation of old dorms by 1980, and to halt rapid deterioration of living conditions within these dorms, Campion declared.

Next year it is estimated that the number of students at UMass will be 20,350 for the Amherst campus, according to Bromery's and Campions report. Of this number it is expected that 11,567 live in campus residence halls and 9,250 will eat in the dining commons. Campion said that proposals were formulated upon the basis of these figures and also on the basis that the Board of Trustees requires 95% occupancy in dormitories.

Both Vice Chancellors Bromery and Campion stressed the fact that the proposals were arrived at after careful research but the final decisions would not be made until students had studied the options and made known their opinions. Further information about the student advisory council will appear in forthcoming issues of the Collegian.

It was noted that students should not confuse the room and board hikes with upping the campus center fee, which is now under consideration. There will be a hike in that fee also, but Campion said it is very indefinite at this time. He said it will be in addition to the hikes proposed yesterday.

New Security Plans Initiated For Dorms

By JIM GOLD
MDC Staff

A new security proposal to be implemented on April 18 will assign each green uniformed security guard to a dorm as his individual base of operations said Douglas Forsythe, Interim Director of Security in an MDC interview yesterday.

Also new is the plan which put police officers onto assigned beats accompanied by prowl cars, he said. Both of these new plans, said Foresythe, "provide more service to students faster" in the area of security.

Forsythe also explained the search for the new Director of Security and the ending of the student security aid program.

Present at the interview were James Fitzgerald, Housing Security Office; Lieutenant Daniel Schwartz; and Sargent Philip Cavanaugh.

The security guard will check areas around the dorm to which he is assigned, but will return to that dorm and check in. Security assignments have been rearranged to allow for up to 21 guards on Friday and Saturday nights and 14 on weekday nights. Also, there will be a total of six Resident Hall Assistants, who remain in the dorms.

In this way, according to Fitzgerald, students will get to know the unarmed guards and the armed police better. This will protect students from intrusion into the dorms, he added. Forsythe hoped that knew community relationships would develop between students and guards and police.

According to Cavanaugh, two policemen and one patrol car will be assigned to each of the following areas: Southwest, all of the hill, and an area from Cashin to the Campus Center.

Forsythe pointed to an incident concerning the vandalism of motorcycles parked in Southwest as one type of violence that might be avoided by the increased foot patrols. He also said that as a result of a meeting with the owners of the cycles that arrangements have been made to install lighting in that area.

He also cited complaints of assaults on women students in the east area (Central and Orchard Hill) claiming that foot patrols will be better able to get in between the dorms than the prowl cars.

"We're trying to put police where the students are", said Fitzgerald. He emphasized that police will now react faster to the student calls now that they are closer to them.

Cavanaugh said that the beat patrolmen are regular police officers in off-shift time. He claimed that they are very familiar with the campus and can quickly "react to situations as they come up."

Students are not being put out of their security jobs by these programs, it was explained. The students' money comes from a separate fund which will run out by the end of the month (at different times for different sections of the campus).

Costs are now being determined for extending the program and figures will be presented to the administration at a meeting on Wednesday. It will then be decided whether or not to continue the program.

After reviewing suggestions for a new Director of Security, a search committee of students, faculty, and administrators have narrowed the choice to ten, said Forsythe. The final decision will be made in about a month he added. "We really put them through the wringer" said Forsythe, explaining how an applicant for that job is interviewed. He said that they are here for two days so they can get a feel of the campus. "Their mortality rate is a little better than college presidents," said Fitzgerald.

Forsythe feels that "we can't force security on the kids if they don't want it." Elaborating, he pointed out that the administration is taking care of intrusions and external security, but that students should be responsible for damages from within the dorms.

Students are a definite aid to security he concluded as he expressed sorrow at the loss of student security aids.

Local Group Plans For April 24 March

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

"Some people think that ending the war will change a lot of things in this country, but it is just one fragment out of a whole web of things that have to be done in this country to change the pattern of domination, exploitation, and competition that is killing this country."

This is how Robert DaPrato, a member of a group of local students, who want to use the period from the April 24 anti-war march on Washington through May 5 for cultural as well as political protest in Washington, summed up his aims for the activities.

The group met last night in the Pierpont lounge to discuss plans for the trip to Washington, training sessions in nonviolent disobedience, and raising money for food and other supplies.

The unnamed and loosely organized group seeks to express alternative life styles as well as political views by living and working in Washington for approximately two weeks. By living together and working out their own systems for survival, they hope to make a "cultural statement", ending in anti-war activities from May 1-5 sponsored by the Mayday Tribe, with which they are allied.

The Mayday Tribe is a national organization based along tribal lines, which is sponsoring the early May activities. This will include camping out in Washington on May 1, massive non-violent civil disobedience aimed at implementation of the People's Peace Treaty May 3 and 4, and a nationwide strike May 5 to enforce their demands.

The group will also rally with such groups as the People's Coalition for Peace and the Student Mobe, which is supporting the April 24 action but not the Mayday activities.

The group sees its presentations of an alternative life style described by one member as "tribal socialism"-as attempting to get at the underlying causes in society of events like the war in Vietnam, even at the expense of alienating some of the more middle-of-the-road anti-war support.

It stresses keeping control of activities at the local level, with small groups deciding on their own tactics, keeping away from the usual pattern of a small group of leaders telling the rest of the movement what to do.

The Free University is contributing to the program by erecting inflatable domes at the demonstration site for people to live in.

Commission Calls For One Senate

By IRWIN LEFMAN
MDC Staff

The joint commission on Campus Governance met today in order to discuss the possibility of having a Unicameral Senate. This proposal calls for the Student Senate, the Graduate Student Senate, and Faculty Senate to combine into one powerful governing body.

It is the hope of the commission that this type of government will improve the quality of government at the University. According to the second interim report of the commission, "Such a body offers an opportunity for meaningful student faculty dialogue on the central concerns of the University. Faculty will no longer have to rely upon their colleague's second or third hand account of student experiences and opinions in order to understand how students perceive a particular problem. Similarly, the students will be able to profit directly from experience and professional expertise of the faculty."

The principle features of the constituion for this type of Senate calls for definite membership, conferences, officers, legislative processes, and interim procedures as follows: The voting Senate membership "will initially include 70 faculty members, 43 undergraduates, 12 graduates, and 5 professional staff members.

The nonvoting membership will include nine graduate alternates, plus the Chancellor and Vice-Chancellors (ex-officio). In subsequent years, as the graduate student body increases proportionately, alternate seats will be converted to voting seats, with an equal number of faculty seats added.

The Senate will have Undergraduate, Graduate, and Faculty conferences, membership of which will consist of the respective senators. The Conference will have exclusive jurisdiction over a few specific areas, and will also have the power to exercise vetos over Senate legislation in certain other areas of special concern.

The Senate will select annually a President, two Vice-Presidents, and a Secretary.

In order for something to be ratified, each Senate will be asked to submit the Constitution to its constituency. The constitution will be sent to the Board of Trustees for approval if each constituency accepts it by a majority of those voting."

The commission felt that having students on the Senate would result in less coercion and a more legitimate commission.

One Faculty Senate member remarked that students should have more say and more voting power.

Other Faculty Senate members felt that this type of Senate is not really necessary, and that the proposal was being "railroaded through." However, after debate, it was argued that in fact there was plenty of time for the proposal to be discussed.

Another member wittely remarked that since the Student Senate is getting paid, perhaps the faculty may need some time off in order to meet their busy Senate schedule as well as their teaching commitments.

Perhaps this new Senate will be able to harmoniously mute the administration which is interested in state affairs; the faculty, which is interested in the "world of learning", and students, who have personal interests and ambitions, into one democratic governing body.

Antiwar Leaders Call Speech 'Hoax'

WASHINGTON (AP)-The leaders of the planned April 24 antiwar demonstration said Thursday President Nixon's speech on Vietnam withdrawal was a hoax on the American people and "an outrageous display of cynical double talk."

Jerry Gordon, national coordinator of the National Peace Action Coalition which is planning rallies in Washington and San Francisco, said Nixon "asked the people to accept the possibility of unending war in Indichina."

Sidney Peck, national coordinator for the Peoples Coalition for Peace and Justice, said: "At a time when three fourths of all Americans demand withdrawal from Southeast Asia, he lays down a token withdrawal program that insures the continued escalation of the war."

Gordon and Peck, in addition to the antiwar militants, spoke at a news conference called to answer Nixon's speech Wednesday night in which the President increased slightly the pace of U.S. troop withdrawals from Vietnam, ordering another 100,000 men home by Dec 1. He rejected appeals to set a date for ending U.S. involvement.

In The Nation And The World

Everyone Still Dying...

NEW DELHI, India (AP)-East Pakistani independence forces claimed three victories Thursday, further isolating West Pakistani army troops holdup in major cities and rural fortresses in the secessionist province.

Associated Press correspondent Dennis Neeld, reporting from the rebel-held town of Kushtia, said the East Pakistanis appeared to control about half of the province.

Late reports said rebel forces blasted a rail bridge linking the army-held cities of Dacca, the capital, and Chittagong, the major port, destroyed an airfield near Comilla and captured an army depot holding nine tons of arms and ammunition.

Information received by Indian intelligance agencies corroborated many of the rebel claims.

Neeld said that at least 25 million persons-a third of East Pakistan's population-are living in areas controlled by independence fighters. Numerous towns and cities on the western half of the Ganges River, which divides the province, have set up governing action committees, he reported from the town of Kushita, 30 miles east of the Indian border.

Kushita's deputy commissioner, Mhammed Shamsulhuq, told how the town's strongholds had been seized by 247 army troops March 25-26 when the military president, Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan, ordered them into action.

But four days later, he said, rebel militiamen, police and soldiers counterattacked, besieging the West Pakistani troops in a school and radio station.

When the West Pakistanis tried to break out at nightfall their trucks were stopped by roadblocks and the soldiers fled into the countryside, the deputy commissioner said. There, most of them were cut down by villagers armed with hatchets, knives and bamboo staves, he added. Only 13 of the 247 were taken alive.

Military commanders for the jailed rebel leader, Sheik Mujibur Rahman, claimed the army troops were confined to only a few cantonments in areas west of the Ganges.

The commanders are counting on the monsoon rains at the beginning of June to make army movement impossible. Intermittent rains already have turned some secondary roads into quagmires.

The New York Times said in its Thursday edition that it had learned from a prominent Western source of the seizure of the entire leadership of rebellious East Pakistan.

The newspaper described the source of the information as someone in a high position with close contacts with the leaders of the Awami League. The league led the revolt that broke into war with West Pakistan.

The Western source viewed the reported arrest of Sheik Mujibur Rahman, head of the league, as the Pakistani government's most significant step to date in putting down the revolt, the Times said.

The source was unable to say whether the captured Awami League leaders had been killed or imprisoned clandestinely the newspaper said.

SAIGON (AP)-American battlefield deaths climbed sharply to 88 last week in the Indochina war, the highest weekly toll in the last nine months, the U.S. Command announced Thursday.

In other developments: A terrorist bombing wrecked a downtown Saigon bar crowded with U.S. soldiers Thursday night, killing two persons, one an American soldier and the other a Vietnamese women. Twelve American servicemen were among 16 wounded. Earlier reports had said 40 were wounded.

It was the first such attack directed against Americans in Saigon since last December.

U.S. planes hammered North Vietnamese forces beseiging a South Vietnamese artillery base in the central highlands.

Of the 88 Americans killed last week 33 died in the North Vietnamese supper attack March 28 on Fire Base Mary Ann 50 miles south of Da Nang.

Tabulations showed that American battlefield deaths in the first three months of the year were about 80 per cent less than in the same period last year, and 80 per cent less than in the first quarter of 1969.

The Command also reported 347 Americans wounded last week, a drop from the previous week's total of 542. The latest figures raised to 44,876 the number of Americans killed in the war and to 297,258 the total wounded.

U.S. officials tallied 22 deaths last week from nonhostile causes such as accidents and illness, raising the total in that caregory to 9,408.

South Vietnamese headquarters reported 523 government troops killed and 1,178 wounded last week, compared with the previous week's figures of 756 killed and 1,726 wounded.

The allied commands claimed 3,687 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong were killed last week to boost the war total to 730,756.

In the blast at the Saigon waterfront bar, U.S. soldiers said the bomb apparently had beem planted in the building earlier. It went off shortly after 9 p.m. in front of the bandstand.

It was not immediately known whether the blast at the My Phuong bar, the Vietnamese name for the discotheque, was set off by Viet Cong saboteurs, by South Vietnamese with anti-American sentiments, or by someone with a grudge against the owners.

In South Vietnam's central highlands, North Vietnamese troops kept up pressure on South Vietnamese outposts for a ninth day.

American B52 bombers and smaller tactical bombers intensified their attacks against North Vietnamese positions in an effort to help beseiged South Vietnamese at artillery Fire Base 6.

The base, 300 miles north of Saigon, has been under daily attack since March 31, and changed hands twice in the first two days.

In Cambodia, enemy troops seized a section of Highway 4, the lifeline route linking the capital city of Phnom Penh with the country's only deep water port at Kompong Som on the Gulf of Siam.

Cambodian paratroops abandoned a two-mile section of the highway Thursday after they had been driven back by a heavy attack.

The North Vietnamese and Viet Cong opened up the attack Wednesday with mortar fire against the paratroopers attempting to move westward down Highway 4 about 56 miles Southwest of Phnom Penh.

The Cambodian Command claimed 200 of the enemy were killed and acknowledged that 21 government troops were killed and about 100 wounded.

Oil Hitting English Shore

EASTBOURNE, England (AP)-A Danish vessel and a British tanker collided in the English Channel Thursday night and oil leaking from the tanker posed a pollution threat to beaches on Britain's south coast.

Coast Guards said 580 tons of oil seeped from two tanks of the 1,600-ton Hullgate after she collided off Beach Head, near Eastbourne, with the 500-ton Ida Joyer of Denmark. The Danish ship was carrying petroleum gas.

Tugs carrying oil-dispersing detergent headed for the scene and antipollution teams along the coast were alerted. A Department of Trade spokesman said there was a chance the oil would drift out to sea if the wind remained out of the northeast.

Both ships were on charter to the Esso Petroleum Co. No casualties or major damage was reported on either vessel, and they headed later for Southampton under their own power.

N. Viets Deride Nixon Speech

PARIS (AP)—The Vietnamese Communists derided President Nixon's latest troop withdrawal program Thursday and coldshouldered his call for serious negotiations.

"President Nixon has renewed his call for serious negotiations U.S. Ambassador David K. E. Bruce told the 108th session of the Paris peace talks. "I await your positive and constructive response. An early peace in Vietnam and early end to the killing there demands no less."

The North Vietnamese and Viet Cong response was to reiterate its old demands for a complete withdrawal of U.S. troops from South Vietnam.

The Communists reacted quickly to Nixon's speech Wednesday night in which he claimed success for Vietnamization, announced a slight increase in monthly U.S. troop withdrawals and gave assurance that "American involvement in this war is coming to an end."

The North Vietnamese said Nixon is "persisting in telling lies to the American people."

South Vietnam, with strong U.S. support, proposed a mutual repatriation or internment in a neutral country of able-bodies prisoners who have undergone a long period of captivity.

The Communists harked back to their old position that talks on prisoner release must follow Washington's fixing of a date for total withdrawal of its troops from South Vietnam.

North Vietnam accused the United States of "orchestrating a loud campaign of propaganda on the false issue of prisoners of war."

North Vietnam's acting chief delegate, Nguyen Minh Vy, said that "to pretend there were great victories after heavy defeats is the way the Nixon administration seeks to avoid confessing the failure of the Nixon doctrine and policy of Vietnamizing the war and to press the policy of aggression and war."

Legal Betting Rakes It In

NEW YORK (AP) — Off-track betting got off to a rousing start in New York City Thursday, as long lines of betters gave Grand Central terminal the air of a racetrack grandstand.

Hundreds of would-be horse players were shut out when the windows closed as scheduled at 7 p.m., one hour before first post at Roosevelt Raceway harness track on Long Island.

"We're running out of tickets," said Ron Michaels, a vice president of the city's Off-Track Betting Corp., the first legal system of its kind in the nation. "We had enough tickets to plaster Grand Central Station."

Officials had predicted a first day handle of $10,000 — more than that was taken in on daily double bets alone.

Eventually tickets were rationed at five to a customer. More than 100 betters were lined up at one time before each of 10 windows in Grand Central, windows where railroad tickets once were sold.

Already $5.5 million in debt, the O-TB corporation opened not only at the 10-window Grand Central facility but also at a six-window parlor in Queens. Local customers who previously had established credit were allowed to telephone in bets from within the state. Calls from out of state are not accepted.

The off-track windows served as extensions of the seller's windows at the track, except they closed an hour earlier rather than at post time. Betting information was fed to the track for inclusion in the parimutuel pool. Scratches were handled as they would be at the track. However, the off-track bettor had only the morning line in the newpaper to guide him, rather than up-to-the-minute tote board odds.

The O-TB has yet to work out agreements with Yonkers Raceway, another harness track, and Saratoga, Aqueduct and Belmont, the three thoroughbred tracks operated by the New York Racing Association.

Corporation president Howard J. Samuels anticipated the corporation would get off to a slow start-handling about $10,000 a day in bets — until 30 or so parlors are operating, sometime this summer. At that stage, he said, O-TBshould reach the breakeven point of a $200,000-a-day handle.

Eventually Samuels envisions 100 parlors thoughout the city and possible annual revenues for the city of $160 million.

Feds Assault Police

BOSTON (AP)-FBI informants working undercover with New Left organizations have assaulted policemen at demonstrations, according to purported FBI documents.

One of the memoranda told agents in a special squad assigned to New Left groups to caution their informants not to get so carried away at demonstrations that they participate in assaults on police.

The document, said to have been issued by the FBI's Philadelphia office, said that there had been reports of agents getting involved in attacks on officers.

Copies of the FBI documents were obtained from Resist, a Cambridge-based antiwar group. They allegedly were part of a some 1,000 documents stolen March 8 from the FBI office in Media, Pa., and distributed to some news media and public figures by a group calling itself the Citizens Commission to Investigate the FBI. The FBI has confirmed that documents were taken from the office.

"War No More"

Anti-War Corp. Starts Campaign

BOSTON (AP)-A non-profit corporation to generate public pressure against the Vietnam war and war in general will begin a broadcast campaign next week on the West Coast, Sen. Mike Gravel, (D-Alaska) announced Thursday.

The organization, to be called "War No More," would "try to coalesce public opinion to a stronger commitment against the war than now exists," Gravel said.

Speaking at a news conference the day after President Nixon announced planned troop withdrawals totalling 100,000 men by the end of the year, Gravel called the administration's Vietnamization program "a plan to keep on our involvement for decades until we win."

"I don't think there is anything new other than the decision to accelerate the withdrawals by 1,500 troops a month" Gravel said of the President's announcement.

Gravel said that what he called the "debacle in Laos" had made the added troop withdrawals by the President a political necessity.

"The reaction wasn't very voluble," he said, compared with public uproar following the Cambodian intrusion, "but the reaction in the polls was very clear."

The President's claim that the Laos operation was a success, he added, "adds to the President's credibility problem with the people."

Gravel said an intensive advertising campaign, initially on radio, by the "War No More" corporation will aim to prod the public to "step forward and demand" peace.

The campaign will be financed initially by a private loan he has taken, Gravel said, adding he will seek further contributions to expand and continue the effort.

He said the campaign might ultimately expand to other nations but said: "We have been and are as bellicose as other nations around the world. We delude ourselves to think we are superior."

On domestic matters, Gravel said he would propose legislation to rename and revamp the Atomic Energy Commission.

Under the measure the agency would be called the Energy-Environment Commission and would expand its activities to include all sources of energy, including research of methods not yet tried.

"The government should study more intensively alternate electric energy sources such as the sun, the tides, atomic fusion as opposed to the existing fission process, and processes involving magneto-hydro dynamics and geo-thermal energy," he said.

Gravel advocated repeal of the Price-Anderson Act, which, he said, limits liability for accidents at nuclear reactors to six cents to the dollar.

He said the act undermined claims that the power reactors were entirely safe. "If it truly is safe, let them go buy insurance to protect people. If it's not safe, let's reevaluate" the commitment to nuclear power plants.

With the demise of the SST, Gravel said, the proposed trans-Alaska oil pipline has become the most pressing environmental issue confronting the public.

He urged careful study of all possible means of transporting the oil from Alaska's North Slope. With proper precautions he said, the pipeline might be less dangerous to the environment than other methods such as transportation by sea in tankers.

Nixon Criticized For Calley Intervention

WASHINGTON (AP)-Ten congressmen Thursday called President Nixon's intervention in the Lt. William Calley case "extremely improvident."

They applauded a protest of Nixon's action by the Army prosecutor of Calley.

"Capt. Aubrey Daniel's statement that he is appalled to see so many political leaders of the nation who have failed to see the moral issue in the Calley case is justified and is to be applauded," the ten said in a statement.

"As we have seen, the temptation toward demagogy even affects the high office of the presidency," they said.

Nixon's announcement that he will make the ultimate decision in the case involving Calley, sentenced to life imprisonment for the killing of Vietnamese civilians at the village of My Lai, has brought both approving and critical comments from various members of Congress.

The ten signing the joint statement are Reps. Phillip Burton, (D-Calif.); John Conyers, (D-Mich.); Bob Eckhardt, (D-Tex.); Don Edwards, (D-Calif.); Don Fraser, (D-Minn.); Henry Helstoski, (D-N.J.); Robert Kastenmeier, (D-Wis.); Edward Koch, (D-N.Y.); Abner Mikva, (D-Ill.); and William F. Ryan, (D-N.Y.).

All but Fraser sponsored a news conference last week at which former servicemen said they had committed or seen others commit what they defined as war crimes and they didn't think Calley should be the scapegoat for them and others.

At that time the congressmen said the broader military policy which festers such principles as "free fire zones" should be investigated by Congress.

In Thursday's statement, the ten congressmen said that the Calley case primarily is a judicial matter involving the personal guilt or innocence of Calley and judgement on this can't be made until appeals and reviews are completed.

"The President's intervention has impaired the military judicial system and lessened any respect it may have gained as a result of these proceedings," they said. "We consider the President's intrusion at this stage as an extremely improvident executive intrusion into the total judicial process, a process terminating with Supreme Court consideration."

Above all, they said, the country must look beyond the ultimate solution of this case to the total context of the policy and conduct of the war at the time of My Lai.

"We believe this is a matter of highest national policy concern and that the facts should be fully aired at the congressional level," they said.

Selective Service Officials Resign Over Calley Snafu

(AP)—Draft board members in more than a dozen states have resigned in protest over the conviction and sentencing of Lt. William L. Calley Jr., saying they disagree with the verdict and want no part of a system they claim is unfair.

Selective Service System officials interviewed in an Associated Press Survey said the resignations would have little or no effect on upcoming inductions. And they stressed only a few members of the nation's 4,102 draft boards were involved.

Typical of those resigning was Ben F. Stringfellow of the Hampton, Ark., board. "I will not and cannot in good conscience serve on a body that will send my son or anyone's son to combat in Vietnam not knowing whether he will return a convict or a hero," said Stringfellow.

In contrast, Roger G. Sherman, a member of the Indianapolis draft board, said, "Of course I'm continuing to do my bit. I have complete confidence the Army judicial system knows what it is doing."

Calley, 27, was convicted last week of premeditated murder of Vietnamese civilians at My Lai and sentenced to life imprisonment. The conviction and sentence are subject to automatic appeals and President Nixon has announced he personally will make the final military decision. Nixon also ordered Calley released from the military stockade pending appeal.

The resignations were scattered. For example, four of New Mexico's 164 draft board members resigned. There were two reported resignations in Pennsylvania, three in Texas, about half a dozen in Indiana, eight in Iowa, six in Arkansas, eight in Nebraska, one in Utah, five in Illinois.

Robert Allmon, 50, was among the three members of the Harrison County, Iowa, board who resigned. "We just felt we could not, in all good conscience, draft men to be trained to kill and then have them possibly be court-martialed for doing what they were trained to do," he said.

Several draft board members said that although they did not agree with the verdict, they would remain on the job.

The members of Local Board 93 in Deland, Fla., issued a statement saying they were "deeply disturbed" by the Calley verdict and hoped it would be reversed, but felt "resignation is not the solution to the problem."

Prosecution Of Former Servicemen Termed "Insoluble Problem"

WASHINGTON (AP)- The Defense Department said Thursday it has given up trying to find legal avenues for prosecuting former servicemen involved in the alleged My Lai massacre.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said discussions between Army and Justice Department lawyers have ended without any agreement on how to try men who have returned to civilian life.

"It has turned out to be, as a practical matter, an insoluble problem at this time," Friedheim said. He indicated the problem is one of jurisdiction.

Fifteen of 24 men under investigation by the Army at one time in the mass slaying of more than 100 South Vietnamese civilians March 16, 1968 returned to civilian life before they could be charged.

Prosecution of soldiers, still on active duty posed no legal problem. They Army charged 13 officers and enlisted men under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, including Lt. William L. Calley, Jr. who was convicted last week of murdering 22 civilians.

Only two of the 13 still face trial; the others have been cleared. However, government legal authorities were confronted with serious questions on the course to follow in trying to prosecute any of the 15 ex-soldiers deemed to have been involved.

This is because the Supreme Court in 1955 ruled out military court-martials for former servicemen. Since then, it has been generally accepted that exservicemen cannot be brought under the jurisdiction of military courts for trial.

The 15 former GIs in the My Lai case include Paul Meadlo who as a witness in the Calley trial admitted helping the lieutenant shoot old men, women and children at My Lai.

As civilians, Meadlo and the 14 others are no longer subject to military prosecution. And because the massacre occurred in Vietnam they do not come under jurisdiction of civilian courts in the United States.

Friedheim said the Army and the Justice Department studied the problem for 18 months and were unable to resolve it.

New Stockbridge Dean Talks Of School

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

There exists within this University's liberal academic structure the paradox of a concentrated and technical two-year agricultural school known as Stockbridge.

Whether Stockbridge will or can maintain its autonomy is one of the issues facing newly-appointed Dean John W. Dennison.

Dean Dennison, who is also Associate Dean of the UMass School of Agriculture said that he would "like to have it part of the UMass Community". He feels that much of Stockbridge's "predecorum as an academic unit" was lost when its students stopped dorming together.

"The students of Stockbridge have mixed feelings about their place on this campus," he said. "Some have mentioned their 'lower status', especially in the Student Senate. The four-year Senate tried to keep us out." He termed this matter a "bone of contention".

Alain Vulliet, President of the Stockbridge Student Senate and an Animal Science Major, stated that he "personally would like to see Stockbridge enlarge. This year Stockbridge received 1000 applications and it has a maximum of 325."

Dean Dennison meanwhile agreed that much of the University Community is unfamiliar with the School's history and objectives.

Stockbridge has been located on UMass's campus since 1918. In 1961 it began awarding Associate degrees. It has over 3,500 alumni.

According to background information provided by the School of Agriculture, Stockbridge's objectives include that: "Those in programs related to production agriculture are well grounded in applied sciences and those majoring in programs such as Agricultural Business Management, Food Distribution, and Hotel and Restaurant Administration receive a good basic education in Economics and Business."

Stockbridge's student body includes 625 fulltime students, and "older people who want to update their jobs", said Dean Dennison. In conclusion he commented, "As a man coming into an academic world from a technical background, it's been a real pleasure to work with these Stockbridge students."

It isn't Kansas and it's not Texas, but due West of the Campus Center. This cow is part of the Stockbridge agricultural school which just received a new dean.

It's Agreed We Should Vote, But No One Knows Where

Everyone at the selectmen's meeting on Monday night agreed that a person legally entitled to vote should cast a ballot in the community where he lives. The only question was, how do you determine residence?

At the request of Atty. Richard Howland, who is retained by the UMass Student Senate, selectmen met with the Board of Registrars, Town Clerk Esther Dimock, Ted Laurenson, local chairman of the Committee to Elect a New Congress, and Robert Weiner, recently elected Town Meeting Member and chairman of the Hampshire County New Voters Committee.

In registering new voters for last fall's election, Mrs. Dimock used the guidelines set forth by Atty. General Robert Quinn-that only full-time, permanent residents of the town should be registered here, and that one of the criteria to be used should be whether or not a student is being supported by his or her parents. If this was the case, prospective voters were urged to register from their parent's address.

Atty. Howland urged town officials Monday night to take a position on the question of residency in regard to a specific case of Patricia Garrett vs. the Town of Brookline. Mrs. Dimock stated, "Let me say at the outset that we would have registered this young woman." Brookline officials disagreed with her contention that she was a resident of that town. She was allowed to cast a ballot, but her ballot was impounded pending a clarification by the Attorney general.

At the outset of the meeting, Mrs. Dimock's position was that the town was awaiting a decision. Atty. Howland said that since Amherst would be deeply affected by the decision, it should make its wishes clear through an "amicus curiae" brief, or "friend of the court."

Howland suggested six steps which a prospective voter should be asked to take when registering, which he would like to see incorporated into the voting law. On the first five-including proof of age, what documents should be considered acceptable for proof of residency, method of notifying registrars of change of residence-there was no disagreement among those present.

Paragraph six contained the crux of the question. It read, "...a 'substantial resident' shall mean that the person seeking to be registered as a voter must be physically present or expect to be present in the place where he desires to vote at least six months in any year. The fact that a voter or prospective registrant is absent from the city or town for purposes of seasonal employment, vacation or other purposes shall not be of any effect in determining voter qualifications. Source of income shall not be a qualification for voters in any way."

In support of the last sentence Howland pointed out that residents of nursing homes voted where they lived, regardless of whether or not they were being supported by their children. Weiner added that he felt it simply wasn't "American" to ask a person where he got his money before he was allowed to vote.

Laurenson pointed out what he said were the advantages of getting young people just becoming aware of political issues and processes, involved in actively working in campaigns. The alternative, he indicated, was a frustration at being unable to participate in decisions which affected them. He also questioned whether the "equal protection under the law" doctrine was not involved when financial support was used as a criteria. Some graduate students, he noted, received financial support from their families, but they had been registered locally.

Howland said that, to all intents, a student had left his family when he went away to college, and that Amherst could be considered a stop along the way. He is here as long as many young professionals are-between four and seven years, Howland added.

Registrars and selectmen will continue their discussion next Tuesday morning at the regular weekly selectmen's meeting.

More Civ. Films Shown Today at Smith

The fifth set of films in the British "Civilization" series, "The Pursuit of Happiness," and "The Smile of Reason," will be shown at Smith College Friday (April 9).

The screenings are open to the public, without charge. Sponsored by the Smith College Art Department, the 13-part series on the cultural life of Western man is narrated by Sir Kenneth Clark. The series, ranging from the fall of Rome to the present, was prepared for the British Broadcasting Company. The films will be shown at 4:15, 7, and 9 p.m. in Wright Hall on the Smith campus.

"The Pursuit of Happiness," depicts the harmony created in the 18th century by baroque and rococo. Music is described as the dominant art form, which with architecture, reflects the emotional life of the time.

"The Smile of Reason" describes the forging of a new morality by the philosophers of the enlightenment based on man's ability to reason. Voltaire, with his cries for justice and tolerance in the world, lays the groundwork for the American and French revolutions.

Orchard Hill Future Discussed

By ETHEL HARRIS
MDC Staff

Approximately sixty persons attended an open area meeting in Dickinson Lounge last night to discuss the future of Orchard Hill and to formulate a petition to be sent to the Administration within the next week. Dr. Leon Baron, Master of Orchard Hill, is scheduled to meet with Chancellor Tippo and Vice-Chancellors Bromery, Campion, and Gluckstern next Wednesday to discuss the question of funding for Orchard Hill next year in particular and the entire question of residential colleges in general.

Bob Dewsnap, of Orchard Hill Area Government, who moderated the meeting, explained the concept of a residential college in terms of semi-autonomy and as an "alternative to the large University and large lecture halls." He stressed the importance of the college's right to hire faculty. At present, the department must be compensated when a faculty member is "borrowed" by Orchard Hill to teach a special course, however, the University administration has not appropriated the necessary funds to compensate the department.

Another need for the Hill, according to Dewsnap, is a multipurpose building to serve as a "one central rallying point" for Hill residents. A cost-feasibility study for a dining commons on Orchard Hill has been dropped. The Hill has instead been promised a mobile unit to be built behind Dickinson House, which would be only one-third the size of the Student Union Ballroom, Dewsnap stated.

The seven demands, which were formulated at an open area meeting held at Webster House Tuesday night, are as follows:

1. Support in developing and implementing our own education.
2. A multi-purpose cafeteria.
3. Autonomy in housing and admissions matters.
4. Autonomy in the selection and compensation of faculty and teaching courses on Orchard Hill, in accordance with our 1970 semi-autonomous proposal this will mean that we will need at least the equivalent of 10 1/2 time positions for Fall 71.
5. With respect to the core curriculum, Orchard Hill will work with existing departments in creating courses reflective of the needs of Orchard Hill Residential College students to be taught at Orchard Hill. Orchard Hill courses will also be considered for core distribution credit whenever applicable.
6. As originally promised, reduced teaching loads for Faculty Residents and Preceptors.
7. Autonomy in filling existing Orchard Hill staff people and flexibility in creating future positions.

As a result of the area meeting, a Steering Committee was formed to determine a plan of action between now and the time of Dr. Baron's meeting Wednesday. Possibilities discussed were petitions to the university administration, discussions on academic matters with department heads in the University, and group meetings with University administration officials.

Religious Service For Berrigans Today

A Good Friday service to focus attention on the Rev. Daniel Berrigan and the Rev. Philip Berrigan, Catholic priests and brothers now in federal prison, will be held at 8 p.m. Friday (4/9/71) in Grace Episcopal Church. The interdenominational service is sponsored by Clergy and Laymen Concern about Vietnam (CALCAV).

Lay theologian William Stringfellow will preach on "The burden of the Berrigans is upon us." The brothers are in Danbury federal prison for destroying draft files at Catonsville, Maryland, in an anti-war protest. They are now awaiting trial, along with four others, after indictment by a grand jury in Harrisburg, Pa., for alleged conspiracy to blow up Washington, D.C. heating ducts and kidnap presidential adviser Henry Kissinger.

It was at Stringfellow's home on Block Island that Daniel Berrigan was apprehended by the FBI last August. Stringfellow was indicted for harboring a fugitive, but charges were later dropped.

Stringfellow has a worldwide reputation as an attorney, theologian, social critic and author. One of his books, "My People is the Enemy," describes his legal service to black people in Harlem. He is a native of Northampton, where his parents still live. He has spoken frequently in the Pioneer Valley area.

Also taking part in the Friday service will be the Rev. James Clark, Grace church pastor; the Rev. Lewis Mudge, Madeline deFriesse, James Curry and the Rev. Franklin Dorman. Robert Tucker, Janet Morgan and the Rev. Arnold Kenseth will read poems written by Daniel Berrigan during the "Catonsville 9" trial. A selection from a sermon recorded by Daniel Berrigan will be played. The offertory will go to the Berrigan defense fund.

C.E.Q. To Collect A Quarter From All

During the week of April 19, The Coalition for Environmental Quality is to sponsor a "Quarter a Student" Campaign in the Student Union.

Quarter donations to help support the C.E.Q. at Brattleboro may be made on April 19 thru 22 at the campaign tables. Petitions for support of C.E.Q. activities and free literature will be available.

Lee Thibodeau

Porcia Weiskel, a spokesman for the C.E.Q., supporting the New England Coalition of Environmental Quality, stated that the Campaign hopes to collect a quarter from every student and faculty member of the university.

For the campaign, four tables, manned by members of the coalition, will be set up in the Student Union, the Campus Center, and the Education building.

A primary concern of the coalition is the opening of the nuclear power plant in Vernon, Vermont, Miss Weiskel stated. She further commented that there have been "anonymous" statements of people directly involved with the Power Plant who feel that the Plant will be a high risk area.

Regarding licensing of the Vernon plant, Miss Weiskel stated that the C.E.Q. is primarily concerned with two problems: 1) radiological health and safety, 2) man-made radiation to be emmitted daily.

On April 20th, A.E.C. officials, trying to obtain a license for the plant, will hear facts and information of various environmental groups that question the safety of the plant. The prehearing will be held in Brattleboro, Vermont.

Victorian Studies Conf. Starting April 12

The concept that Victorian Britain was the first modern society will be examined beginning April 12 at a Five College Victorian Studies Conference entitled "Britain in the 1870's: A Decade of Conflict."

The conference is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts and Amherst, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke and Smith Colleges. Films, lectures, and discussions will be held on the five campuses from Monday, April 12 through Sunday, April 18.

The conference will be the first local attempt to provoke student interest in Victorian studies, and to change the old image of the word Victorian. Conference chairman Dr. Michael Wolff of the UMass English department sees the Victorian era as the "first arena of modern conflicts" and the prototype of today's society. According to Dr. Wolff, "We are what the Victorians feared" in that technology has dehumanized and essentially demoralized today's humanity.

The decade of the 1870's was chosen for the obvious centennial reason, and because it was the decade that saw the movement from the High Victorian period 1830-1870 to the Age of Transition 1880-1920. In addition to the confused emergence of an increasingly technological society, the aestheticism of this decade forced an intensive testing of the premise that art had to be serious and had to convey a moral message.

The conference will have four art exhibitions: "April 1871: Events and Personalities," Memorial Hall, University; "Art and Photography in the Nineteenth Century," Art Building, Mount Holyoke; "The Victorian Scene in the 1870's," McConnell Hall Museum, Smith; and "The Victorian Woman," Mead Art Building, Amherst College.

The events scheduled for Monday, April 12 through Thursday, April 15 are open to the public, while Friday through Sunday's events are open only to registrants. The registration fee is $3.00 and should be sent to "RSVP" c/o Michael Wolff, Bartlett Hall, University of Massachusetts. All five college students, however, may register free of charge.

The following is a schedule of events:

Muskie Hits GM Again

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, renewed Thursday his endorsement of the so-called Campaign G.M. saying the project's purpose is to make General Motors and the rest of the nation's huge corporations "more responsible to the needs of the public and more conscious of the problems of our society."

"Campaign G.M. is actually profoundly conservative because it attempts to broaden corporate responsiveness by internally changing corporate procedures," Muskie said as he urged approval of these "modest proposals."

Providing for General Motors shareholders to nominate directors, to allow consumers and dealers to vote in some of G.M.'s elections and to require G.M. to disclose publicly information about air pollution, auto safety and minority hiring and franchising policies.

"A few men in the boardrooms of some of our large corporations make decisions that permanently affect our land and lives," Muskie said.

"The way out of this dilemma is not to attack corporations, but to make them a part of the solution," Muskie said.

Registrar's Office Closing On Fridays

The Registrar's Office in the Whitmore building will be closed on Fridays for the remainder of this academic year revealed Ralph D. Jones, Registrar, yesterday.

"Our allocation of 03 funds (money for student employees) has been depleted," said Jones, "and this office probably depends more on student employees than any other office on campus."

He said, "31 students presently work here for 602 work hours per week. This amounts to the time of 16 full time employees. Since we have exactly 16 full time employees, we rely on students for 50% of our service."

Jones explained that students are used almost entirely for file work, and that with the amount of requests for social security, and bank certification forms, transcripts, grade corrections, student inquiries, and transfer credits, the files must be kept in a workable order or "a clerk might have to spend 15-20 minutes looking for a file card."

Additional funds were requested but only $540/wk. was given when $1100/wk. is presently used for student paychecks. Jones said, "With the office closed to the public on Fridays, we can spend that day exclusively for fixing the card files."

He expressed concern that one day a week might not be enough for this task, and that possibly another half or full day might need to be added.

"We can never stay in our budget", he said, "because one year is never like the next. The university enrolls an additional 1500 students per year, and our office staff does not increase proportionately."

Jones also said that his office is affected by every single change on campus, and that readjustments for changes require much time.

When asked whether a tuition increase would be the answer to the problem, Jones explained that "any increase in tuition would simply revert to the general fund of the state legislature and would only offset the government subsidy to the total education of the state."

"Added tuition money paid by the university students would not come back to UMass but only go into that general fund," he said.

Jones concluded by saying that as soon as the money comes in from the 03 fund, the office could open again for a five-day week, and the students would be able to man the files during the normal operating day.

Presidential Plane Gets Bomb Scares

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's pilot says there have been three bomb scares on presidential flights-at Berlin, at Dublin and on Nixon's most recent trip to California.

Air Force Col. Ralph D. Albertazzie says he has had to decline, sometimes almost to the point of rudeness, offers of some foreign governments for fighter escort for the presidential airplane.

He is proud that in its service for a punctual-minded President, Air Force One has never been early or late to a destination by more than 28 seconds.

And although the early odel Boeing 707s used for presidential trips already are going on 12 years old, they are so well maintained that they should be satisfactory for that duty until 1975, he says.

7th Presidential Pilot

Albertazzie, a self-styled hillbilly from Morgantown, W.Va., and only the seventh man to hold the official title of presidential pilot, talked of his assignment at the Lunchbox Forum, a meeting of aviation-oriented individuals at the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum, Wednesday.

"We have our moments of panic and our moments of pleasure," Albertazzie said.

"We have had some problems-I would be remiss if I didn't admit it.

"We have had our scares and our threats-three actual bomb threats, one of them in California this last trip.

"None of these things ever make the newspapers because they never reach that proportion."

No Escorts

Albertazzie said that as a simple matter of safety, to avoid any possibility of a collision, Air Force One never has an aerial escort.

"There are still some nations in the world that feel this is a matter of protocol with them, and feel they really ought to fly escort to the President's plans," he said.

"We don't think our own fighter pilots ought to fly escort.

Two Confrontations

"I have had two confrontations so far and managed to turn both of them off.

"We even were threatened one time with a breach of diplomacy.

"I said, 'well, if that's what it takes we will just have a breach of diplomacy-I won't have any fighter aircraft fly escort with me.' I never heard from them."

Correction

Undergraduates should return their applications for summer School to the Registrar's Office, not the Admissions office.

$4.4 Million Given By Govt. To One Man

WASHINGTON (AP)-The giant J.G. Boswell Co. farm in California, one of the nation's biggest cotton producers, collected $4.4 million from the government last year in crop subsidies.

That was almost $60,000 most than the farm received from the taxpayers in 1969 according to official records.

But now, if a new farm law is strictly enforced, giant operators like Boswell will be limited to a yearly subsidy of $55,000 per crop. The limitation is in effect this year.

The big payment to the Boswell firm, perennially the front runner, was at the top of the list again when the Agriculture Department disclosed Thursday the names of 137,000 growers who each received $5,000 or more in payments last year.

Eight other big operators joined Boswell in the million-collar class. They were:

Giffen, Inc., Huron, Calif. $4,095,114; South Lake Famrs, Fresno, Calif. $1,875,454; Salyer Land Co., Corcoran, Calif. $1,547,174; H.M. Tenneco formerly listed as Kern County Land Co., Bakersfield, Calif., $1,317,051; Hawaiian Commercial & Sugar Co., Puunene, Hawaii $1,232,166; Waialua Sugar Co., Ltd., Haialua Hawaii, $1,111,060; Vista del Llano Farms, Firebaugh, Calif., $1,105,762; and U.S. Sugar Corp., Clewiston, Fla., $1,073,980.

In addition, 14 farms were listed as having received between $500,000 and $1 million last year.

Although made under a variety of programs, the payments are keyed to controlling crop production and compensation farmers for taking surplus land out of use.

The new farm law, which sets up programs for cotton, wheat and feed grains through 1973, continues subsidy payments but, at the insistence of Congress, also includes the $55,000 limitation.

Sugar payments are not covered by the limitation in the new law.

City Or University?

For those of us who live on campus, the security problem is something which must be contended with daily. This University, having the size and layout of a good-sized metropolitan area, also is cursed with the vandalism and crimes of a comparable city. Security measures which treat the area simply as a college campus will fall far short of the mark.

That is not to say, however, that the methods employed by metropolitan law enforcement officers should be imported to Amherst. The University, though having physical similarities to a city, also is markedly different in terms of population and cultural environment. The area is comprised of college students, ranking in age from 18-21, not hardened criminals or professional hoodlums.

To form a security plan which takes all of these factors into consideration is a Herculean task and will probably result as an evolution of events rather than an immediate deliberate program. The proposal suggested by Interim Director of Security Douglas Forsyth, however, if it proves to be economically feasible, could be a step in the right direction.

Generally speaking, Forsyth's proposal would provide more security within the dormitory complexes themselves by allowing for two policemen and one patrol car to be assigned to Southwest, the hill, an area from Cashin to the Campus Center. This system, on paper anyway, would supply security service quicker and more effectively.

Although it might appear initially that this new move will do away with or at least lessen security work for students, Forsyth contends that the student fund for such work is running out anyway. Therefore, and this is an important point, no students will be put out of work by the proposal.

Whether or not this plan ever becomes a reality probably matters little in the long run security outlook on this campus. Yet it does reflect an increasing concern on the part of the involved parties to make what they feel is an honest effort towards improving the situation. If this attitude can be prolonged in the person of the new Director of Security about to be appointed, this place might end up as more of a college campus than a city.

If TV Had Been King

WASHINGTON--President Richard Nixon said recently that the Vietnamese war would probably be the last war the United States would ever fight. He's probably right.

The reason for it is television. It's obvious no country can ever fight a war again if its television commentators keep interviewing enlisted men about the battles.

I thought of this the other evening as I watched several enlisted men talking to a television correspondent in Vietnam.

My mind went back to World War II and I tried to imagine what the guys in my Marine Corps outfit would have said if someone had stuck a microphone in their faces and started filming their reactions to the landing in the Marshall Islands.

"This is Terry Bartlett here at Eniwetok with the U.S. Marines. Standing next to me is Cpl. Zeth Kingbury of Zenith, Tenn. How's it going, corporal?"

"It's going real bad. I don't know if we can hold out the night with the ammunition we have. The Japs are dug in and we're getting a lot of heavy fire, a lot of it."

"What is your name, sir?"

"Pfc. Roger Bernstein of Brooklyn, N.Y."

"Roger, do you think the United States should have tried to take Eniwetok?"

"No, it was a mistake. Washington doesn't know what's going on. We're taking a lot of casualties out here for a worthless piece of coral."

"Then you don't think you should be here?"

"No, sir. I really don't. And neither do any of the other guys."

"How's the morale of the troops?"

"It's not good. We haven't had a warm meal in three days, and there are flies everywhere. We have to sleep in foxholes and the heat is fierce in the daytime. I have nothing good to say about this place."

"What's your name?"

"Pvt. Tony D'Amato of Chicago."

"Tony, why do you think President Roosevelt insisted on an invasion of Eniwetok?"

"It's hard to say. I've been against Roosevelt's strategy from the start. We should be bombing Tokyo and Osaka instead of wasting our time on these islands. I also think we should forget about Europe and concentrate everything in the Pacific. After all, the Japs bombed Pearl Harbor--not the Germans."

"What is your name?"

"Pfc. Tim O'Brien, Waco, Texas."

"How do you size up this operation, Tim?"

"I think all we're doing is trying to make Gen. MacArthur look good. He lost the Philippines and now the Marines have to get it back for him. Most of the guys in this outfit are pretty sore about always having to bail out the Army. We're thinking about getting a petition together to send to our congressmen complaining about doing everybody's dirty work."

"And your name, sir?"

"Pfc. Charles Hildgard, Butte, Mont."

"What do you do?"

"I'm a cook."

"How do you see the big picture?"

"It seems to me that Adm. Nimitz is not getting maximum effort out of the Pacific fleet. I would replace Adm. Halsey with a younger man and bring more pressure on the Japs by U.S. Air Force strikes on Truk and Okinawa. The Pacific command knows I have never been for taking Eniwetok."

"Thank you. And so you have heard from the men of VMF 113 on Eniwetok. They are all agreed that nothing could be gained by this invasion. Whether they are correct or not, only time will tell. This is Terry Bartlett in the Marshall Islands."

Constructive Violence

It isn't too often that anything good ever results from violence, but the past few weeks in Brockton have proven differently. Starting with an alleged assault on a teacher by a couple of black students, suspension of school for a few days, and then last Mondays' scuffle at a dance which resulted in the use of tear gas, Brockton High has had more than its fair share of racial tension and violence.

Seeing that the long submerged animosities had finally surfaced, school administrators used this fact as an opportunity to try and get both black and white students to sit down and talk things out. In a series of rap sessions that have been held these past few days, the students have done a remarkable job of working their hassles out, to the point where superintendent of schools, Dr. Anthony D'Antuono assesed the situation by saying, "It's hard to believe we had racial trouble in this school no less than two days ago."

The manner in which these problems were solved just goes to reafirm a point I have been trying to make in this column for some time now. That is, talk is cheap, which is exactly why it is a much more admirable method to work an unpleasant situation out. Violence while good for attracting attention and sometimes bringing things to a head, is an expensive if not impossible way to get to the root of a problem.

I am slowly coming to the realization though, that sometimes before people can be urged to act constructively on something, they must be appraised of the magnitude of the problem, which might be effected through the use of some jostling about, but not to the point where there is a complete absence of law and order.

In a greater sense, what I think it really gets down to is the fact that it is sometimes contrary to human nature to raise the voice before the fist when a situation really becomes intolerable. But most of us pride ourselves for living in a civilized society, even though our true animal instincts must sometimes be supressed.

I don't think anyone will ever be comended for being the instigator of insurection, but it just may be that it is a reflection of our true animal selves, trying to tell us that something has gone amiss, and needs to be corrected.

The thing to remember though, is that in the final analysis, talk and reason are still the most direct routes to understanding and peace and must never be abandoned.

The Financial Stretch

The figures are in. The patrons are placing their bets. And the Room and Board Increase Derby is about to begin, with four "Board Plan" options leading the field, while "Plan A" and "Plan B" are neck and neck in the room rent stretch----the financial stretch, that is.

Book makers are holding back on the final odds, as the real money lines up to examine the sleek graphs and strong figures that the blue-chip horse brokers from all corners of Whitmore's green pastures have placed in the lineup.

Ladies and Gentlemen. The stakes are high and the action will be hot. Because, the students around this University are going to have to call the shots about how much they will pay to live here next year.

Yesterday morning, Vice-Chancellor Thomas Campion, two months into his new job as head of "Administrative Services", outlined his policy of "open covenants openly arrived at" while he presented his graphs and figures to a small group of Student Senate representatives and the local press.

"No decisions have been made" Campion emphasized as he explained the need for what will be at least a $100.00 increase in the Room and Board costs at the University. Citing the exhorbitant increases in costs, particularly an 18.2% hike in utility costs this year, the Vice-Chancellor offered nothing but options to the students, who will have to live with an increase in total costs of about $150.00. (The Campus Center tax rates and the Student Senate tax rates have not been set yet, but will be going up.)

All the indications are that making the final decision for next years costs will be quite a horse race, particularly when debate opens on measures which would charge students a flat rate of $62.00 for dining commons, even if they don't eat there.

What is startling and refreshing about this year's horse race is that Vice-Chancellor Campion and Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Bromery, worked together on the proposals. The effect being that emphasis is being placed on "student needs" rather than the best interests of the administration. The presentation of costs given by Campion, was very carefully designed to dispell confusion, unlike presentations of this sort in past years.

(Campion is known to have studied "carefully" the reactions to the room rent hike last year, when thousands of UMies marched on Whitmore to protest the guarded attempts to a Treasurer to dump a major increase on the students, without even talking about it.)

Letters To The Editor

And In Her Debut, . . .

To the Editor:

I'd like to add a few more words to the red-baiting controversy that's been hitting the Collegian pages for the last week. I use the term red-baiting because that's a popular method of covering up political disagreements with name calling.

Apparently, I've been "discovered" as "leadership" of the Women's Liberation movement on campus. As Bukharin puts it, ". . .and Miss Roland, in her debut." In my debut! A quick glance through the files of Colonel Marchand, the UMass security officer, will reveal what all other long-time hatch rats have known for ages — that I've been on this campus for a good many years, and have, since first coming here, been involved with the UMass radical movement.

I bring this up only because it is precisely my time spent with groups like pre-PL SDS and the Women's Liberation Movement — which was the only organization I belonged to for over a year and a half — that led to the development of the political analysis that brought me to join Young Socialist Alliance. (i.e.- We in YSA are such clever infiltrators that we managed to belong to peace and other groups before we'd even heard of YSA.) It seems that either Bukharin has not been at UMass as long as I have, or he ignores the presence of every campus activist not in YSA.

The latter seems the case since, to the insult of many hard-working men and women, Bukharin notices only YSA members and immediately — in his mind — elevates them to positions of leadership. There are no "leaders" within the Women's movement on campus, but there are several women who have been active longer and tend — sometimes to our dismay — to speak more often. Needless to add, they are not all Young Socialists.

And, by the way, one does not "seize" leadership positions-YSA members in such organizations as the SMC are often elected to positions of responsibility because they are hard working and constant leafletters, speakers, chatters — but again, so are many many other people within the Mobe who hold elected positions of responsibility.

One more note: many University students are probably very confused by the anti-YSA talk filling the Collegian, as none of the critics has mentioned any real political disagreements with YSA other than dislike of YSA and a fear of "infiltration" that can only stem from the 1950's super-commies who, according to our teachers, could walk into any organization and within minutes have everyone voting his or her way.

Oh, yes, my one more note: we in YSA are very open about our political ideas and never keep our organizational affiliation the big secret that seems to make some people want to "expose" us. I invite anyone interested in radical socialist politics, or anyone confused by the ongoing Collegian controversy, to drop by the YSA table, every Thursday in front of the Hatch, to chat. Thanks.

Ounce Of Prevention

To the Editor:

I read with interest your article concerning President Wood's suggestion that "only a long-range policy of national population distribution and the formation of regional government bodies will solve the country's urban crisis." This view appears to be totally myopic and, in the long run, will probably create more problems than it solves.

Dr. Wood calls for "three new directions", the first of which is the development of a "genuine national policy for the distribution of our urban people among cities and regions." Our present congestion in large metropolitan areas may actually be quite a boon to future generations who will have comparatively small areas of despoilation to endure. If there is land in this country that is "underpopulated" it is probably so for a good reason. Either it is being utilized for agriculture or it cannot support many people: the displacement of people to these areas will only aggravate the support system. If Dr. Wood's plan is implemented there will be no refuge from complete and planned environmental devastation. Also, what will happen when these cities and regions grow into mature megolopoli? Evidently then we will develop a genuine national policy to colonize the moon, the planets, etc.

The second new direction is the establishment of "new forms and institutions in government below the national level." This plan may be appropriate if we plan to slow down whatever progress is currently being made in areas of governmental concern. One of the prime problems of big cities is a somnambulistic bureaucracy which is incapable of accomplishing little more than self-preservation. When the trouble is an over-abundance of logjams, I don't see how adding a larger one will solve the problem.

The third direction is a call for "new policies and programs in the acquisition, use and taxation of urban land." Alas, none of these new policies were indicated, either because of the Collegian's lack of space and/or interest, or simply because Dr. Wood hasn't worked out the particulars yet. Perhaps it isn't his job to delve into such mundane or politically sensitive affairs as the taxation of churches and universities, elimination of tax incentives for industry and the initiation of more than just a primitive vestige of mass transportation. My opinion is that the acquisition, use and taxation of urban land is about as efficient as it will be in the foreseeable future, and that the efficiency will decrease as population increases. Land use is only a symptom of the problems of overpopulation, and the problem cannot be solved by only treating the symptom.

My proposal is that we immediately inaugurate a program aimed at reducing the population growth rate to zero. This will halt our menacing growth and gradually reduce our population to manageable size. This can be accomplished by LIMITING THE NUMBER OF CHILDREN TO NO MORE THAN TWO PER FAMILY and this must be coupled with readily disseminated birth control devices and the repeal of all abortion laws. This will give us time to solve our urban problems without having cities explode at the seams and ruin whatever unspoiled land remains. If zero population growth were made a national policy our population could be stabilized by 2000. This "simplistic" proposal would eliminate the need of Dr. Wood's ethereal policies of distribution and with certainly much less adverse impact.

True To Himself

To the Editor:

I am co-chairman of UMass Veterans for Peace. I have been directly insulted by Robert A. Corry when he made the statement, "it's scheduling and activities are steered . . . by the interchangeable flunkies that control these latter two groups." (MOBE & YSA).

First, some personal history: I was a founder and later elected Vice-chairman of G.I.'S for Peace at Fort Bliss (El Paso) Texas. It is one of the best organized and well run peace groups in the country. It publishes the Gigline, a monthly paper which is distributed free to G.I.'S. I was punitively transferred from El Paso, Texas after I helped initiate an investigation of the Fort Bliss Stockade.

My transfer found me in Fairbanks, Alaska where the Army hoped to cool my activities in the -60 F temperatures of Fort Wainwright. I then joined a newly formed peace group, United Servicemen of Alaska. We operated a coffeehouse for active duty GI'S and published a monthly paper, The Green Machine.

I won't detail much of the harassment an active duty GI can receive once he is labeled by the Brass as a "Peacenic". Let me just say that it cost us $200-$300 per month to publish our newspapers. This money came from donations by our members. We didn't have the support of RSO or anything of its kind. It took work under extreme conditions of harassment. I put my promotions, my honorable discharge and my freedom in jeopardy by standing up for what I believe in. What I am insinuating is that people like you, Mr. Corry, never flock to any movement no matter how valid its objectives or means are. It would cost you some time and dedication.

Mr. Corry, I have tried to live what I believe in. Will you state publicly exactly what you have done in the name of peace besides your attempt to insult me? I apologize for the self-grandizing I felt obligated to indulge in. I felt it was necessary to establish that Veterans for Peace has not been bastardized by a flunky.

By the way, I am 25 and I don't consider my age as any important criterion in making such a blatantly stupid generalization as, "the ex-GI here are several years older than the average UMass student and are less apt to be intoxicated by empty slogans and selective indignation."

I think that you are a true elitist and I suspect that no movement could ever adapt itself to your brand of cynicism.

Moreover, Mr. Corry, I really believe that the war in Indo-China is immoral and illegal. I want it stopped. While you waste your time and mine arguing personalities, people are being maimed and killed. While you waited for a "valid peace movement" to form, my friends are dead or alive and killing. You make no sense at all. Does that sound like empty slogans or selective indignation.

Editorial Points

Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew has been invited to the third annual Hollerin' Contest scheduled this summer in the town of Spivey's Corner, N.C. In a letter to Agnew, contest chairman Ermon Godwin Jr., told Spiggy he could speak or holler, whichever he preferred. The Vice-President has yet to respond. As far as we know, CBS has not been invited.

Has anyone seen the expensive granite table up in the Top of the Campus sitting disassembled on a patio? The matter, probably caught up in the bureaucracy of this place, has likely been tabled for further consideration.

Winfield Scott Waters, 85, was arrested and convicted about four years back for assault with intent to rape. Recently, a federal judge ruled that there was no evidence that the gaunt, stoop-shouldered Waters could have attempted a sexual assault. If you can plead insanity in a court of law, why not impotency?

Terrible Irony

To the Editor:

I am the parent of a college freshman and I am writing to a number of college newspapers in reference to the revision of the Selective Service Act.

I am opposed to the provision just approved by the House of Representatives, and now under consideration by the Senate, which permits the President to abolish student deferments...retroactively to April 23, 1970. Those students who are now college freshmen will be the first students since World War II to have their education interrupted. In the present situation this seems unwarranted...for it comes at a time when the draft is being phased out and the administration's goal is zero draft by 1973. The terrible irony is that the students who are now college freshmen will be the only class to be affected.

To abolish any student deferments is punitive, but to abolish them retroactively is reprehensible. No other deferments have ever been abolished retroactively.

I urge you to publish this letter in order to urge all students to write immediately to their Senators to protest this revision. Have their parents write, also. Bombard President Nixon with letters and telegrams. We must eliminate the retroactive aspect of the new Selective Service Act.

Act quickly...the Senate will be voting on this same issue very soon!!

Start Of Something New

To the Editor:

As one of the many veterans on campus interested in the happenings in Southeast Asia, having spent my year there, yet not committed to any group, coalition, movement, or committee, perhaps I can shed a little light on the apparent apathy of my ex-military peers. The following statements are not meant to antagonize any of the already established peace organizations such as the Veterans for Peace, Mobe, or the YSA. My only intention is to express another, perhaps relevant, view.

When Bill Staton initially set up his table in the Student Union I signed his list of interested veterans because I believed it to be an organization made up of previously uncommitted ex-G.I.s desirous of seeing the war in Nam terminated. This was my impression from the conversation I had with Bill Staton. When I learned that one of the top members of this group is also one of the top members of another group I decided to shy away from the Vets for Peace.

Whether or not Bernie Lougee is devoted to the ideals of the Vets for Peace is not an issue here. What is important is that his membership as the co-chairman destroys the integrity of the group. His positions of power in other groups cause a bad light to be shed on the vets and destroys the image we as veterans would like to project not to academia but to the communities throughout the state and nation. If the power structure of the Veterans for Peace is comprised of people who have strong commitments to other groups it will never be believed that this allegiance is not compromising. The leaders of a political group should have only one political allegiance least they leave themselves open to severe criticism.

When the veterans are sure who is leading the group, where the group is heading, and how it plans to get there I am convinced that the many veterans who have abstained from political activity will be no longer apathetic. I intend to join Bob Corry in his quest for enlightenment. Who knows? Maybe Mr. Corry and I are the beginnings of a new organization. Stranger things have happened.

Not So Sure Anymore

To the Editor:

It would be a temptation to attack the editorial by Don Glickstein entitled "Zeyda Leyda Schiksa" on the grounds of anti-feminism, unimaginative choice of subject matter, or just the banal overworking of a theme unworthy of good journalism. However, Mr. Glickstein's article does present an illuminating insight into the attitude of the university as a whole towards those women who would pursue an academic career. A woman's motivation for attending college is almost always assumed to be the same; she is either biding time while husband hunting, or, by means of her higher social status as a college graduate, trying to attract a man from a better economic bracket, "to get married to doctors," as Mr. Glickstein put it. Nothing is said about the personal fulfillment of education for women; it is generally assumed that we have only a secondary interest in intensive, meaningful training. Those holding a related point of view hesitate to "waste" the benefit of their encouragement on women, since they will just eventually get married and thus put their knowledge to no use.

Perhaps Mr. Glickstein and others feel threatened by those women who demand something more from the university experience than four extra years in which to decide whose dependent they want to become. Certainly the economic and social reinforcements for a woman scholar are quite minimal. It is disappointing to find even greater discouragement within an academic community, where the general viewpoint seems to conform to that of Don Glickstein's distribe. As a married student with a child, I have often been asked why I should want to attend a university at all. When I first came here my answer to that was quite apparent, but now I'm not so sure.

Her father is a munitions king and armament manufacturer who encourages the development of capitalism with indifference to spiritual values. Result: A lively debate about money, power, ideals and public and private values.

According to director Doris Abramson: "Shaw may not really have had any more answers than we do, but he sure shares a lot of our questions."

The setting is by Jeff Fiala and the costumes by Liz Weiss. Tickets are available at the Bartlett Box Office, Bartlett Hall. ($)

Films

ADALEN 31 (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith College, 7:15 and 9:30) Bo Wildenberg's first film since "Elvira Madigan". This is a strangely cold and beautiful study of an important labor dispute in Sweden during the early thirties.

THE BANK DICK (Saturday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30 and 10) W.C. Fields as Egbert Souse, a bumbling citizen who captures a bank bandit and is rewarded with a position of special officer in the bank. One of the best of Field's wonderful film characterizations.

BROKEN ARROW (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9) The UMass film study series will present "Broken Arrow".

This 1950 film starring Jimmy Stewart, Jeff Chandler, and Debra Paget, and directed by Delmer Daves is one of the first attempts to deal with the American Indian in any kind of an objective light.

The story centers around the efforts of frontiersman Tom Jeffords (Stewart) to help create peace between the Indians in Arizona, around 1870, and the hostile and bigoted whites of the area. Stewart tries to find the powerful Cochise (Chandler) in order to secure the peace. In between there is plenty of action and adventure and even a love affair between Jeffords and a young indian maiden named Sonseeahray (Debra Paget). The film also stars Jay (Tonto) Silverheels.

"Broken Arrow" later became a popular TV series starring John Lupton and Michael Ansara in the lead roles.

FIVE EASY PIECES (Academy of Music, Northampton) A man, is caught between two cultures and ultimately simply leaves, picking neither. Watching him make this decision is the subject of this funny, engaging film featuring a most sensitive performance by Jack Nicholson. The film won a triple accolade from the New York Film Critics for being the best film of the year, the best director, and the best script.

FIVE MILLION MILES TO EARTH (Monday, Mahar Aud., 8) A Science-fiction film from the Fifties. A discussion precedes the film at 7.

FOR A FEW DOLLARS MORE (Sunday, Student Union, 7 and 9) Another Sergio Leone-German-Italian-Spanish western. Clint Eastwood and Lee Van Cleff are featured as laconic, moneyminded, gunman in a film that's long on color, action, and atmosphere.

THE GREAT WHITE HOPE (Campus Cinema) The Pulitzer Prize Winning play was expanded to film, and, in doing so, made its flaws more apparent. The film suffers from a static quality that is only saved by the stunning acting of James Earle Jones and Jane Alexander. The film follows the career of black boxer Jack Jefferson and the problems beset him for being the heavyweight champion in the earlier part of the century. Adapted from the career of boxing great Jack Johnson.

THE IMMORTAL STORY (Talkie, Northampton) Orson Welles and Jeanne Moreau star in this film about old age directed by Welles.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT (Saturday, Amherst College, Merrill Science Center, 8 and 10) One of the most delightful film comedies of the Thirties. Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert star as a fugitive heiress and a rebellious newspaperman, respectively, who meet on a bus in Miami. The film won Five Academy Awards in 1934 for the principal actors its director Frank Capra, and the film itself has longed remained one of the best-known and remembered films of all time.

LITTLE BIG MAN (Campus Cinemas, Hadley, Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield) A most stunning film, the best of last year. Director Arthur Penn has managed to make a successful, free-wheeling, lyrical adaptation of a most-difficult novel. Dustin Hoffman gives a fetching performance as a man caught between two cultures, and Faye Dunaway and Martin Balsam are fine in supporting roles. The true star of the film is Chief Dan George whose performance is perhaps the finest in American films of recent years.

LOVE STORY (Campus Cinemas Hadley, Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield) Erich Segal's bonanza. An interesting phenomena from a social point of view, not that interesting otherwise.

PSYCHO (Thursday, SU, 7 and 9:30) The essential film black comedy (and mightly frightening at that). The story's about a psychopathetic murderer and is directed with the wonderful dry humor of Alfred Hitchcock. Janet Leigh is featured, along with Anthony Perkins and Vera Miles. It's essential Hitchcock, most entertaining with some wild plot turns. You will probably never take a shower in a motel room after seeing this film.

ROMEO AND JULIET (Tuesday, Mahar, 7 and 9) Photographed in color as a stage presentation, this is the England's Royal Ballet's production of the Prokofiev ballet. The film features the dynamic and stunning performances of Rudolf Nureyev and Dame Margot Fonteyn.

VIRIDIANA (Talkie, Northampton) Luis Bunel's treatise on religion. It's about a young novice who gives up her calling to make amends for a wrong she thinks she has committed. Through her religious zeal, she manages to injure most of those she comes in contact with.

WATERLOO (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield) Rod Steiger's biggest part, that of Napoleon is a huge spectacle film. Sergei Bondarchuk, who directed the Russian epic WAR AND PEACE some years back, perfects his art of staging battle scenes here. The huge cast features Christopher Plummer and Orson Welles as Louis XVIII.

WHO'S AFRAID OF VIRGINIA WOOLF? (Friday, SU, 7 and 9) Mike Nichol's film version of Edward Albee's brilliantly acid play about dreams and reality. The story is about two unhappy couples on an all-night binge and slyly exposes the facades of their lives. Elizabeth Taylor gives probably the best performance of her career as Martha and Richard Burton is excellent as George, her weak husband. George Segal and Sandy Dennis both are fine as the younger couple, and Nichol's manages quite adequately the difficult task of capturing on film this searing theater experience.

WUTHERING HEIGHTS (Amherst Cinema, Amherst) American-International now is cashing in on the classic novel set with this adaptation of Emily Bronte novel. It is surprizingly good, that is if you can take most of it.

Albums

A Female Elton John

TAPESTRY, Carole King (Ode 70)
People have been speculating on whom will be the female counterpart (if there would be one) of James Taylor and Elton John. There's really no more looking, Carole King has arrived.

Carole King has been a songwriter for a long, long, time. Her songs have been recorded by such varied artists as the Shirells, the Drifters, the Beatles, the Byrds, Barbra Streisand, and Aretha Franklin. She has been someone behind the scenes for most of the last decade and this album has been a long time coming.

The music is mostly folk-blues, the lyrics contain the simplicity which makes Joni Mitchell and James Taylor songs such personal experiences.

Her best songs include the reflective "Home Again" and the beautiful title tune, which she sings with soft grace and simplicity.

On some of the blues numbers, such as "Natural Woman", her voice is grainy, hard, and a bit funky. Her version of "Will You Still Love Me Tomorrow" puts the Phil Spector arranged Shirelles' version to shame.

The album is extremely well-produced. Besides vocals Carole King plays an excellent piano, and there is consistantly fine back-up work by James Taylor, Danny Kootch, Joel O'Brien, and Curtis Amy.

In concert recently at the Boston Garden, where she appeared with James Taylor, Carole King before singing "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman" paused and asked the audience to try and forget that

BUDDY MILES

Aretha had ever done it. Listening to the cut on this album, she need not even had asked.

A MESSAGE TO THE PEOPLE, Buddy Miles (Mercury)
That the Buddy Miles Band is one of the tightest and best sounding ensembles of its kind in the country is no secret. This album can only enhance Miles and his band's reputation.

ROCK ON, Humble Pie (A&M)
It's hard to take a group like Humble Pie seriously, they parody so many other groups that it seems their conscious intent. Unfortunately, though, it isn't, and what's left are echoes of such "biggies" as Alvin Lee and Ten Years After Led Zeppelin Stephen Stills, Santana, and even mild, very mild Frank Zappa. At those moments when their rather humble talents break through, you hope they would return to imitating Alvin Lee guitar work — at least that's bearable.

RITA COOLIDGE, (A&M)
A&M Records is attempting a monopoly on the new fine female vocalists coming along. They have both Merry Clayton and Carole King on their sister label Ode-70 and now have a quite dynamic Rita Coolidge for their own.

Rita Coolidge sings hard, driving blues. Her version of "Born Under A Bad Sign" makes the Cream sound anemic in comparison. The best cut on the album is her pulsating handling of the old Marvin Gaye song, "Ain't That Peculiar".

Also Stephen Still, Leon Russell, Booker T. Jones, and Spencer Oldham all lend their talents in making this such a fine debut album.

Since the death of Janis Joplin, there is probably no finer white female singer of blues than Rita Coolidge.

RITA COOLIDGE

B.N. SECOND CONTRIBUTION, Shawn Phillips (A&M)
The era, ho-hum, of the solo artist is here. Shawn has a nice, stridently clear voice, but it was all I could do to listen to this record; I still have no idea where the divisions are between the first four songs. The lyrics, which are helpfully printed on the liner, are decent, but I had to read them. It's too bad, because the guy could be good, but with the wealth of ignored solo talent around you, you can easily find something else to listen to.

JUST A COLLECTION OF ANTIQUES AND CURIOS, The Strawbs (A&M)
Here's another attempt to bridge the rock-classical gap. Strawbs is less pretentious than many such groups; though their attempts at eclecticism are rather superficial, they sometimes put together a haunting sound reminiscent of medieval folk music. There is really nothing outstandingly new in Strawbs' music, but the mix is quite refreshing.

BRIDGE OVER TROUBLED WATER, Paul Desmond (A&M)
These are ten interpretations of ten Simon and Garfunkel songs, with Desmond on sax and a collection of other people including Herbie Hancock and guitarist Sam Brown. This is a very nice fireside record, but the result adds nothing to the originals: El Condor Pasa is gorgeous, but the songs that most needed sprucing up aren't really helped. S&G fanatics should like it; it's much better than most "Such-and-Such plays the Beatles" type of affairs.

An Expression Of Black Spirit

TAKE TWO

Laughing....Now

By Richard Hardie

"...words are written out and they turn into observances, rituals; they fill lives, these signs and symbols written out by the hand of a stranger who could be a maniac...students sit and watch in silence, and learn their lesson."

I remembered that part of a New Yorker short story as I sat watching Ivanhoe Donaldson drawing the three-ring sign for Ballantine, on the blackboard in his political science lecture, enclosing the X ideology and the K ideology and word of the arch-changed Carmichael within that wierd geometry. I burst out laughing. Then I looked about to apologize for disturbing the class: NO ONE HEARD ME: laughter and death mix like alcohol and gasoline, and no one can hear laughter (so we think) with six feet of dirt packed over them; and so the students sat in silence copying circles around Malcolm and King. And my distracted laughter was not contageous, hardly audible.

In the weeks between I saved all the paychecks, earned (unearned) as a T.A. for a trip over the recess, but had to fly back unexpectedly because my father-in-law died. "They finally got to put facepowder on you, tough ole man," I whispered to him when I looked at him for the final time, but it wasn't until after we'd gathered that evening and my third drink that the humor of that broke me down. I never cry at funerals and I never laughed before, but, dammit, if Sidney saw himself lying there with his face painted he'd still be laughing, and I told everyone that within earshot.

We drank more than we should have, after that, and perhaps laughed more than we should have. It was another fucking world—we were all lying there with Sidney with rouge on our faces and all our worries were over, and if someone didn't call a truce on bringing-up-the-cares-of-yesterday we'd all have drowned in our laughing-tears, dead sho'nuf.

You sleep it off and the next day you're alive. What's so funny? Every third guy in Vietnam holding on to his life with a rifle is Black. The number of brothers in colleges and Black brothers behind bars is one on one. Prisoners write classics-Sonja, George, Eldridge and Eldridge--and students sit and watch in silence, and learn their lesson (all of us). The mood is the color.

But not everyone always gets the word: the first sister I run into on the campus is Jackie Berryman and she is laughing her lovely head backand bro. Hmmm, I say, which she takes to mean What's funny? "You remember that day you broke out laughing in Ivanhoe's lecture?--well I just remembered it." That was long ago, I reply. "Well, I'm laughing now," she said, doing it again.

I headed along. How come she didn't ask me why I laughed that day. She was just happy to laugh at me--correction: the me that is in each of us--herself. Put it together.

I settled into a chair at the Top of the Campus.

"Hi, there."

"Dry Martini, Beefeater, straight up."

"With Vodka instead of Vermuth," the waitress adds.

"Wait a minute. Do you have any gasoline?"

"Down in my car," she says.

Well go down and mix a little in." Hell, bloods, it may be the eve of the revolution. And maybe the next day we get our faces made up. Who'll be around to do it? The kids, they'll survive--and Jackie, doing it again.

Cultural And Social Center Established

This is to announce a new service of the Five-College Afro-American Studies Executive Committee -- that is THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A CULTURAL AND SOCIAL COORDINATIONS CENTER.

It has been our experience during the first semester to note that on certain days as many as three separate events of interest to Black people were being held. Some weeks passed with no activity at all. In an effort to better coordinate these activities so that a maximum of Black people can take advantage of these fine offerings and so that there can be a greater balance of these activities, the above mentioned service is now available.

ANYONE -- Individual or Group -- Black or White -- planning some event of interest to the Black Community (speakers, conferences, art shows, poets, talent shows, dances, etc.) are asked to please call the Five-College Black Studies Office located at Amherst College (542-2300) weekdays from 9-5 to clear with Miss Thompson, secretary, the planned events and dates with our Five-College Master Calendar.

An added feature of this service will be that on Friday of each week, the Five-College Black Studies secretary will release to the media (Black radio and school newspapers) a schedule of the events for the coming week in the Black community.

We ask for your cooperation:

Five College
Afro-American Executive Committee

Write For Take Two

The weekly feature Take Two is in need of creative Black people who want to write, take pictures, do page layout, or just about anything else. Take Two is your page. Don't let it die. If you want to do something to make the page better, leave your contributions at the MDC office and say it's for Take Two. Or contact Richard Hardie or John Taylor in the English Department. They'll be glad to put you to work.

Drama And Poetry Evening Next Week

"An evening of drama and poetry" is the phrase used to describe the production "The Best of Both Worlds," starring Maureen Hurley and Darryl Croxton. Miss Hurley, who is white, and Mr. Croxton, who is black, recite excerpts from poems and drama from Shakespeare to Langston Hughes, demonstrating that "black and white are beautiful."

Mr. Croxton and Miss Hurley act as they read, exhibiting enormously wide acting ranges. Miss Hurley has been seen on Broadway in "The Love of Four Colonels," starring opposite Rex Harrison. Off-Broadway she has played Lady MacBeth at the Great Lakes Shakespeare Festival in 1969, has appeared on T.V. in such shows as Studio One, Kraft, N.B.C. Playhouse, and Hallmark, and has made a film for Paramount, "Too Late My Love."

Mr. Croxton has appeared off Broadway in "Murder in the Cathedral" and "X Has No Value." He has had extensive experience in resident repertory theatre, appearing most recently with the Washington Shakespeare Festival. In Baltimore he played Osric in "Hamlet" and the fool in "King Lear."

In "The Best of Both Worlds" they perform and recite excerpts from such playwrights and poets as Shakespeare, Shaw, Sterling Brown, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Oscar Wilde, Frederick Perls, Lance Jeffers, Langston Hughes, and many others. "The Best of Both Worlds" will be performed on April 13 and 14 in the Student Union Ballroom. Admission price is 75¢, and tickets will be sold at the door only. This program is sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council.

Pope Assails Defectors

ROME (AP)-Pope Paul VI assailed the defection of Roman Catholic priests "for vile earthly motives" on this Holy Thursday, and came close to comparing them to Judas who betrayed Christ.

The Pope denounced the defectors in a Holy Thursday ritual commemorating Christ's Last Supper. The Pope washed and kissed the feet of 12 poor, old Italian men from a nursing home. This was a departure from his previous Holy Thursday practice of bathing the feet of seminarians.

"One must distinguish ease from ease, and show understanding, pity, forgiveness, patience perhaps in waiting for the return, and always love," he said of the defecting priests.

"But how can one fail on this occasion to weep from the deliverate abandonment by some and the moral mediocrity which thinks it natural and logical to break a long premeditated promise solemnly taken?"

The pontiff called the defectors "these runaway brothers" and said "they have abandoned and scandalized" their communities.

"Among the personalities of the Last Supper we cannot forget Judas," he continued. "The presence of the traitor weighs on the heart of the Master. Who cannot but feel a shiver in his heart at the grave and terrible comment of Jesus: 'It were better for that man if he had not been born.'

"I cannot think of this tragic Easter drama without associating it in my spirit as bishop and pastor to the abandonment, to the flight of so many brothers from the priesthood."

The 73-year-old pontiff traveled to the basilica of St. John Lateran for the foot washing ceremony. Dozens of cardinals and diplomats attended.

LEVIATHAN To Play Benefit For Vets

LEVIATHAN, presently on tour in the area, has agreed to play a benefit dance for the UMass Vetereans for Peace. The dance will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8 p.m. tonight. A small admission charge of fifty cents is requested.

The purpose of the benefit dance, as announced by co-chairmen George Schureur and Bernie Lougee, is two fold. First to help defray basic organizational expences of the Veterans For Peace and secondly to bring the message of the group to many more veterans.

This will be accomplished by having printed material available at the dance. Also a petition stating the groups opposition to the War in Indochina will be available for signing. This will be presented to a Massachusetts politian in Washington on April 24th.

Co-chairmen Lougee and Schureur stressed that although the dance is sponsored by veterans, all students and non-students are invited for an evening of relaxation and entertainment.

Good Chance For Vote By 18's By 1972

WASHINGTON (AP)-Wednesday's ratification of a constitutional amendment lowering the voting age to 18 by Kansas and Michigan greatly enhances chances it will be law.

"The momentum is obviously gathering," said Bruce Smith, an aide to John Gardner.

Overwhelming approval of the 18-year-old vote measure came after a statewide referendum passed by a 2-1 margin.

"Kansas, the great backbone of the nation, has set an example of an awakened consciousness," Smith said.

Other states which have ratified are Minnesota, Delaware, Washington, Connecticut, Tennessee, Massachusetts, Hawaii, Montana, Arkansas, Iowa, Idaho, Indiana, and Nebraska.

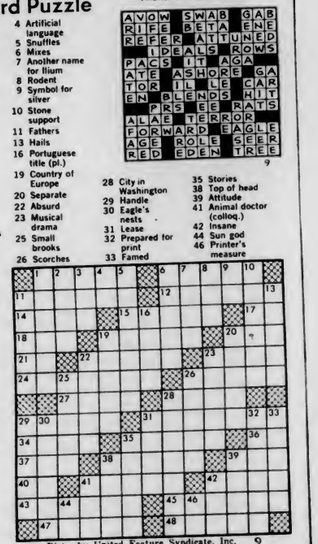
By the end of April, Common cause expects Maryland, California, New Jersey, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania to have acted on the proposed amendment.

So far, no state has turned it down.

Some states, however, have no legislative sessions after this spring for two more years.

Gardner mobilized Common Cause to back the 18-year-old vote measure shortly before Congress finished acting on it.

Unless the amendment is in force in 1972, he predicted, there will be massive voter confusion.



The Supreme Court last December upheld Congress authority to lower the voting age in federal elections. But it said states still have authority over voting age rules for state and local contests.

Unless three-fourths of the states ratify the amendment before the 1972 election, different lists of eligible voters will have to be prepared for state, local and federal elections.

Common Cause is preparing an intensive lobbying effort in states considered crucial in the weeks ahead: New Jersey, Nevada, Utah, Vermont, Missouri, Florida, Colorado and New Hampshire.

"Building Towards The Opener"

Sox Lose In Ninth Siebert Impressive

CLEVELAND (AP)-Rookie Gomer Hodge's two-out, two-run single in the ninth inning lifted the Cleveland Indians to a 3-2 home opening victory over the Boston Red Sox yesterday.

Hodge, who had doubled as a pinch hitter and scored in the eighth inning, singled off Ken Tatum to score Ray Fosse and Doug Camilli.

Boston had built a 2-0 lead on a pair of inning-opening homers, by Luis Aparicio in the third and by pitcher Sonny Siebert in the fifth.

Siebert, who had pitched a two-hitter over seven innings, then was tagged by Hodge's double, a pinch single by Ted Uhlaender and John Lowenstein's single in the eighth before Sparky Lyle came on to end the rally.

Then in the ninth Tatum took over and was greeted by Vada Pinson's single. Fosse was hit by a pitch and Ken Harrelson sacrificed. Camilli pinch hit and hit a grounder to George Scott who threw Pinson out at the plate, the other runners going to third and second. Hodge then followed with the game-winning hit.

Siebert was tremendous for the first seven innings, allowing only two hits-both singles by Larry Brown. The veteran right-hander struck out five and walked only one.

When the Indians finally for to their ex-teammate in the eighth, Lyle came in with runners on first and second and nobody out and bailed him out. The left-handed relief act got Brown to hit into a double play by Boston's new combination, Doug Griffin to Luis Aparicio to George Scott, then retired Craig Nettles on a fly ball to end the inning.

With the right-handed hitting heart of the Cleveland batting order coming up in the ninth, manager Eddie Kasko lifted Lyle in favor of right-hander Tatum, but the move turned out badly as the Indians rallied for the decisive runs.

Sam McDowell was the Cleveland starter, and Boston's two home runs were the only hits allowed by the fireballing left-hander in the seven innings he worked. Aparicio's homer went over the left field wall despite a leaping bid by Roy Foster, who crashed over the fence in his attempt to catch it. Siebert's went some 410 feet to dead center.

McDowell struck out nine batters, bur the Indians' 20-game winner of a year ago was wild, walking five men, hitting another, and going to long counts on many other batters.

Vince Colbert hurled the last two innings tor Cleveland and was credited with the victory, while Tatum took the loss.

Coody Leads Masters

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP)—Charles Coody, a rangy Texan who blew a chance to win this event two years ago, ripped six strokes off par and stormed into the first-round lead in the 35th Masters Championship with a stunning 66 yesterday.

The 33-year-old Coody, veteran of nine years on the pro tour, held an imposing three-stroke lead over a group of five tied at 69.

They are veteran Don January, Bob Lunn, former PGA champion Ray Floyd, Bob Murphy and Hale Irwin, a 25-year-old tour regular who is seeking his first professional victory.

Jack Nicklaus, the reigning PGA champion and the man favored to win this tournament, had a mediocre 70. He missed two short birdie putts on the final two holes.

"I'll never learn," he said, shaking his head in disgust. "I was moving my head. "I'll just never learn to keep still.

"It wasn't a good round. It wasn't bad, but those two missed putts kept it from being good.

"I'm four strokes back, but there's three rounds to go."

He was only one of the really glamour names of the game able to break par during the warm, sunny day that lured a massive gallery of some 20,000 to the 6,980-yard, par 72 Augusta National Golf Club course.

As usual, a large portion of them followed Arnold Palmer, who has won this title a record four times. But Palmer took a 73, including a double bogey six on the 10th hole where he missed the green and three-putted from five feet, missing from eight inches on his second putt.

"I played atrociously," Palmer said. "It's the worst round I've had all year. I can't think of anything I did well. I drove poorly and I hit a lot of bad irons. I made a couple of putts, but I missed a couple of short ones, too."

Defending champion Billy Casper had a 72 "and am very pleased," he said. "I feel fortunate to have scored that well today."

Tony Jacklin of England, the U.S. Open title-holder, matched Palmer's 73.

Coody, a Texas Christian graduate and former Air Force officer, had a big chance for the 1969 Masters title.

He held the lead alone when he walked off the 15th green on the final round.

"I remember thinking I could par in and win it," he recalled. But he bogeyed all three of the closing holes and finished fifth.

The 6-foot-2, 190-pounder mastered the par fives Thursday, taking birdies on all four of them, and just missing an eagle three on the second.

"It really doesn't mean that much, what with 54 holes to go," he said. "It's just got me in very good shape. I'm very happy about it, of course, but there's still a long way to go.

Coody has won two tour events, the 1954 Dallas Open and the 1969 Cleveland Open.

He's been a consistent money winner for the last several years, but hit a slump last season when his clubs were lost on an airline.

"I'd had that driver for a long time," he said. "We'd been through a lot together. I guess I had to go through 15 to 20 new ones before I found one I could work with."

Bucks, Lakers On TV Tonight

MILWAUKEE (AP)-The powerful Milwaukee Bucks will seek to move into the National Basketball Association playoff final by beating another California team-the Los Angeles Lakers-in the best -o-seven series starting Friday night.

The Bucks qualified for the Western Conference playoff final by crushing San Francisco four games to one.

Friday's contest will be shown nationally on ABC-TV, starting at 9 p.m. EST.

Any hopes the Lakers harbor of beating the favored Bucks rest on the 7-foot-1 frame of Wilt Chamberlain, who has the unenviable task of stopping, or at least negating, the high-scoring Lew Alcinder.

In five games during the regular season, Chamberlain out-played his young opponent only once. Surprisingly, that wasn't the one game that Los Angeles won.

Chamberlain won the league rebounding title for the ninth time, averaging 18.2 per game.

Alcinder, on the other hand, took scoring honors with 31.7 points a game and was named the NBA's most valuable player.

The Lakers pulled a surprise by getting past Chicago. Los Angeles lost guard Jerry West, the 1969-70 scoring champion, last month. But Gail Goodrich took over the scoring duties for the Lakers, averaging 30 points a game against the Bulls, and rookie Jim McMillian moved into the starting lineup.

Bullet's Johnson In Lineup

NEW YORK (AP)-At least one member of the New York Knicks would like to see All-Star forward Gus Johnson back in uniform for the Baltimore Bullets in their second playoff game Friday afternoon.

"I wish he was healthy. I like to see everybody at full strength in the playoffs. They mean so much," said Dave DeBusschere of the Knicks, who normally guards Johnson when the two National Basketball Association clubs conduct their stirring duels.

And there is another, more selfish, reason.

Johnson, whose ailing knees have kept him out of numerous games toward the end of the season, was expected to be ready for Friday's game, with the help of several pain-killing shots in his knees.

"He's planning on playing Friday," said team physician Dr. Kenneth Spence, although he wouldn't speculate on the chances.

Johnson started Tuesday's game until the Knicks walked onto the court and saw Johnson sitting on the bench in street clothes, probably can stop worrying about Carter and resume worrying about Johnson.

"It was no easier for me with him out of there," DeBusschere added. "It was tough for me to keep up with Carter."

Fred Carter, a guard playing forward in the absence of Johnson, almost helped the Bullets pull out of the game Tuesday night, coming off the bench for 19 points before DeBusschere scored six points down the stretch to help New York to a 112-111 victory.

The Knicks finally switched Bill Bradley and then Cazzie Russell onto Carter and slowed him down.

However, DeBusschere, who didn't know Johnson would not

Hurlers And Youth Spark Redman Nine

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Coming off a somewhat dissapointing 15-11 season by previous Redman standards, the UMass baseball team and particularly its head coach Dick Bergquist come into this season with the enthusiasm and optimism that can only be generated by a team with its sight set on New England supremacy and a trip to the college world series in Omaha.

In the past UMass baseball teams have been known as experienced and power laden squads with the emphasis on the veteran known-how of the big guns to come through with the big play and the big inning to win ball games.

This year will be quite the opposite with the Redmen relying on perhaps the strongest and deepest pitching staff in the east and the enthusiasm and hustle of an abundance of young players on the squad.

"If enthusiasm, dedication, and hustle are as important as we think, then we should be able to give anyone on our schedule a battle," said a confident Bergquist prior to the spring trip.

A new dimension has been added to the Yankee Conference this season with the addition of five more games to each school's schedule to meet league requirements set up by the NCAA.

Due to this, pitching, which is the Redman strong point, will play an important part for each team. Add to this the tight schedule of playing games every other day and sometimes day after day and the problem of pitching becomes even greater.

For this reason the spring trip, that the Redmen ended on a successful 3-3 note was devoted to the establishment of a strong mound staff which coach Bergquist is proud to say "ended in complete success."

Leading this year's hurlers will be Jack Bernardo, a senior and one of the tri-captains, juniors Tom King and Sophomore Tom White. All three pitched strong ball down south, especially King who came off an arm injury to pitch runless ball for a dozen innings.

Backing these three up and fighting for the fourth starting slot are freshmen Chip Baye and John Olsen of frosh basketball fame. Both are big, hard-throwing right-handers and will undoubtably play a big part in the seasonal plans of Bergquist.

Add to this group Tom Austin and Lou Colabella, who pitched the Redmen into the world series two years ago and the pitching that Bergquist is so proud of speaks for itself.

This mound squad is bigger than the basketball team was, going something like 6'9, 6'6, and 6'5 up front with a couple of 6'3ers in the backcourt. It's an impossing sight when the opposition sees a giant bee-bee thrower on the mound.

Hitting was the weakest part of the UMass performance down south and has continued to be in a couple of scrimmages up north. Without the likes of a Bob Hansen, a Joe DiSarcina or a Ray Ellerbrook, the Redmen will have to count on a run at a time this year instead of waiting for the big outburst of years past.

This will make for an exciting brand of ball. A type like that of the Mets or the Dodgers in the Koufax era. The Redmen will make use of the hit and run, the bunt, the steal and other finesse plays to keep their offense on the go.

The big stick for the Redmen is defending New England batting champ Brian Martin who was also all-District One last season. After a spring trip in which he hit about his weight it is expected that he will return to his all-star form.

Martin, who is also a tri-captain will be in right field with his rifle arm and will be joined in the outfield by freshman Charley Manley. Earle Manley a sophomore, Mike Sawyer, a junior and Jim Kiley, a freshman who Bergquist is hoping will supply a big bat in the batting order.

In the infield the Redmen will have 6'5 soph Dan Esposito at first, Jack Conroy, a senior tri-captain at second, freshman Eddie McMahon, who has been a pleasant surprise, at shortstop and Mark Palau, also a sophomore at third.

Backing these men up are Dan Kelley, Ken Brewer, Steve Newell, Jim Saracino and an injured Hose Kelley.

Catching has been a pleasant surprise for the Redmen. Freshman Tom McDermott and Junior Kerry Daly give the Redmen what Bergquist calls "good big-time college catching," which should be important with the strong pitching staff.

It's now obvious that youth plays a big role as does the mound core. It will be these two aspects that will lead the Redmen through an awfully tough schedule.

Brian Martin

The Yankee Conference is stronger than ever, the New England independants are always ready to give the Redmen a tough battle and with the addition of Harvard to go along with nationally ranked Dartmouth the Redmen are in for one heck of a northern campaign.

All this adds up to an interesting and exciting season for UMass baseball fans and possibly another trip to Omaha for the Redman nine

Bergquist Has Omen Brewing

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

According to his lucky stars, this should be a very fine year for Dick Bergquist and his Redman nine. I say this with no insight on astrology, but just common good old diamond intuition.

By taking one glance at his four years of head coaching one might easily spot such an omen so favorable. For in 1967 and 1969 his squad rolled to Conference championships. Ideally, 1971 naturally being an odd year, fits into the pattern nicely.

Besides copping the YanCon Crown in 69', Bergquist piloted UMass to a District One Title and beat Southern Illinois in the College World Series. For a job well done his efforts were rewarded as District One Coach of the Year (1969).

After an illustrious athletic career in his high school days at Orange, Massachusetts, he matriculated two years at Bates College. In so doing he chalked up letters in both baseball and football.

A two-year US Army tour preceeded two more years of college education at UMass. Majoring in Phys Ed, the aspiring coach graduated with cum laude. Bergquist earned himself two letters apiece while a member of the university football and baseball teams. He played for the UMass squad which landed the baseball title in YanCon action in 1957.

In 1958 he received his masters degree from the University of Maryland, and the same year he worked as a teacher-coach at Hudson Falls (NY). A year later he returned to his alma mater and undertook the freshman baseball assignment which he maintained for seven years, at which time he was promoted to the head coaching post.

Entering his 12th year on the Massachusetts staff, Bergquist has a varsity career record of 66-42-1. His teams are 27-13 in conference play.

Bergquist holds team unity and pleasant atmosphere in high regard when it comes to building winners.

"I think to establish a close relationship with the players, you have to gain their respect. We're here with the players and it's up to us to work as close to them as we can. I think as coaches we should put everything into our program to give them a first class program.

"Beyond this program, there's a little self pride. I would like the members of the team to represent UMass, and go out and be known as one of the best baseball clubs in the east. In order to attain this we must create a tightly knit unit, there must be harmony oft the field as well as cohesiveness in our play."

He held the lead alone when he walked off the 15th green on the final round.

"I remember thinking I could par in and win it," he recalled. But he bogeyed all three of the closing holes and finished fifth.

The 6-foot-2, 190-pounder mastered the par fives Thursday, taking birdies on all four of them, and just missing an eagle three on the second.

"It really doesn't mean that much, what with 54 holes to go," he said. "It's just got me in very good shape. I'm very happy about it, of course, but there's still a long way to go.

Coody has won two tour events, the 1954 Dallas Open and the 1969 Cleveland Open.

He's been a consistent money winner for the last several years, but hit a slump last season when his clubs were lost on an airline.

"I'd had that driver for a long time," he said. "We'd been through a lot together. I guess I had to go through 15 to 20 new ones before I found one I could work with."

Bucks, Lakers On TV Tonight

MILWAUKEE (AP)-The powerful Milwaukee Bucks will seek to move into the National Basketball Association playoff final by beating another California team-the Los Angeles Lakers-in the best-o-seven series starting Friday night.

The Bucks qualified for the Western Conference playoff final by crushing San Francisco four games to one.

Friday's contest will be shown nationally on ABC-TV, starting at 9 p.m. EST.

Any hopes the Lakers harbor of beating the favored Bucks rest on the 7-foot-1 frame of Wilt Chamberlain, who has the unenviable task of stopping, or at least negating, the high-scoring Lew Alcinder.

In five games during the regular season, Chamberlain out-played his young opponent only once. Surprisingly, that wasn't the one game that Los Angeles won.

Chamberlain won the league rebounding title for the ninth time, averaging 18.2 per game.

Alcinder, on the other hand, took scoring honors with 31.7 points a game and was named the NBA's most valuable player.

The Lakers pulled a surprise by getting past Chicago. Los Angeles lost guard Jerry West, the 1969-70 scoring champion, last month. But Gail Goodrich took over the scoring duties for the Lakers, averaging 30 points a game against the Bulls, and rookie Jim McMillian moved into the starting lineup.

Bullet's Johnson In Lineup

NEW YORK (AP)-At least one member of the New York Knicks would like to see All-Star forward Gus Johnson back in uniform for the Baltimore Bullets in their second playoff game Friday afternoon.

"I wish he was healthy. I like to see everybody at full strength in the playoffs. They mean so much," said Dave DeBusschere of the Knicks, who normally guards Johnson when the two National Basketball Association clubs conduct their stirring duels.

And there is another, more selfish, reason.

"It was no easier for me with him out of there," DeBusschere added. "It was tough for me to keep up with Carter."

Fred Carter, a guard playing forward in the absence of Johnson, almost helped the Bullets pull out of the game Tuesday night, coming off the bench for 19 points before DeBusschere scored six points down the stretch to help New York to a 112-111 victory.

The Knicks finally switched Bill Bradley and then Cazzie Russell onto Carter and slowed him down.

However, DeBusschere, who didn't know Johnson would not start Tuesday's game until the Knicks walked onto the court and saw Johnson sitting on the bench in street clothes, probably can stop worrying about Carter and resume worrying about Johnson.

Johnson, whose ailing knees have kept him out of numerous games toward the end of the season, was expected to be ready for Friday's game, with the help of several pain-killing shots in his knees.

"He's planning on playing Friday," said team physician Dr. Kenneth Spence, although he wouldn't speculate on the chances.

Hurlers And Youth Spark Redman Nine

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Coming off a somewhat dissapointing 15-11 season by previous Redman standards, the UMass baseball team and particularly its head coach Dick Bergquist come into this season with the enthusiasm and optimism that can only be generated by a team with its sight set on New England supremacy and a trip to the college world series in Omaha.

In the past UMass baseball teams have been known as experienced and power laden squads with the emphasis on the veteran know-how of the big guns to come through with the big play and the big inning to win ball games.

This year will be quite the opposite with the Redmen relying on perhaps the strongest and deepest pitching staff in the east and the enthusiasm and hustle of an abundance of young players on the squad.

"It enthusiasm, dedication, and hustle are as important as we think, then we should be able to give anyone on our schedule a battle," said a confident Bergquist prior to the spring trip.

A new dimension has been added to the Yankee Conference this season with the addition of five more games to each school's schedule to meet league requirements set up by the NCAA.

Due to this, pitching, which is the Redman strong point, will play an important part for each team. Add to this the tight schedule of playing games every other day and sometimes day after day and the problem of pitching becomes even greater.

For this reason the spring trip, that the Redmen ended on a successful 3-3 note was devoted to the establishment of a strong mound staff which coach Bergquist is proud to say "ended in complete success."

Leading this year's hurlers will be Jack Bernardo, a senior and one of the tri-captains, juniors Tom King and Sophomore Tom White. All three pitched strong ball down south, especially King who came off an arm injury to pitch runless ball for a dozen innings.

Backing these three up and fighting for the fourth starting slot are freshmen Chip Baye and John Olsen of frosh basketball fame. Both are big, hard-throwing right-handers and will undoubtably play a big part in the seasonal plans of Bergquist.

Add to this group Tom Austin and Lou Colabella, who pitched the Redmen into the world series two years ago and the pitching that Bergquist is so proud of speaks for itself.

This mound squad is bigger than the basketball team was, going something like 6'9, 6'6, and 6'5 up front with a couple of 6'3ers in the backcourt. It's an impossing sight when the opposition sees a giant bee-bee thrower on the mound.

Hitting was the weakest part of the UMass performance down south and has continued to be in a couple of scrimmages up north. Without the likes of a Bob Hansen, a Joe DiSarcina or a Ray Ellerbrook, the Redmen will have to count on a run at a time this year instead of waiting for the big outburst of years past.

This will make for an exciting brand of ball. A type like that of the Mets or the Dodgers in the Koufax era. The Redmen will make use of the hit and run, the bunt, the steal and other finesse plays to keep their offense on the go.

The big stick for the Redmen is defending New England batting champ Brian Martin who was also all-District One last season. After a spring trip in which he hit about his weight it is expected that he will return to his all-star form.

Martin, who is also a tri-captain will be in right field with his rifle arm and will be joined in the outfield by freshman Charley Manley. Earle Manley a sophomore, Mike Sawyer, a junior and Jim Kiley, a freshman who Bergquist is hoping will supply a big bat in the batting order.

In the infield the Redmen will have 6'5 soph Dan Esposito at first, Jack Conroy, a senior tri-captain at second, freshman Eddie McMahon, who has been a pleasant surprise, at shortstop and Mark Palau, also a sophomore at third.

Backing these men up are Dan Kelley, Ken Brewer, Steve Newell, Jim Saracino and an injured Hose Kelley.

Catching has been a pleasant surprise for the Redmen. Freshman Tom McDermott and Junior Kerry Daly give the Redmen what Bergquist calls "good big-time college catching," which should be important with the strong pitching staff.

It's now obvious that youth plays a big role as does the mound core. It will be these two aspects that will lead the Redmen through an awfully tough schedule.

The Yankee Conference is stronger than ever, the New England independants are always ready to give the Redmen a tough battle and with the addition of Harvard to go along with nationally ranked Dartmouth the Redmen are in for one heck of a northern campaign.

All this adds up to an interesting and exciting season for UMass baseball fans and possibly another trip to Omaha for the Redman nine.

Bergquist Has Omen Brewing

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

According to his lucky stars, this should be a very fine year for Dick Bergquist and his Redman nine. I say this with no insight on astrology, but just common good old diamond intuition.

By taking one glance at his four years of head coaching one might easily spot such an omen so favorable. For in 1967 and 1969 his squad rolled to Conference championships. Ideally, 1971 naturally being an odd year, fits into the pattern nicely.

Besides copping the YanCon Crown in 69', Bergquist piloted UMass to a District One Title and beat Southern Illinois in the College World Series. For a job well done his efforts were rewarded as District One Coach of the Year (1969).

After an illustrious athletic career in his high school days at Orange, Massachusetts, he matriculated two years at Bates College. In so doing he chalked up letters in both baseball and football.

A two-year US Army tour preceeded two more years of college education at UMass. Majoring in Phys Ed, the aspiring coach graduated with cum laude. Bergquist earned himself two letters apiece while a member of the university football and baseball teams. He played for the UMass squad which landed the baseball title in YanCon action in 1957.

In 1958 he received his masters degree from the University of Maryland, and the same year he worked as a teacher-coach at Hudson Falls (NY). A year later he returned to his alma mater and undertook the freshman baseball assignment which he maintained for seven years, at which time he was promoted to the head coaching post.

Entering his 12th year on the Massachusetts staff, Bergquist has a varsity career record of 66-42-1. His teams are 27-13 in conference play.

Bergquist holds team unity and pleasant atmosphere in high regard when it comes to building winners.

"I think to establish a close relationship with the players, you have to gain their respect. We're here with the players and it's up to us to work as close to them as we can. I think as coaches we should put everything into our program to give them a first class program.

"Beyond this program, there's a little self pride. I would like the members of the team to represent UMass, and go out and be known as one of the best baseball clubs in the east. In order to attain this we must create a tightly knit unit, there must be harmony off the field as well as cohesiveness in our play."

Garber's Gorillas Raring To Go

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

In 1963 UMass had a great lacrosse team. In 1969 Coach Dick Garber had his second "great" But the 1971 version might well be the best team of all.

"Position for position I think that this is the finest lacrosse team in UMass history," commented Coach Garber. Both in 1963 and 1969 Garber's Gorillas were the New England Champs, and both times they were ranked 18th in the nation. But neither of those teams had the overall balance and skill that this team possesses.

The 1969 undefeated team had the midfield and the attackmen as the guts of the squad. In 1963 the balance was there but as Garber pointed out. "There was not nearly the skill on the 63 team that we have now."

Though size is a relatively insignificant factor in determining the success of a lacrosse team, it often is an indication to the teams type of play. This years team is small and quick, and fans will be treated to more of a stick-handling, finesse type of game, rather than a physical one.

This year a playoff system has been devised to determine the number one lacrosse team in the nation. At season's end an NCAA committee will select eight teams from around the nation to participate in the tournament. A bid is expected to be extended to a New England ballclub, and it is to this end that the stickmen will be working for the next six weeks.

Over the last three seasons Garber's guerrilla's have lost only 2 games, compiling a 30-2 mark over that stretch. The Redmen will be looking to add on to this impressive record, and a host of talented individuals should make this season highly successful.

Leading a host of excellent ballplayers are the tri-captains John Gannon, Lou Marinacci, and Al Ruggiano. Ruggiano, the senior defensemen, will be joined by senior Joe Smith, junior John Walsh, and sophomore Tom Bock in helping goalie Bruce Crawford keep the opposition's scoring to a minimum. Of these four defensemen, only three will be starters, but all four will be rotating frequently throughout the course of the season.

Goalie Crawford is back for his second season as a starter. Said Garber on the junior goalkeeper, "He has improved tremendously from last season, and he is definitely in the category of outstanding goalie as far as I'm concerned."

In the way of mid-fielders Garber is more than happy. Blessed with three quality lines, the Redmen can expect both outstanding and consistent play from the men in the middle.

Marinacci and Gannon will team up with Dana Stone in composing the first line of mid-fielders. Unlike other positions in lacrosse, the mid fielder is required to do an extra-ordinary amount of running. Thus the necessity for more than one line.

Phil Sheridan will provide the offensive punch and the balance necessary on that second line. Paired with Tim Bosworth and Tom Brennan, Sheridan, cited as the quickest man on the team, should help to make it an excellent second strong line.

Apparently set in the way of defense and mid-field, UMass is going to need to score some goals too. Competing for the three attack positions are six outstanding candidates. Juniors John Nagle, Charles Hardy, and Paul Riteh currently have an edge on the competition. But Steve Hershcopf, Kevin Rush, and Paul Wicknian are not too far behind.

All six attackers will see plenty of action, and they'll be looking to fill the scoring gap left by All-American Tom Malone, UMass' star attackman of one year ago.

Along with a tremendous squad goes a tough schedule, the likes of which UMass had never had. Harvard and Brown will be the two teams with whom UMass will be competing for the New England NCAA bid, and the Redmen will get a chance to show their stuff in head to head contests against both of these teams.

Both the Brown and Harvard games are away matches, thus UMass fans won't get a look at the Redmen's toughest opponents. But they will get a look at two other fine teams in Adelphi and Fairleigh Dickinson. Both of these teams boast an outstanding caliber of play, and the home field advantage might well be a necessary one come the end of April.

Thus far pre-season play has gone pretty much as expected as the stickmen had a highly successful trip down south, and have been scrimmaging all week long in preparation for today's season opener. Boston State and the Connecticut Valley lacrosse club were two of the Redmen's victim this past weekend. On Monday and Tuesday they faced a Cortland club that undoubtably took some of the cockiness out of some of the players.

In all the team has looked pretty good according to Coach Garber. There have been a few pleasant surprises in Kevin Bush and Dwight Bloomchrist and a few minor corrections that have to be made at the start of every season.

With seven seniors on the starting team the stickmen are looking for a banner season. Judging by the quickness and scoring ability that they exhibited the past few weeks, and with the incentive of an NCAA bid in the back of their minds, this year should be quite a beauty.

Seventeenth Year At The Helm; Lacrosse Coach Dick Garber

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

The UMass athletic department has a pretty good thing going in Lacrosse — so-called "minor sport" which has been an upswing in the past decade, receiving national as well as local acclaim. The UMass Lacrosse program, as we has a good thing going. Helping their head coach Dick Garber. Fewer UMass mentors have dedicated themselves to one cause for as great a length of time as he.

Garber approaches his 17th campaign as the stickman's skipper. And although he's one of the old timers in the Boyden Directory, his methods are far from outmoded. In fact when you've been around as long as this guy, winning becomes second nature. One of the exceptional collegiate lacrosse coaches to crack the century mark in victories, he sports a stunning lifetime record of 110-57-2 over his previous 16 seasons at UMass.

A Springfield College grad, he puled up seven letters in football, basketball, and lacrosse before going on to Penn State where he secured his masters degree in education.

His first year as head coach ('55), the second season of formal lacrosse at UMass, saw the Redmen go to pieces with his disasterous and winless debut (0-7-1). But his charges were not to be denied and no sooner bore the nickname of "Garber's Gorillas".

New England titles in 63' (12-2) and 69' (10-0) settled the score for earlier setbacks. Northeast Division II championships were also at his disposal in 61' (8-2-1) and a year ago (7-2). In recognition for all he has contributed to the game of lacrosse Garber was feted with the first Francis L. "Babe" Krause Award in 1969, emblematic of the country's outstanding collegiate lacrosse coach.

In the past five years Garber teams have received national rankings of 36th, 27th, 20th, 18th, and 23rd respectively. But the sports information office claims that of this week the lacrosse team has reached its highest peak ever. Though they are currently 3rd in New England, they're close to the topseeded clubs in the nation with a no. 11 ranking.

One who does a pretty good job of nudding winners, Garber stresses the importance of victory but feels that it should not be overemphasized.

"I stress conditioning, fundementals, freedom of style in an athlete's play, and of course I ask everyone to give an honest effort to win. I don't, however, reduce it to the idea that winning is the only value that you get out of competing in sports.

"Winning is your ultimate goal, but there are other values derived from sports. A team athlete has an obligation to his team, his school, as well as himself. I want to see players have fun playing. I don't want to see drudgery or just hard work. I want to see some honest to goodness fun in playing."

Trackmen Host BU And NU On New Facility

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Tomorrow afternoon will mark the return of spring track to the UMass campus after a six year layoff. The Redmen will be hosting Boston University and Northeastern on the new Olympic track which is located in back of the baseball stadium. The throwing events will start at 1:00 with the running events scheduled to go off at 2:00.

Tomorrow's meet will feature three of the top teams in New England as well as 20 outstanding individuals who placed in the New England Indoor Championships. Boston University won the New England Championships in a memorable upset while Northeastern finished second. The meet is too close to call with the many individual battles shaping the final result.

The most exciting race of the day will probably be the 880, where four of the top five finishes in the New England 1000 yard run will be competing.

The most exciting race of the day will probably be the 880, where four of the top five finishes in the New England 1000 yard run will be competing. John Beatty was the winner of this race as only 1.3 seconds separated the first five finishes. UMass will be represented by Dave Evans who finished third in the New England's. Ralph Bowman of Northeastern and Carr-Locke of BU by way of Scotland round out the top five.

The throwing events will feature three of the finest weight men in collegiate circles. Mel Taylor and Tom Sirois of Northeastern will compete head on against UMass' Eddie Arcaro. One of the outstanding competitions of the day will involve the high jump where Cal Carpenter and Ed Shaughnessy will jump against Dan Byron and Ken Boyd of BU. Northeastern has the number one pole vaulter in New England in Jim Cavasella.

All three teams have outstanding sprinters with BU's Ford Dennis of Liberia seeming to be the most outstanding individual sprinter in the meet. Dennis, an international sprinter, will receive his major competition from Walter Mayo, Tony Pendleton, and Ron Harris of UMass and Steve Hogan of Northeastern. UMass will have a clear edge in the hurdles with Gerry Spellman and Jim Graves leading the way.

Ron Wayne, the New England Cross Country Champion, is the outstanding performer in the distance events, and will receive challenges from Allieu Massaquoi of BU and Northeastern's Bruce Butterworth and Billy Rowe. The 440 should provide great action with Paul Horrigan and Steve Wittenhagen taking on BU's John Cherry of Ireland and UMass' Steve Levine and Gene Costello.

An evaluation of the team's strength and personnel for tomorrow's meet and the season will now be given. Co-Captain Arcaro will again lead the way in the throwing events. Arcaro was last year's leading scorer on the varsity, and holds school records in the discus and the shotput. He is also the team's number one hammer thrower, and is nationally ranked in collegiate circles.

The javelin will be a strong point for the team, and will consist of Rocco Petitte, freshman record holder Jim Queeny, and Peter Natti, last year's leading scorer for the freshmen. Gil Sylvia will also compete in the javelin. Bruce Bursey will back up Arcaro in the hammer while John Homon will add strength to the discus. Barney Schneider will work with Arcaro in the shotput.

The Jumping events will again be one of the Redmen's strongest events. Cal Carpenter is the school record holder in the high jump, and will be backed up in the high jump by Ed Shaughnessy who will also compete in the triple jump and the long jump.

Dave Canterbury will be UMass' leading performer in the triple jump as he finished second in this event last year in the Yankee Conference Championships. Joining Canterbury in the triple jump will be Rip Dyer who is also the team's leading competitor in the long jump. Mark Robinson will compete in the long jump with Dyer and Shaughnessy as this trio gives the team fine scoring potential in this event. John Kamb will be UMass' leading performer in the pole vault.

The sprints and the hurdles will see the addition of the 440 relay, the 100 and 220 yard dashes, along with the 440 intermediate hurdles. This is fine with Coach O'Brien as the team features one of the most well balanced sprint teams in New England. The sprinters include Walter Mayo, Tony Pendleton, Ron Harris, Dennis Busa, Bob Raucci, and Stokes Hall.

The hurdles will again feature Spellman and Graves. Graves finished second in the 60 high hurdles in the New England Championships, and will be competing in the 120 high hurdles this spring. Co-Captain Spellman is coming off a fine indoor season, and should be approaching national recognition. Last year he was an IC4A finalist in the 120 high hurdles, and finished fifth in the 440 intermediate hurdles at the Penn Relays. Bob Landry, Bill Clark, and Steve Crimmins will back up Spellman and Graves in the hurdles.

AHEAD OF THE PACK—UMass hurdler Jerry Spellman wins the 440 yard intermediate hurdles in last years meet with Boston University and Northeastern. Tomorrow the ace hurdler will be out to duplicate this victory on the new UMass Olympic Track.

The middle distance events showed the greatest improvement over the course of the indoor season. This is because many of the runners in these events were competing in their first varsity season. It can be expected that these runners will continue to improve this spring and should provide the team with greater overall point scoring potential.

Evans provides the nucleus of the middle distance events, and will be competing in the 880. Evans has been competing on a national level the last two years, and will again be a factor this season. Al Mangan and Arnie Morse will continue to back up Evans in impressive fashion. John Maloney will be pushing these three runners as he shattered the freshman team's record by three seconds this past season.

The 440 is an example of the team's great potential. Competing in this event will be sophomore Steve Levine and freshmen Gene Costello and Mike Tesdale.

The distance events were the strongest events during the indoor season. This was mainly because of the running of Wayne, who was the team's leading scorer during indoors as he doubled in the mile and two mile throughout the season. Wayne's first place finish in the mile and his second place finish in the two mile led the team to a second place finish in the Yankee Conference Championships.

The strength of the distance events also lies in the men who back up Wayne. Larry Paulson will back up Wayne in the mile while Tom Jasmin, Roger Tasatka, and Doug O'Connel will be backing up Wayne in the two mile.

Athletic Experience Attributes To Ken O'Brien's Coaching Career

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

Successful is the man who sets the example. And the adage well applies to Track Coach Ken O'Brien because he is just that.

He was super enough at Foxboro High School (Massachusetts) where he stacked up an astronomical total of 13 letters while competing in schoolboy sports. Leadership was one of his finer qualities which signified his makings of a coach—he captained football, basketball, baseball, and track in his senior year, a rarity no matter what part of the country you're in.

Marked success followed the athletically inclined O'Brien to the campus of UMass. He was a key cog on the harrier squad which secured three successive conference crowns from 1960 through 1962, including a New England championship the later year. His 1:52.7 half-mile billing in the conference championships was quite invincible, and as a matter of fact still holds up in the record book to this day.

But along with his athletic achievement he was still a devoted student. One of the brains of any UMass brain trust he graduated from the school of education with a robust cum of 3.4. He received his masters degree in 65' and coached at the University of Bridgeport, piloting them to a runnerup finish in the Collegiate Track Conference Championships.

Upon returning to his alma mater O'Brien assisted Bill Footrick for two full seasons before assuming the track command duties in 1968. In crosscountry his barriers nailed down two second place finishes before taking it all in the Yankee Conference this past fall. Overall, his three-year credentials stand at 24-7.

In 68' the outdoor tracksters were fifth in New England under his careful guidance. His indoor squad wound up third in the NE in 1969.

In a synopsis of his coaching philosphy O'Brien correlates athletics to life in general.

"I think athletics is the greatest laboratory available in education. It's black and white and very objective. Of all possible endeavors that I know of athletics is one of the greatest areas by which a person can find out more about himself.

"As you go through life you should have a reason for living. I think that's what living is all about. You have to realize what abilities you have and what contributions you can make to any group of which you belong.

"I believe athletics go the same way. Athletics gives you a chance to examine yourself and find out just what abilities you have."

Bernie Dallas Day Honors Former Great

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

About three years ago, Benard Dallas was killed in an auto accident near Philadelphia. On May 1, the Alumni Association is sponsoring Bernie Dallas Day.

A graduate of the class of 1966, Dallas had a most impressive college career. Besides being co-captain of the 1965 UMass football team, he was class president of the Kappa Sigma Fraternity in 1966, was an Adelphian the same year, and was listed in Who's Who in American Colleges-universities.

The May 1 memorial day will consist of a pro clinic, a luncheon and campus tour for visiting coaches, high school football players, and parents, and the Bernie Dallas Memorial game--a Redman intrasquad game.

Primary professionals participating in the clinic are UMass grads Greg Landry, Milt Morin, Ed Toner, Phil Vandersea, and former University of Main star John Huard.

Landry, the first draft choice of the Detroit Lions in 1968, led the Lions to the divisional playoffs while completing 61% of his passes. He will speak on ball-handling techniques, footwork, and the throwing action of the drop back pass.

Morin, the first pick of the Cleveland Browns in 1966, was an All-Pro tight end in 1968 and has twice led N.F.L. tight ends in receiving. He will concentrate on tight end receiving and pass routes and blocking from the tight end position.

Toner has been with the New England Patriots for four years, seeing action at the defensive end and tackle positions. A valuable swing man for the Pats, he will instruct on the defensive line play of the pro 4-3 defense with emphasis on the pass rush.

Vandersea is captain of the Green Bay Packer suicide squad and played in the first Super Bowl game. He will speak on outside linebacker play versus the run and the pass.

Huard is the fine middle linebacker of the Denver Broncos and will talk about his position and the 4-3 defense versus the run and pass.

Also present from the pro ranks will be Sam Rutigliano, offensive coordmator of the Patriots, who will emphasize wide receivers' pass routes, Nick McGarry and Pierre Marchando of the Patriots and Bob Pena of the Cleveland Browns.

The format of the clinic will have all but one of the pros instructing in Gladchuck Field with the Redman squad and visiting high school players as an audience, while the one remaining pro will be demonstrating in Alumni Stadium with high school coaches, parents, and student spectators looking on. The pros will be switching back and forth between both fields until each pro individually has spoken in Alumni Stadium.

Student support is essential if this most worthy undertaking is to be a success. Price for students will be $1.00. Proceeds from the game will go into the Bernie Dallas Mall which will be constructed in front of Alumni Stadium and also to the Bernie Dallas Memorial Scholarship Fund which will be awarded each year to the student deemed the best all-around student at UMass. This does not necessarily mean the best athlete or the best student academically, but a combination of many positive attributes.

Any questions on the game can be directed to co-chairmen of the event, David Kelley and James Allen.

Infield Changes Bolster Hitting

By EARLE BARROLL

With the hope of a spring-like weekend in the offering, the UMass baseball team travels to American International College tomorrow to open its northern campaign against the Yellow Jackets in a game beginning at 2 p.m.

Confined to Curry Hicks Cage for the past couple of days, the Redman nine expect to get outdoors this afternoon to get in a little outdoor preparation before their opener.

A.I.C. had been traveling on a southern swing since the Redmen came back from theirs and should be in pretty good competative shape.

The Yellow Jackets are an unknown quanity going into this game as no one seems to know exactly what they've done down south. Consequently coach Bergquist and his players have no scouting reports and they'll start from scratch for this game.

Last year UMass crushed A.I.C., 12-1, here and the revenge motive thus comes into play on the part of the Yellow Jackets. If one goes back a couple of years UMass slaughtered Tufts, 29-0, here and last year in the return match Tufts, at home, psyched itself up to the point where it defeated the Redmen.

So UMass will have to be ready.

As for the starting pitcher, Bergquist plans to work Jack Bernardo, Tom King and Tom White in this game with the starter anyones pick. All three pitched exceptional ball down south and have been on the mark since returning to campus.

In a shake-up move in the infield to add some hitting to the UMass attack, Mark Palau has been moved from first to third, Dan Esposito has been inserted at first, Jack Conroy has moved over from third to second base and Ed McMahon, a freshman has been inserted at shortstop.

The catching assignment is between Tom McDermott and Bill Ryan, with the former, on the strength of a fine southern trip probably getting the nod.

Brian Martin will be in right field where he earned all District One Honors last season as well as leading all major college hitters in New England with a .422 average.

The two remaining outfield positions are a tossup between Charlie Manley, Mike Sawyer and Jim Kiley.

Off of last years performances, A.I.C. will probably be going with Dana Westlund on the mound. He was 3-4 last year and even with that record is the mainstay of the pitching staff.

As for their offensive punch, Chris Semino batted .410 last year and carries the bulk of the yellow jacket attack on his bat.

It's now time for the Redmen to put what they learned on the southern trip to work up here in the north. With their sights set on Omaha and a trip to the world series, tomorrow may give a little indication of what to expect in the season to follow.

Garber's Gorillas Host English Today

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

The British are coming. The British are coming. In fact they'll be here at 3:15 this afternoon to face the highly touted UMass lacrosse team.

Having been in the United States for nearly three weeks the English International team will wind up its American tour with the Redmen.

On the field behind Boyden Gymnasium, the UMass stickmen will open their season after 7 1-2 weeks of practice that included one of the most successful southern trips ever. And in their opener they are going to be facing a tough opposition in the English.

This 40 English International has played six games, traveling to Washington D.C., Pennsylvania, North Carolina, New Jersey and now to Massachusetts. Prior to today's date with UMass they have run up a 4-1-1 mark, beating the likes of Duke 15-5, Penn 6-5, Villanova 18-4 and Washington College 14-5. North Carolina played them to a 6-6 tie, while Washington & Lee came up with the only win against the foreigners, by a 13-11 margin.

In countering the fine attack of the English the Redmen will send out the most balanced and skillful team ever to play for UMass. Tri-captains John Gannon, Lou Marinacci and Al Ruggiano will lead the starting ten in their 1971 debut.

Coach Garber commented, "We will have good play at every position this year, and I'm looking forward to another successful season."

The "good play" starts at goalie where junior Bruce Crawford will be starting his second straight season in the goal. Joe Smith and John Walsh are two more of the strong holds on the starting ten, and they along with Ruggiano will comprise the defensive unit for the Redmen. Tom Bock will be the number four man on defense, and he figures to see a good deal of action as a result of Garber's plan for rotation.

Mid-field will be bolstered by two tri-captains that made All-American last year, in Gannon and Marinacci. Dana Stone will join these two in forming the number one line of midfielders. Phil Sheridan will lead the second line of midfielders, as Tim Bosworth and Tom Brennan will join Sheridan in their key role as substitutes.

John Nagle, Charley Hardy and Paul Ritch will be going at it from the attacking zone, as they represent only three among many who are likely to get in a good deal of playing time.

In the way of scoring UMass will be looking towards Nagle, Marinacci and Sheridan, three stickmen who provided the offensive punch during the southern trip and throughout much of this past week's practice sessions.

Four years ago an English International team visited the United States. They compiled a 3-3 record, and since then their caliber of play has improved considerably. But Garber's Gorilla's will be ready to meet the challenge. With a possible NCAA bid at the end of their 13 game schedule they would like nothing better than a strong showing against English International. Who knows, by 5 p.m. this afternoon, the English might not know whether they're coming or going.

Crewmen Race At Weslyan

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

Four eight-man boats from the UMass Crew Club will be given "floating starts" in four races tomorrow on the same water they train on, but farther downstream, in Middletown, Connecticut. The day's events begin at 2 p.m. with Wesleyan University doing the hosting.

Separating the affairs into Club and freshman races, the Redmen have entered a varsity and a junior varsity race, and two frosh competitions. The course for each eight's travelling is about 1500 meters upstream into a stiff current, and is launched by what is called a floating, or dead, start: the shells are lined up on a stake and given a signal to start rowing immediately, thus not receiving an opportunity to get the feel of rowing before pushing into a racing tempo.

The biggest varsity boat ever assembled, and in a brand new shoenbrod straight-rigged like the three other UMass crafts.

Bow Dave Richard senior, co-captain
2 Al Flanders sophomore
3 Joe Piela soph
4 Tom Mone sr., co-captain
5 Bill Moran soph
6 Bob Weimar junior
7 Ted Fitzpatrick soph
Stroke Jeff Allen soph

averaging at 6'2" and 197 lbs., compete against three very strong teams, Wesleyan, Coast Guard Academy, and the M.I.T. Boat Club.

Sophomore Tom Rurak will be ready to substitute in case one oarsman's injuries take over, while coxswain Kenny Raymond, also a sophomore, has been listed as "temporarily injured"--with laryngitis.

News of the Wesleyan crew's performance to-date this year has reached Amherst. The Wesleyan eight, which consists of five returning varsity members from last year's tenth-place Dad Vail team, and presently sophomores from their fourth-place freshman Dad Vail, made a tremendous sprint near the end of their race against Trinity College, and won by 12 seconds.

Last week, however, Marist College, one of the best in the area, beat Wesleyan by a slim two seconds. UMass has never taken first place over Wesleyan on Wesleyan's home course, but beat them once in Amherst.

Meanwhile, this is the first year of Coast Guard's crew program. Olympic champ and former Columbia crew coach, Bill Stowe, has put together a team that has looked impressive. Starting training in Florida for the month of January, CG has been out on the water all year and have rowed unbeaten so far in Southern meets and two races of their regular season.

GEORGE WASHINGTON?—No, it's UMass crew coach Mike Faherty, aided by coxswain Bob Jayes, in his launch directing his crew men up and down the Connecticut River during practice. Faherty is tireless in his job as crew coach at the university.

Not associated with M.I.T. as a school organization, the M.I.T. Boat Club harbors individuals who have been national contenders, and will send down a "loaded" boat from Cambridge. This talent has already beaten Trinity last week, and will only race in the varsity tomorrow.

The rest are three-boat contests.

Wesleyan and Coast Guard pitch their jv's against the Redman junior eight. Crazily consistant on their 500 showing this year, the Wesleyan jv's captured a win by sprinting over Marist, but lost to Trinity, the opposite that their varsity performed.

The other UMass shoenbrod has lined up

Bow Paul Winchell sophomore

3 Clay Morin "
4 Doug Thompson "
5 Chris Hodson junior
6 Kevin O'Brien "
7 Rick Jones "

averaging a mass of 183 lbs.

Because of the late start onto the water, Coach Mike Faherty's race plan has been moderated to a slower pace of stroking, even four strokes per minute less than what the opposition will stroke. By far the overall strongest squad he has yet had to work with, Faherty's ideas of his oarsmen will be manifest after tomorrow's results. "I anticipate a lot of seat shifting and additional changes for future races," he said.

Two different freshman races are scheduled. Coach Kurt Betchick is sending two pococks, one lined with

Bow John Gombar
2 John Curtis
3 Russ Schott
4 John Lund
5 Richard Clair
6 Jim Kennedy
7 Philip Kenney
Stroke Kevin Kaylor
cox Jody Kianides

against Wesleyan and CG frosh, and another,

Bow Mark Brown
2 Rich Jamara
3 Jim Ulwick
4 Joseph Labenski
5 Chris Kudla
6 Steve Ryan
7 Fred Scalese
Stroke Bob Sanderson

against A mixed team of Coast Guard third varsity members and frosh, and against Middletown Hill School's crew which already beat the Wesleyan frosh this year.

Order of races of the day:

2:00 all freshmen
2:20 jv
2:40 varsity
3:15 UMass frosh vs CG third varsity & Middletown.

Orchard Hill Committee Calls For Greater Autonomy, Core Courses

By JANET HUGHES
MDC Staff

Last night, a massive publicity campaign was launched by the Orchard Hill Steering Committee, in order to acquaint the University community with the goals and problems of Orchard Hill.

In a petition soon to be distributed, the Steering Committee has outlined its definition of a residential college, in the form of seven demands. Several of these demands call for "Autonomy in the selection and compensation of faculty teaching courses on Orchard Hill." The courses most desired by the Steering Committee introductory and core courses, in both the humanities and the sciences.

As the petition states in another demand, "Orchard Hill will work with existing departments in creating core courses taught on Orchard Hill which reflect the needs of Orchard Hill Residential College students."

In order to publicize their desire for more Orchard Hill courses, members of the Steering Committee will attempt to see heads of departments in the different schools. They hope to speak with the department heads to line up more courses in different schools, and to enlist the most support possible before Wednesday.

At 3:00 Leon Barron, the Master of Orchard Hill, will be meeting with Chancellor Tippo and Vice-Chancellors, Gluckstern, Bromery and Campion. Bromery and Campion will be speaking in Field house Tuesday night, the exact time has not yet been decided.

The committee will also concentrate on educating the student community as to just what is a residential college. A fact sheet is being drawn up for distribution among the residents of the Orchard Hill community, along with the petition.

According to a proposal submitted to the Faculty Senate, a "Residential College" is "a semi-autonomous institution offering the advantages of a small college while at the same time thriving on the variety of well-developed courses in firmly established discipline within the University."

The Steering Committee hopes the campaign will clarify any misconceptions that both faculty and students may have, regarding the Residential College system.

Student Senate Taken To Court By Students

By JEFF THOMPSON
MDC Staff

"In two suits we are attempting to use the student judiciary to correct what we feel are wrongs of the Student Senate," said Neil Mulligan, a spokesman for a committee taking the Senate to the University General Court.

In the MDC interview, Mulligan stated that his committee feels that the Student Senate has too much power ($600,000.), and that it is run in a tendentious manner by a handful of the senators.

The first case is to determine what membership in the Student Government Association (SGA) constitutes.

"Glenn Elters reportedly has received his undergraduate degree. We have a letter from the Graduate School stating that Elters is enrolled in the Graduate School," he said.

"No one has yet denied this claim," Mulligan added, "and it will be the court's duty to decide."

Mulligan cited a rule that says the Student Senate President does not necessarily have to be enrolled at the university.

But he added that the rule was put in so that if Whitmore didn't like the president and threw him out of the university, it couldn't throw him out of office.

In Elter's case Mulligan felt that it was not the meaning of the law to leave the job open in perpetuity for someone.

"I don't think that the law intended for Elters to be Student Senate President forever," Mulligan said.

The other suit involves the retroactivity of the bill concerning salary for Senate officers.

Mulligan states that certain senators have told him that the senate officers have been paid for their services for the year ($150 per month for the President; $125 per month for the other officers) from September to the date of the referendum.

"We call for returning funds that were used to pay officers on a bill that was overturned by a student referendum," he said. "They were reportedly paid retroactive pay from September and since the students voted not to pay them, they should give the money back."

Mulligan said the Court agreed to hear these cases on April 15. His committee will be represented by graduate student Joseph Kilmartin.

When asked what measures he thought should be taken to improve the quality of government, Mulligan said, "The Student Senate should have a constitutional reform. It is now a legislative and an executive branch of the government. This offsets the usual checks and balances system."

Mulligan noted that the Senate is proposing a $13.50 increase per student for next year. "We'd like to make the senators aware that they can't go on capriciously there must be restraints put on them," he said.

After saying that the Senate now has authority to do anything that is legal (not against state or federal laws), Mulligan said, "I think the best thing to do would be to double the size of the Senate. The size of the Senate hasn't changed hardly at all since the school enrolled only 4000 students."

3rd World Organization May Have Funds Hassle

BY ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

The school budget for Harambe, which was initially approved by the Student Senate in its first reading, may not be passed because some student senator has questioned whether or not the group's constitution is discriminatory as to membership.

According to Chairman Danny M Kenzie, Harambe is a multi-racial group meeting the cultural and social needs of the Third World at UMass. He said it offers programs to bring Third World members together and it needs the funds, which can be difficult for a small group to attain.

Membership is of two kinds, active and associate, McKenzie said. Active members are all Third World members and associates are all the undergraduates of the University, he explained. Active members can vote for officers of Harambe, while the associates can not, McKenzie said, he continued, saying that everyone has the right to take part in the activities sponsored by the organization.

One of the activities the group sponsors is an annual conference for the Third World. This year emphasis is on Pan Africanism, McKenzie said. Last year the Arab world was emphasized and in the future Latin America and the Caribbean will be the theme, he said.

Harambe tries to go to the students, McKenzie said. It develops correspondence between people who share like views, he said.

"In Swahili harambe means 'Let's Get Together' and that is primarily what we are trying to do," McKenzie explained.

Problems the group has faced in "getting together" have been many, according to McKenzie. He said they tried to get space in the Student Union but "got nowhere". Harambe is therefore temporarily located on the third floor of Mills House, he said. The group now has telephones (52759 or 52152) but for a long time there were no lines of communication, he added.

Organization has at last reached the point where there are definite people to coordinate, MacKenzie explained.

In addition to McKenzie, the co-ordinators are Cassandra Duarte, Shirley Alexander, and Rudolph Jones. Also on the executive committee are Jackie Berryman, treasurer, Janice Peters, corresponding secretary, and Doris Williams, recording secretary.

Anti-War Rally Set For April 18 In Providence

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

An anti-war and anti-Nixon rally will take place Sunday, April 18th in Providence, R.I. It's purpose, according to Garry Dotterman, is "to bring together groups that have in the past worked against one another and find common grounds to work together."

Dotterman and Brown student Scott Harris were here on campus to promote interest in the rally and they invited people who can work to fight Nixon and the war and would like to take part in discussions about alternative candidates in 1972.

Dotterman hopes women, Union members, college students, and those on welfare will pressure the President to end the war.

"The New Politics will demonstrate that there is a new political constituency", Dotterman said. "The new voters and the older 23 million are not following traditions. They are looking for candidates who will talk to them and will speak on the issues."

There will be discussions on the war, and other social issues from 1 to 3 P.M. in the Biltmore Hotel across from the train station in Providence. Among discussion topics are welfare structure and its inadequacy, the economy related to the war, senior citizens, people peace treaty, vets against the war, the Calley issue, and the new voter constituency.

A rally will follow at 4 on the steps of the State House after which will be more discussion groups.

The reason the rally will take place in Providence according to Dotterman is that "politically it will have more impact on the individual congressmen if it occurs in his city or state rather than in Washington D.C."

There will be other rallies similiar to this one across the country this summer, Dotterman said. Plans are now for ones in Indianapolis and Minneapolis.

"Providence is an opportunity to become active by picking goals and candidates", he continued. "By moving today and not tomorrow, it can make a difference.

Ed. School Trains Urban Teachers

By DON GLICKSTEIN
MDC Staff

Most elementary and secondary education students graduate from the University totally unprepared to teach in the under-supplied, over-crowded, culturally-different schools of our cities. One of the ten new teacher training programs of the School of Education will offer next year's juniors and seniors special training and student teaching in urban schools.

The Urban Teacher Training Program (UTTP), developed by the School's Center for Urban Education, will feature student teaching internships in cities ranging from Boston, Worcester, and Springfield to Louisville, Brooklyn, and Philadelphia.

An undergraduate interested in the Program is urged to take Introduction to Urban Education and the appropriate elementary or secondary education psychology course in his freshman or sophomore year. The student officially enters the Program in his junior year, when he takes a new pre-practicum course in "survival strategies for the urban classroom". Internship will occur in a person's junior year, when he will live in his school's community with 10-15 other interns. A unique part of the Program is the 6-credit senior year practicum, when a student goes over his strengths and weaknesses and returns to urban centers for brief follow-ups of a couple of days or weeks. They key to the UTTP is flexibility, and a student may adapt the Program to his individual needs.

The UTTP will accept approximately 90 juniors and seniors in the fall and 110 in the spring of 1972. More information about the UTTP (fall and spring semesters) as well as the other new teacher-training programs can be obtained this Thursday from 9:30-11:00 AM in the School of Ed Auditorium, and in special meetings on Thursday afternoon. Anyone not able to attend should contact Carolyn Peelle or Atron Gentry at the Center for Urban Education (5-1582).

Klein Says Nixon Unsure On Calley

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon's communications director, Herbert Klein, said yesterday the chief executive hasn't decided what to do with Lt. William Calley Jr., the Army officer convicted and sentenced to life for killings at My Lai.

Klein said also he sees no inconsistency in the President's campaigning in 1968 on a law-and-order platform and intervening in the Calley case while it is on appeal.

Klein was interviewed on the CBS TV-radio program "Face the Nation."

Klein said he doesn't think military review boards will be swayed by Nixon's announced intention to act after military appeals are ended or his order to give Calley more freedom on the base while his case is appealed.

Rennie Davis, defendent of the Chicago 8 conspiracy charges and longtime movement activist, will be speaking at the UMass Cage Tues. night, Apr. 13, at 8:00 P.M.

Formerly involved in SDS and the New Mobilization, he is now active in the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice (PCPJ), whose goal is to combine traditional anti-war forces with anti-racism and anti-poverty groups in a broad multi-issue organization.

The three central demands of the PCPJ are "immediate withdrawal of all U.S. military air, land, and sea forces from Viet Nam, and that the U.S. set a date for completion of the withdrawal", "a $6,5000 guaranteed annual income for a family of four with a date set for its enactment", and "the freedom of all political prisoners with a date set for their release".

The PCPJ is a co-sponsor with the National Peace Action Coalition (NPAC) for the April 24th anti-war demonstration. Following that date, these activities are planned: April 24-May 1, a people's lobby and non-violence teach-ins; May 1st, a peace festival at Rock Creek Park with Judy Collins and Joan Baez; May 2nd, a rally with Dr. Ralph Abernathy and Caesar Chavez; May 3rd and 4th, massive non-violent civil disobedience at government buildings; May 5th, a national moratorium on business as usual. Similar activities have been planned to happen at the same time in Viet Nam.

Rennie Davis will be elaborating on these May Day activities, the urgency of the Indo-Chinese situation, and the People's Peace Treaty after which will follow a question and answer period. Everyone is urged to attend.

School Of Ed. Ponders Racism

A committee from the School of Education studying the use of education as a means of social change has declared that "racism is the central pathology of our time" and that "education must mount a massive program and intervention designed to block the transmission of racism to the next generation."

The group, which met for a two-day retreat on Nantucket Island March 30-April 1, 1971, released it's study to the School of Ed community in the form of a memo from Dean Dwight Allen of the school.

"Such a commitment," the faculty and administrators added, "means at least that every student will learn in the course of his education of racism and how it affects his work as an educator."

The report continued to say that commitment to such a program would mean rearranging it's priorities, modifying admissions and faculty recruitment policies, and revamping course offerings.

The report's definition of racism presented was the everyday racism that can be either conscious or unconscious.

Pakistan Claims Indian Aggression On Border

NEW DELHI, India (AP)—Radio Pakistan claimed yesterday two companies of Indian border security forces infiltrated rebellious East Pakistan and were wiped out by government troops.

It said the Indians were intercepted "well inside Pakistani territory" on Saturday.

The Pakistani broadcast coupled its announcement with a fresh pledge of support from Communist China.

It also said that political leaders in West Pakistan were urging that the "aggression" from India be stopped.

The radio, the official organ of President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan's government, said that the two Indian companies "were part of the infiltrators who have crossed into East Pakistan from India."

It said the security forces were armed with mortars, machine guns, rifles and grenades when they were attacked by the Pakistan army in Jessore district, near Benapole, an Indian border town about 60 miles northeast of Calcutta.

The radio said that two of the security men were captured along with a machine gun, two rifles, a grenade and a radio set.

The Pakistani government claimed last weekend that it had destroyed a convoy of nine Indian vehicles filled with arms and ammunition in the northern sector of the secessionist province, which shares a 1,349-mile border with India.

Foreign Minister Swaran Singh of India expressed doubt that Pakistan would attack India during the current crisis.

"We will have to safeguard our borders with Pakistan," he told newsmen in Northern Chandigarh city. "But I do not think that Pakistan rulers will be so reckless as to embark on a military adventure against India."

The foreign minister described previous Pakistani allegations about armed Indians infiltrating East Pakistan as "baseless and meant for propaganda."

He said the Pakistani leaders had resorted to the "usual tactics" of blaming India for any internal problems.

Albert Claims Nixon Recession

WASHINGTON (AP)-Charging that do-nothing policies have left the nation "still in the throes of the 1970 recession," Speaker Carl Albert said Thursday that House Democratic leaders can no longer wait for President Nixon to repair the economy.

"We accept the responsibility," the Oklahoma Democrat told a news conference, "of providing the national leadership so urgently needed to end our prolonged economic slump."

Albert spelled out no program for restoring the economy but suggested the Democrats' answer is to pump more federal money into it.

"An economy operating at an annual rate of $70 billion below capacity as ours was in the fourth quarter of 1970," he said, "needs priming badly and government is the logical source."

His statement indicated Democratic reworking of the President's economic proposals-such as Ways and Means Chairman Wilbur Mills' overhauling of Nixon's welfare and revenue sharing plans-may be a House hallmark between now and the 1972 presidential election.

Asked if his statement amounted to the Democrats' 1972 economy plank, Albert replied: "It does for now."

He said the past four months' unemployment rate is a nine-year high, corporate profits and manufacturing employment are at a five-year low, and unemployment of professional and technical workers is the worst since 1958.

Editor's note: John Roderick of The Associated Press was one of three American newsmen permitted to enter Communist China to cover the tour of the U.S. table tennis team. It was the first time such permission was granted to U.S. correspondents since the Communists gained power in 1949. Roderick, 56, was an AP correspondent in China in 1945-48 and has served in the Tokyo bureau since 1959.

PEKING (AP)—This is my first dispatch from China in 22 years. The news I have to report would have been incredible only a few weeks ago-Americans are welcome in the People's Republic.

And the prospects for wider people-to-people contacts with Americans of all kinds are encouraging.

Base this estimate on the friendly spirit with which Chinese from Scumchun to the Chinese capital received the 15 members of the U.S. table tennis team Saturday.

It is bolstered by the warmth of the welcome extended to me and two other American correspondents as we hurried to catch up with the team yesterday.

We are the first U.S. correspondents ever given visas as working newsmen, officials here told us. The table tennis team was the first American group of any kind invited to the mainland since the People's Republic was proclaimed in 1949.

Our assignment is to cover the team. But the biggest story of all-China-is all around us and crying to be told.

It is too soon to say that all the barriers which have kept Americans out of China and Chinese out of America for so many years are coming down. But a hole has been made in the once impenetrable wall.

The spring-like warmth in U.S.—China contacts at the human level cannot fail to melt some of the ice that has congealed in the long winter of hostility.

I crossed the border at the British colony of Hong Kong at 11:30 on a sunny Easter morning with John Rice and Jack Reynolds of the National Broadcasting Co. and two of their Japanese television crewmen, Hiromasa Yamanaka and Masaaki Shiihara.

With us were four other foreign newsmen, John Saar, an Englishman, and Frank Fischbeck, a West German, both of Time-Life, and Jose Schlesinger and Bob Whyte from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Only Rich and I had ever been to China and we were here in the years before the Communist takeover.

Four Courses

If you have ever felt bogged down by the burdensome course load around here, you'll probably be interested in the activities of a small committee headed by Professor William Naff of the Asian Studies Department. The concern of the group, and ultimately of everyone at this University, is the improvement of the use of time resources not only by students but by faculty as well.

The main topic of this committee has been the investigation of the possibility of instituting a four course per semester plan at UMass. In simple terms, this system means that instead of carrying a course load of 15 credits, or five courses per semester, the normal work load would consist of four courses.

The rationale behind the four course plan is that students would be able to devote more time and interest to each course while at the same time delving deeper into their particular areas of study. Both faculty and students, many feel, would gain from this plan because students would have more time to prepare for each class and this would stimulate more worthwhile and substantial discussions.

Also, since each student would have a greater amount of non-classroom time, he would be able to pay more attention to other areas which, though not specifically academic, are of certain importance in the total University experience. After all, there is a lot more going on here, and in the Five College area, than just classes.

Obviously there are myriad problems involved with the adoption of a four course system. Many of the smaller programs at the University would no doubt suffer and the number of courses could decline by an estimated twenty per cent.

Yet many of these courses survive mainly because they provide an easy three credits which is what undergraduates must often search for under the present system. There are a large number of students who simply can not survive a fifteen credit program without at least one "gut" course. Therefore, most of us are only taking four full time courses anyway.

The positives of the four course plan, we think, strongly outweigh the negatives and it has proven itself already at such institutions as Smith, Amherst and Mt. Holyoke. It can work here, too.

'Those Troubled Times'

The campus is preparing for the last Spring before 1972, when one can expect that most popular factions in the nation will be preparing for the Presidential primaries, and ultimately for the battle of the political cyclops: those whose vision is narrow enough to be thrown into a Presidential election.

There is still a Chicago. The Armed Forces of this nation are still engaged in war for the sake of a President's "honor." People in this country are still helplessly aware of what the war in Indochina has meant to the inhabitants (gooks), and the concurrent affects of such a conflict on a nation already rent by a history of racial tensions and de-humanized vital interests.

Yes. All that we have heard about the F.B.I. and Army intelligence is true. Yes. We have committed attrocities in Vietnam; all those people who are dead and who have been forced into refugee camps were/are breathing, beautiful, alive human beings.

Yes. Many people in the United States don't understand that their country's leaders could be wrong. That the United States is a monster let loose by men who don't want to be responsible for creating and controlling it. Both the American people and their leaders have accepted for too many years the anesthetized reality of war and preparation for war.

Now, the Spring is upon us; the new texture of the earth and all that grows, begins to move in us a sense of life. People will lie, face down, on the damp, warm earth, with the hot-white sun to their backs: You hold the earth in your hands and your chest gets tight, straining to live with the bitter knowledge of the world beyond your classes and work.

People are caught in the curl of a giant wave, that twists and rolls and crashes again and again. Relentlessly sucking away at the brain, until the confusion and brutality of this sea of life pacifies the senses; you can hold your breath and surface to see the sun and wide blue sky.

Those who have learned to survive in the murky depths of our political sea will hold sway, and the endless series of crashes will go un-noticed, by those who reach the surface numb and alive.

* * * *

The great debates of our times have ruined too many people. We stand, as a nation, tottering on the brink of a nervous breakdown, with everything from our own native morality to our cure-all economy, tumbling away-The president speaks to no one but tries to comfort us, with hollow phrases which no longer strike resounding chords in our vascillating psyche-And now the preparations for a "Spring offensive" are starting. Long hours have been spent scheming and organizing this Spring; one year too early to move the country's political machinery and eight years too late to stop where we started.

One is inclined towards passing the Spring in peace cramming for exams, and then working all Summer to make enough money to return. (Perhaps, a trip to Washington would break the monotomy.)

As the great debates of conscience burn in the minds of those willing to hear the arguments, much of the marching will become symbolic of the years spent marching; trying to move the political forces of a nation, whose politics have long been jaded by lack of conscience.

This is a critical Spring for this nation, lacking the leadership and goals that its people deem best. Men will be whipped into frenzied mobs under the hot-white Spring sun, urged to action, to show their colors.

The whole nation will head to the resorts and beaches this summer with a deep-set uncomfortableness about their lives. Next year the frenzy will become carnival, the great fears and debates will once again be focused on the whirlwind campaigns of those battling cyclops. And the people will emerge cleansed for the future, with vague memories of "those troubled times" we are living now.

Eh, What's Up, Doc?

I woke up with another sore throat the other day, and decided it was about time to drag myself down to the infirmary for a check-up. That was my first mistake...

Everyone knows about the forms hassle. You could be suffering from acute appendicitis, and need immediate attention, and still have to try to remember your student I.D. number. I filled one of these gems out, checking the box which indicated I wanted to see a doctor. My second mistake was not making an appointment ahead of time.

Half an hour later my sore throat was all but gone -- but I was committed. For once I was determined to go to the infirmary, get up the patience to hang around long enough to see a doctor, and actually find out that there was something wrong with me. It seemed that every time I'd go I was healthy.

Anyway, half an hour after I had filled out the sheet, my name was called. Nervous and excited, I quickly followed the nurse down the gloomy tan hallway. Rooms to the right of me, rooms to the left of me -- I felt as if I were walking into the catacombs of Rome. I was asked to be seated and a nurse came in. She read over my file, humming to herself, every once in a while raising her eyebrows up over her forehead. She read my symptoms off the entrance paper, smiled kindly into my tired face, and asked me what was wrong.

I guess she thought I had lied on the paper. But I don't give under pressure, and fed her back exactly what I'd put down in the first place. Not to be outdone, she gently jammed a thermometer under my tongue, and started asking me questions. I don't think I made too much sense, or at least it didn't sound to me that I was, what with a thermometer in my mouth, but that didn't seem to disturb her and she kept right on scribbling into my file. After a few minutes she supposed I'd warmed the mercury up long enough, and slid the thermometer out. She hummed, I squirmed. I wished that I'd been too sick to come down.

But alas, they weren't through with me yet. Next she took a throat culture (Ever had one? Don't). Then she filled out a little slip and directed me to the lab.

This is where all the fun begins -- if you havn't been in hospitals too many times you can almost imagine yourself going into surgery. A girl with a too somber face pricked my skin with a multi-pronged device -- I wasn't quite ready for that, or for the blood that started to gush out. She was calm and did a very good job of ignoring me in my moments of agony. She sent me away to wait by myself, and soon came out with the report.

The nurse had asked me to return with the lab report. I tried to -- another mistake. Besides nearly losing myself in the labrynth-like hallways, I couldn't find my nurse. I went to the main desk to tell my tale of woe, and they led me to another room to another nurse. I'd forgotten my throat, but my knees had begun to wobble. She asked me all the same questions as Nurse number one and more. She even had the same tricks up her sleeve, and when the going got too rough for her she sent me packing back to the lab, promising that after this I'd be able to see a doctor. I hopefully, but slowly, walked back to the lab. Maybe I really was ill.

This time I was ready, but so was the attendent. I wanted her to stab my left hand, but she didn't remember our last encounter, and wanted to use her training. It was only when she threatened anaesthetic when I gave in. Mistake number four. My finger bled, into the tubes and onto the slides and all over my pants and it just kept on coming and coming. I must've panicked -- the next thing I knew I was seated in front of a Marcus Welby sort of fellow. I was either my day of judgement, or I had at last gotten what I came for.

And it was over almost before it happened.

Telling me there was nothing to worry about, he busily attended to writing all sorts of intricate formulas onto a slip titled "Pharmacy." At last. My first nurse came in, smiled, and left, trying to remember where she was. I think the nurse behind the doctor (yet a third) was trying to remember who she was. She just sat there.

The doctor was finally finished. He stood up, sighed, and handed me the paper. Four items were prescribed, two hours after my entrance. I was happy at last, although sad about leaving. This place had begun to seem like home. As I was leaving I turned and asked the doctor what was wrong with me.

He shrugged, and said "Probably nothing...."

Well if he didn't know, neither did I. And as I was tearing up my pharmacy slip, I felt a dull familiar ache seep back into my throat...

Letters To The Editor

Why I'm Still Marchin'

To the Editor:

There has been a lot of printed letters devoted to peace/political groups on campus; the content of which has been slammed against the walls of our minds. We are led to believe that every group, every leadership on campus has the correct alternative and way for the peace movement. We scream prostitution by and disillusionment with such groups as the Mobe and Vets for Peace, and now the tactic is to defame individuals.

But, how committed are we all to peace; or is it just leadership and power? It would seem that if our commitment were as deep as our voices are loud and our egoes are overblown, we could make any organization work for peace.

Many of us say we were disillusioned by the May strike, by the Mobe...Look it, people, there's a little, elderly lady who has stood in the same place in Springfield protesting the war. For six years she has stood, every Saturday, in the rain and snow--maybe with only six people standing next to her; she has never forgotten how to smile. She's been verbally abused, has seen the war escalate; she is strong and alone, but she is still there in Court Square. Now, tell me about disillusionment. Most of us have the fucking gall to have never done a damned thing for peace until one spring for a couple of months and a passing cum, but because we didn't quite have our way then and because we didn't get our way as leaders now, we're going to stomp off muttering something about disillusionment and needing another alternative because someone else is doing a poor job.

Our motives are a little dishonest and over-rationalized. The peace movement has become a tool used by people who want easy power with no real responsibility or commitment but when they find more stalwart, dedicated people already in the movement and in power, they destroy the hard effort of the movement by calling for an alternative.

I'm not in YSA; I am not a veteran; and I am not particularly loyal to the Mobe. I want peace; I'm sick of war and conflict. So, I chose an organization, the Mobe, with money and a foundation and, despite the criticism, some damned good, hard-working people who want peace, too. Mr. Corry and the rest like him disillusion my hope that any of us can ever live in peace, but I have no intention of starting another group to voice and foster that hopelessness. Mr. Corry, think; you might find that you have created your own frustration. "Despair is the sickness unto death."

Simply Spring

To the Editor:

Traditionally spring is never really here until somebody reports having seen the first robin. But like all traditions alternatives challenge them. On Friday, April 9th at 3:35 p.m. an alternative to the 'first robin theory' was presented to me and I was sufficiently convinced to once again deviate from a norm and accept it as the first sign of spring. This all happened when a straggly-haired child of the universe was skipping around the campus pond and came across the last hunk of snow to be seen, which appeared to be the remains of a snowman. After releasing whatever bonds held this great white lump so firmly to the earth, the child cautiously carried this liberated mass to the banks of the remains of the campus pond and chucked it in. Then with his arms extended upward into the sun he yelled aloud. "It's spring". As the current carried this half-submersed lump pass me I threw a rock at it and spit it. Soon it had completely disappeared and I thought---it is indeed SPRING!

Are You Victorian?

To the Editor:

Through a misunderstanding, the news release about this week's Five College Victorian Studies Conference credited me with an opinion almost diametrically opposed to my actual opinion. The story had me saying that we should study Victorian Britain because it was the prototype of a technological society and "technology has dehumanized and essentially demoralized today's humanity." I don't in the least believe this last quotation. Rather I believe that technology opens up opportunities for improvements in standards of living and life expectancy which in turn make possible levels of human freedom and self-development which challenge and even threaten most conventional beliefs about society and culture. In other words, I think Victorian Britain should be studied as a source for some positive and optimistic options within the contemporary situation. People in the humanities have already said more than enough about the despair and dehumanization which seem to them to accompany industrialization and democracy. I think studying the recent past from a more hopeful perspective may actually help to make things better.

To the Editor:

There exist a brand of tea in American Stores such that it originates from South Africa and it is called "Kaffir Tea." "Kaffir" in South Africa has the same denotation as "Nigger" in the United States.

This so-called Kaffir Tea is a health beverage. It is marketed in this country by Worthington Foods Inc. of Ohio and has been patented by Battle Creek Foods. Those comrades who are into organic food are strongly urged to refrain from buying it. They should also be vigilant against any product handled by the aforementioned companies.

Name Withheld By Request

Is (AP) O.K.?

To the Editor:

The masthead of this paper proclaims: A FREE AND RESPONSIBLE PRESS." That means without bias or prejudgement, doesn't it? Then what is the reason for the constant reference to the N.L.F., North Vietnamese, Pathet Lao, Khmer Rouge and pro-Sihanouk forces as "the enemy?" Whose enemy? They're not our enemy. Are they the enemy of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian?

When the anti-Saigon/U.S. are not referred to as "the enemy," they are instead called "North Vietnamese troops." Soldiers of the Thieu-Ky regime are "The South Vietnamese." The picture is clear: North Vietnam is trying to conquer a separate country and U.S. guys are helping to defend against the aggression. Remember the State Dept. movie, "Why Vietnam," that we saw in high school? It starts out with a film of Hitler melting into a picture of Ho Chi Minh. The M.D.C. is helping to perpetrate this myth with every distorted A.P. release that is printed on its pages. (For those who might still believe this theory, here's some interesting information from The Indochina Story by a Committee of Concerned Asian Scholars: When the presence of the first batallion (400-500 men (women)) was reported on April 27, '65 by Secretary of Defense McNamara, there were already 23,000 U.S. troops in South Vietnam. This was two months after we started bombing the North.) Imagine North Vietnamese bombing the U.S., or hundreds of thousands of Chinese in Mexico.

There are other news sources: Liberation News Service, Free Ranger Intertribal N.S., College Press Service, Inter-mind. Also if you want to go so far as join the Underground Press Service, you can exchange with all the other members and get to use any of their articles or graphics.

We're at a crisis point in human history. A free, daily paper could be making a great contribution toward building a creative, co-operative community and a free university. "New England's Largest College Daily" could be more than a campus version of the surrounding largest liberal establishment dailies.

No Well Writing

To the Editor:

In response to Mrs. Calagione's letter (4/9/71) about my column, "Zeyda Layda Schiksa":

When a writer tries to communicate a point of view and fails totally to do so, when he is interpreted as holding an opposing view to what he really believes, then he is not a terribly literate writer. Although critics have a maxim--never admit that you're wrong or you'll lose credibility--I must admit that I did not communicate very clearly.

The purpose of "Zeyda Layda Schiksa" was to expose the indignities that the freshmen honors societies impose on both women and men of considerable achievement. I attempted to satarize the women's society, Alpha Lambda Delta, only because I had the joy of attending its ceremonies and not the men's.

Women should strive for the equal rights they deserve from discriminatory universities, businesses, and individuals. They should not be subjected to Mickey Mouse campfire-girl type initiation rites. Although the ceremonies are voluntary, I would have hoped that my column might have spurred the women and men of the honors societies themselves to find more dignified practices than toting doilies and candles and reciting meaningless oaths.

A favorite maxim of the School of Education's Dwight Allen is: When fording a river in India, stopping in midstream is the sure way to fail. An analogy can be made to the Faculty Senate: When talking non-stop for hours and hours, silence is the sure way to start thinking.

Harvard Grades

(Ed. Note: In light of the Faculty Senate's debates about the School of Education's Pass-Fail system and the institution of an 8-step grading system of A, AB, C, CD..., we reprint excerpts from the minority report of Harvard Law School's Committee on Legal Education, which has been debating the institution of mandatory Pass-Fail grades for all first year law students.)

1. GRADES AS EVALUATIONS---...even if one accepts the proposition that a curve-dominated grading system can provide some measure of evaluation, the problem of accurate differentiation remains. When well over half the class receives a 'b'--as is the case at this school--what purpose is served? To exalt the 'A' students? To scare the 'c's? No doubt.

But the grading system does more. It tells employers and the students themselves that yes, there is a difference between the 98 students who received a B and the 114 who received a B-. It is in the vast middle area of the curve (where, after all, most of use will end up) that the present grading system works its greatest injustices, arbitrarily separating students with similar levels of performance.

And yet there remains a more basic question: what kind of performance does an examination grade evaluate? At their best, examinations can measure a student's abilities at issue-spotting, organization and composition within a short period of time and under a certain amount of pressure...

Examinations cannot measure some essential legal skills: research techniques; writing ability; oral advocacy; administrative ability; in-depth analysis; skills in fashioning legal strategies...

2. GRADES AS INCENTIVES---If study under the Socratic method can only be generated by the sanction of a poor grade, one has to assume either that law students are basely motivated or that the Socratic method is a crashing bore...If grades are the reason we study, we're in big trouble...

Grades can act as a powerful disincentive. Take the case of a student who received relatively poor marks on his first-year June exams. He didn't make Law Review and he'll never make the prestige firm he was pointing towards; first-year grades are all important in placement applications. What incentive is now left to him? What good will it do him to recoup his losses? This school is packed with second and third year students who don't give a damn.

3. GRADES AS PLACEMENT AIDS---(The importance of grades) has been grossly exaggerated in the placement process.

A better device to determine student ability would be a portfolio into which the student could place his ungraded examination and any written work completed during the first year. There are a number of advantages to this kind of placement portfolio:

a) It would afford an opportunity for the student to demonstrate a wider, more pertinent range of his legal skills, and it would multiply the criteria employers could use to gauge his capabilities.

b) It would reduce the anxiety generated by a single-criteron evaluation.

c) It would reinforce and reward student diligence and competence over the course of the entire year.

It has been argued that grades have been instrumental in the elimination of job discrimination on social and ethnic grounds. That theory seems dubious. If an employer wants to discriminate, grades certainly won't stand in his way...

It becomes increasingly clear that anything short of a mandatory Pass-Fail system is inadequate to begin to more thorough reform of legal education at Harvard...

The present (Pass-Fail) option system satisfies no one. It is a palatable political compromise which was adapted to defuse a community crisis. It represents no coherent educational philosophy or commitment.

Dept. of Ed. To Hold 5th Spring Marathon

"Alternative Schooling in an Urban Society" will be explored at the fifth Marathon happening of what's going on in education, today through April 16th, at the School of Education.

Spring Marathon '71 will feature a talk by Jonathan Kozol, author of "Death at an Early Age," a criticism of the Boston school system. Mr. Kozol will speak Thursday, April 15, at 8 p.m. in the School of Education.

For one week, the public--from high school age and up--will be invited to attend workshops and participate in discussions which will have particular emphasis on urban education. Wednesday will be "Urban Education Day," and deans and program directors of the School of Education will discuss the relevance of the School of Education programs to education in the inner-city.

Programs throughout the week will include views of what's going on at Marks Meadow School, the laboratory elementary school for UMass education students; videotapes of schools in the New England area, films, workshops, and panel discussions.

There will be no registration fee.

Leaders of the discussion groups, workshops, and other sessions will be educators from UMass and other colleges, and other segments of society.

"Marathons over the past two and one-half years have shown that solid learning can take place in a context outside the normal course schedule and can stimulate fresh thinking about goals and programs in education," according to Dwight W. Allen, dean of the School of Education. So, once each semester, the School cancels most classes and schedules a Marathon during which UMass undergraduates may earn academic credit. The public may also attend, and in past years the halls and rooms of the Education Building have been crowded with people from the area, surrounding states, and other parts of the nation.

This year the Marathon will extend itself to lounges in nearby residence halls. Activities will be conducted from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily, with evening sessions scheduled after dinner.

A complete program of events will be available at the School of Education the week of the Marathon. Here is a partial program.

Monday, April 12--Creative Vocabulary Development, Learning to Learn Through Art, Politics of Planning a New School, Mathematics Learning Center, Are Teachers Second Class Citizens, Alternative Public Schools--by Dean Dwight Allen, Computers and Education.

Tuesday, April 13--The Lollipop Art Workshop, A Humanistic Approach to Teaching English Composition, The Educational Futures Games, Programmed Instruction, Situational Leadership, City Space for People, Why Blacks Must Control Their Education.

Wednesday, April 14--Our Children Are Not Being Reached in School. Career Opportunity Program, The School as Community, Early Childhood Education, Teacher Corps and Urban Education, The Urban Shadow Over Our Schools, Teaching English in Ghetto Schools.

Thursday, April 15--The Open Classroom Workshop, International Studies in the Classroom, Communications in Spanish, Ten Future Trends That Will Affect Teachers, Cutting Red Tape in Decision Making, Using High School Students as Teachers in the Elementary Schools.

Friday, April 16--Notions on How to Teach Poetry, Communication With the Deaf, Natural Childbirth Film, Computer Games.

Black Studies To Host Professor

Professor Jean Wiley presently teaching at Federal City College, Washington, D.C., will be visiting the Black Studies Department today. Develop. Walk Slated May 9th

A local group is sponsoring a Walk for Development Sunday, May 9th, to raise funds for local and foreign self-help projects.

The walk is part of a world-wide effort being conducted under the auspices of the Young World Development branch of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation.

The walkers will go around before the march to friends, neighbors, and relatives and ask them to sponsor him by pledging a given amount of money for each mile he walks. He will then carry a walk-card which he will have stamped along ten checkpoints spaced along the route.

After the walk, the person will return to his sponsors and ask for the money pledged for his efforts.

The funds from the walk will be turned over to the Amherst ABC (A Better Chance) program, Operation Breadbasket, the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, the Amherst Action for Development Committee, and a self-help program in an African nation.

The Amherst Walk for Development Committee urges all residents of the Five College area who can give any support, whether as walkers, sponsors, or workers to call the committee at either 546-9655, or 546-5272.

The Committee's office is at the old Amherst Junior High School on Lessey St., and walk cards and information is available there weekday afternoons and evenings from April 13 until the walk.

Travelling To Europe This Summer?

Students who will be travelling in Europe any time during the summer or next winter can save money by obtaining an International Student Identity Card.

This card entitles the holder to discounts and student reductions at some theatres, concert halls, shops and most museums. Holders of the ID Card are also eligible for the services offered by the national student travel bureaus, such as the intra-European student charter flights, student train and bus transportation, low-cost tours and holiday centers, accommodations in student hostels and meals in student restaurants.

The Office of International Programs, 229 Whitmore, is selling International ID Cards. Required to purchase them are $1.00, proof of full-time student status, and a passport size photograph.

A few places are still available on the Five College charter flights to Europe this summer. These go to Madrid, Paris, London, and Milan. Students, faculty, and staff and their immediate dependents are eligible for these flights. To obtain more information or to apply for the flights, contact the International Programs Office, telephone 545-2710.

Focus Examines 18 Year-Old Vote

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" program will examine the national and local impact of the 18-year-old vote.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests for tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be Robert Weiner of Amherst, currently Hampshire County coordinator for Youth Voter Participation of Massachusetts and chairman of the Hampshire County New Voters Committee; and Ted Laurenson of North Canton, Ohio, former Western Massachusetts coordinator of Movement for a New Congress.

Weiner, a graduate student in American Political History at UMass, also serves as an elected Town Meeting Member in Amherst and an Associate Member of the Amherst Town Democratic Committee. Laurenson, a senior at Amherst College, is doing independent study with emphasis on political science. He is presently engaged in reasearch directed toward solving the legal problems of students wishing to become registered voters in their college communities.

Among other topics, tonight's discussion is expected to cover: issues, such as the draft, which might unify 18-to-20-year-olds as a voting bloc; last week's municipal election in Berkeley, Calif., in which three left-wing candidates won positions on the Berkeley City Council; and the difficulties encountered by UMass students attempting to register in the town of Amherst.

Ford Beats GM

DETROIT (AP)—Henry Ford II, chairman of the board of Ford Motor Co., earned more money in salary and bonus last year than the board chairman of General Motors Corp., the giant of the auto industry.

Ford's leap ahead was caused mainly by the 67-day GM strike last fall. GM cancelled all executive bonuses, cutting board chairman James Roche's pay by $405,000.

Ford made $240,000 in salary and $260,000 in bonuses in 1970 for a total of $500,000, down $15,000 from 1969. Roche received only his $250,000 salary.

Tracksters Impressive Runner-ups In Opener

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Northeastern University once ahead by 28 points, was forced to come from behind in the last event to overtake the UMass track team by a 78 to 75 score on Saturday. Boston University, the New England Indoor Champions, finished out the scoring with 39 points, in the first home track meet at UMass in six years.

UMass was handicapped without the services of ace miler and two-miler Ron Wayne who was suffering from an attack of the flu. Gerry Spellman, the number one 440 intermediate hurdler in New England, also could not compete in his favorite event due to a case of blood poisoning and the flu. Even without these men, the Redmen still managed to make a serious bid at what was considered to be the number one track team in New England. What the 78 to 75 score indicates is that a healthy UMass team would have defeated Northeastern, and that UMass may now have the number one track team in New England.

There was a crowd of approximately 400 people on hand to witness the inauguration of the new Olympic track. Even though it was a dark and windy day, the crowd had plenty to cheer about throughout the afternoon, and especially in the closing minutes of the meet.

Eddie Arcaro was the outstanding competitor of the meet, leading all performers with 12 points. He added to his heroics by winning the shotput with a new school record of 51'6" which breaks his old record and also won the discus and finished third in the hammer.

The hammer was the first event of the day as Arcaro put the first points on the Redman score board. The 440-yard relay was the first running event of the day. The Redmen led throughout most of the race, but were edged out at the tape by Northeastern's Steve Hogan.

The long jump was the next event with Rip Dyer capturing second place with a jump of 21'10" while John Kamb was claiming fourth place in the pole vault.

UMass was scoring points, but was rapidly tailing behind in the meet as Northeastern led 26 to 9. It was at this point that Arcaro made his record breaking toss to win the shotput. Barney Schneider backed up Arcaro in the shot by taking fourth place from Northeastern's Mel Taylor, the New England shotput champion.

John Cherry brought the crowd to life as he kicked out the last quarter to win the mile in a 4:15.4 clocking.

Northeastern continued to pile up points as it captured first and second place in the 440. John Cecca showed that he will be heard from this season as he placed fourth in this event. The results of the 440 gave the Huskies their largest lead of the meet as they led UMass 44 to 16.

It appeared that Northeastern was on its way to another lopsided victory. The Redmen appeared to be out of contention, and were just holding their own against BU with a slim 16 to 14 lead for second place.

Things begin to change at this point as soon as the results of the javelin were made known. Rocco Petitto led a UMass sweep in the javelin. Petitto's winning throw of 196'8" was only 2 inches shy of the school record. Jim Queeney finished second with Gil Slyvia finishing third. Dennis Boisvert finished off the sweep with his fourth place finish.

The high jump was considered BU's strongest event. Terrior Dan Byron did win the event, but the next three events were taken by UMass Redmen. Ed Shaughnessy turned in a second place finish while Cal Carpenter captured third. John Osborn finished out the scoring in fourth place.

The crowd began to sense a change as the momentum swung to the UMass side. The results of the triple jump were announced, and a roar swept through the crowd. Mark Robinson led a one-two-three finish in this event as all three men cleared 42 feet. Barron Littlefield finished second with Ed Shaughnessy third placing in his second event of the day.

UMass entered the 120 high hurdles trailing Northeastern by only two points. A sick Spellman led a one-two-four finish in the hurdles. Jim Graves backed up Spellman with his second place finish while Bill Clark finished fourth. The momentum had clearly switched to UMass. The Redmen had blitzed Northeastern 36 to 3 in the last four events to take a 52 to 47 lead.

The crowd again cheered when it was announced that Arcaro had won the discus. John Homon finished fourth to increase the UMass lead to six.

Ford Dennis showed why he is an international sprinter as he easily won the dash. Walter Mayo and Stokes Hall finished third and fourth, respectively in the dash to pick up valuable points for the Redmen cause.

UMass, without the services of Spellman, took fourth place in the 440 intermediate hurdles due to the strong effort of Jim Graves.

Northeastern in an attempt to take over the lead entered Steve Hogan, Paul Horrigan, and Steve Wittenhagen in the 220. Each of these men placed in the New Englands, but it was to no avail as Redman Ron Harris won the 220 with a spectacular start.

The finish of the 880 saw BU's John Beatty edging ou Dave Evans in the last straight-away. Northeastern took third and fourth place as the UMass lead remained at three.

With Ron Wayne out of the two-mile, the pressure of the meet fell upon Tom Jasmin. Cheered on by the screaming crowd he ran an inspired race placing second to Northeastern's Billy Rowe. Doug O'Connell needing a third place finish to keep the UMass lead, sprinted the last 200 yards to overtake Joe Flynn of Northeastern for third place.

With only the relay remaining, the Redmen held a 75 to 73 lead. UMass needed a first in the relay to win the meet and a second to tie. The relay team made a valiant attempt, but lost in its bid, with a third place finish.

Pitching Leads Redmen Over AIC

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

SPRINGFIELD Behind the strong five-hit, 15-strikeout performance of Jack Bernardo, Tom King and Tom White, the UMass baseball team opened its northern campaign on a winning note, 6-2, over American International College here on Saturday. The win boosted the Redman record to 4-3.

Pitching in the same weather conditions cold, overcast and windy that both teams experienced on their southern trips, the Redman mound trio lived up to their billing as one of the top pitching staffs in the east in their initial outings up north.

Using a three man, three inning stint rotation, Bergquist was able to give his three hurlers competitive action before the schedule gets heavy this week.

Bernardo pitched the first three and allowed no runs on one hit, striking out three and walking none in a classy outing by the senior right-hander.

King came on for the middle three and threw steam at the Yellow Jacket hitters giving up only an unearned run while striking out five, walking one and giving up an infield hit.

White pitched the last three innings and combined a five fast ball with a table-top curve to strike out eight Yellow jackets out of nine outs, while issuing three walks, no hits and an unearned run.

The Redmen combined heads up base-running and timely hitting to amass their six runs.

After no scoring in the first two innings, UMass broke the ice in the third as Charley Manley opened with a walk and advanced to third on a sacrifice bunt by Jack Conroy and smart base-running on his own part. Brian Martin followed with a looper to right field, scoring Manley and giving UMass a 1-0 lead.

In the fourth Dan Esposito, who was inserted at first base to add more hitting to the lineup, made a genius of his coach as he responded with a towering home run over the right field fence and a 2-0 Redman lead.

A I C came back in the bottom half of the inning off King as the Yellow Jackets capitalized on Manley's misjudging of a fly ball for a double, a wild pitch by King and a pass ball for an unearned run.

UMass came back in the fifth for three runs. Conroy led off with a walk and stole second and third. (He had three for the game.) After Martin went out on strikes, Mark Palau singled, scoring Conroy.

Mike Sawyer grounded out with Palau moving to second and freshman Ed McMahon doubled down the left field line to score Palau. Esposito came through again scoring McMahon on a single as the Redmen combined three hits for three runs and a 5-1 lead after five.

The sixth wrapped up the UMass scoring with Manley reaching on an error, stealing second and coming home on a basehit by Conroy.

A I C scored again in the eighth off White on three walks and an infield hit.

Line scores for the game were, UMass, six runs, on nine and no errors. A.I.C., two runs, five hits and three errors.

The winning pitcher was Bernardo whose record now stands at 2-1, with Dana Westlund, the starting pitcher for A.I.C., absorbing the loss. His record now stands at 0-1.

Esposito was the hitting star with two hits including the home run. McMahon also two hits, one a double.

It should be noted that the pitching, the defense and the speed on the basepaths that coach Dick Bergquist had cited as his teams strong points after the southern swing were the keys to this win.

With nine hits the Redman offense did improve over earlier performances but it did come against a somewhat mediocre A.I.C. pitching staff.

Still the big gun that the team needed may have been found in Esposito and this can mean a lot to any batting order.

This afternoon at three, the Redmen open their home season against Tufts. Tufts is coming off of a double-header loss to Springfield on Saturday and its anyones guess as to how the Jumbos have recovered after the two games out in the adverse elements.

What can be expected from Tufts, whether it's physically ready or not, is an all out effort to beat the Redmen. Two years ago UMass romped 29-0 here and then were defeated last year 5-1 at Tufts in a world series-type effort by the Jumbos.

With seniors from the humiliation of two years back still on the team, there's still the attitude of get the Redmen on the Jumbo's minds.

For the Redmen Bergquist will be starting freshman fire baller, Chip Baye. He has had a little control problems but with good control this afternoon and with his speed he could make the afternoon tough for the Jumbos.

Bergquist expects to go to John Olsen, another freshman and senior Lou Ciliabello as the game progresses to give them competitive action as he did in Saturday's game, using three hurlers.

The starting lineup for the Redmen will remain the same with Tom McDermott behind the plate, Esposito, Conroy, McMahon and Palau in the infield and Manley, Sawyer and Martin in the outfield.

Lacrosse Team Falls To English, 12-7

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

Before last Friday no one knew exactly how good the English International Lacrosse team was. After the 12-7 beating that they handed to Garber's Gorilla's Friday afternoon, everyone had a better idea.

UMass had jumped out to a 2-0 lead in their season opener across from Boyden Gymnasium. They were controlling the action for most of the first quarter. Then all of a sudden, in a span of six minutes, the English scored seven times. From there the game was about as even as could be expected with the Redmen making a charge near the end, but to no avail.

It was all UMass at the start. Playing against an extremely quick English team, the stickmen had shot after shot turned away by the English goalie. Finally at 12:27 of the first quarter UMass got on the scoreboard. It was Charley Hardy who whipped the ball in from the left side, into the upper right-hand corner. The Redmen were up by one, and as the quarter closed out, the 1-0 score was surprisingly low.

"I think that scoring only one goal in that first quarter is what did us in," commented Coach Garber. "Their goalie came up with some great saves, he really kept them in the game. I thought that we should have had four or five goals in that period."

Period two began, and if the first 15 minutes belonged to the Redmen, the next 15 belonged to the Redcoats.

The quarter began pleasantly enough for UMass. With just six minutes gone a beautiful play gave the home club its second score. Phil Sheridan faked his man, drove into the middle near the crease and tossed the ball high in the air over to Paul Ritch. The UMass attackman caught the ball and shot it by the goalie all in one fluid motion.

Then the English made their charge, and what a charge it was. It began at 8:53 with a pretty over-the-head goal as the visitors attackman turned his back on the goal and flung it in. Within two minutes the home team's lead was no more. An English fast break left an attacker all alone on the left side, and it was knotted at 2-2.

The British kept right on coming and the tie-breaker came with UMass one man down. While UMass was still absorbing the shock of having lost their lead in such a short time, England scored again, just 17 minutes later.

The English were taking advantage of their face-off ability and after every goal it was England with the ball, off and running.

They ran well, and that is what upset UMass. Most of the time, in America at least, when a team comes down on offense they set up the attack. But the All-England players ran and ran. They didn't pass until they were in close and in that second quarter their running paid off handsomely.

It was the fast break that gave the English their final three goals before retiring for halftime. At 13:50 an attacker stood alone in front of goalie Bruce Crawford and flung in it for number five. Again at 14:37 and 14:48, seconds before the half, England found the UMass nets, and took a 7-2 lead at the break.

Half number two began as dismally as quarter number two had ended. Again, with a man all alone near the UMass net the English scored.

Finally the Redmen got back on the track. It was tri-captain Lou Marinacci that scored unassisted at 4:39, but two and a half minutes later the English had come up with two more. Ten to three England, and fans were wondering about the "best team ever" predictions.

The Redmen showed some life, as Paul Wickman cut in front of the visitors net, gathered in a Hardy pass and scored the fourth UMass goal. Then with just 14 minutes gone Marinacci scored single-handed again, faking to his left side, drawing his man away, and firing it past the goalkeeper.

End of quarter three, and UMass was still within striking range. They had gathered momentum, but at 3:08 of the final stanza, that momentum came to a halt. The eleventh English tally just about wrapped it up and as time ran out on UMass goals by Gannon and Wickman (the latter's second of the day) only served to make the final score a bit closer.

They were quick, they were accurate, they found the open man, the English were impressive. If UMass had gotten those four or five goals early in the game, who knows. But there are 12 games ahead for Garber's Gorilla's to show why they were ranked 11th in the nation in pre-season polls.

The whispers of doubt around campus will grow, at least until their next game. One loss like this certainly won't shatter anyone's dreams, and won't seriously hurt the Redmen's bid for the NCAA's.

Speaking on the present state of the University and the problems it faces, Umass President Robert C. Wood addressed the Faculty Senate yesterday. (MDC Photo by Ed Fenwick)

Wood Sees UMass In Relatively Good Position

By BARBARA ANN CLEARY
MDC Staff

President Wood was the speaker at a special meeting of the Faculty Senate yesterday.

Wood touched on a number of broad topics concerning the present state and future direction of the university.

Wood said that he and the trustees felt it was important to visit each campus. "I don't feel as isolated as I did when I began visiting from the Amherst campus," Wood said.

At his last talk here, he said, he stressed that University life in general is in a perilous condition today. However, Wood felt that UMass is in a comparatively good position.

He cited what he felt were grim, disturbing trends at the University of California and in the Midwest. UMass, however, is a singular exception to these trends, Wood continued.

The budgetary suggestions of the Governor continued to move the University forward, according to Wood. However, he stressed, there are certain unusual problems this spring, because the budget proposal will come before the tax increases in the legislature.

Wood also stressed that programs for the disadvantaged should hold top priority in the budget. Commenting on the proposed tuition hike, he said that simple increases in tuition were not the answer to budgetary problems. He also said that it was encouraging that the committee reported adversely on a cluster of bills concerning tuition increases.

In further commenting on the present state of the University, Wood said that he found relations with legislators and administrators cordial and friendly.

Wood also said that even though we are relatively well off today, purposeful innovation is needed to forestall destructive revolution.

He cited certain fundamental changes which are necessary, one of these being a change at the graduate level. Wood explained the preoccupation with defense and space, and some of the bad results from this. The basic dilemna, Wood felt was correcting these conditions and getting involved in educational activities related to peaceful concerns.

"We must show that we are sensitive to social needs", continued Wood. Now the arts and humanities will achieve a new significance, and there will be new interdisciplinary action, he said.

There is a debate going on today over a deliberate, selective, search for priorities, said Wood. "It is necessary to examine our capability to respond to our environment", he continued.

Wood also examined some of the future possibilities for the University. He mentioned the recent advances in the School of Education as an innovation, and as an example of advancing with experiment and risks.

The President's Office wants to be associated with special projects, he continued. He cited the need to put thought and energy and resources into the dilemna of black and white. Wood also mentioned the need for a fresh look at organized labor.

Wood reassured his audience that all this was a redirection, not an abandonment of traditional inquiry.

Wood discussed the emerging organization of the University, also. The President's Council will soon propose a system of carefully delegated powers covering the Trustees, the President, the Chancellor, etc.

The future strategy of the University, especially growth, was also an important issue, said Wood. He felt that the size and structure were determined by outside forces and pressures more. He emphasized that before we are well into the next academic year, far reaching, crucial decisions will be upon us.

For assistance in this he is looking to the Future of the University Committee. They are dealing with complex problems, and discovering new information. Wood asked for cooperation and assistance in the discussion which will follow the committee's report.

Wood concluded by saying that the University continues to go forward. Crucial decisions will be made in the next few weeks by legislators, the President's office, the trustees, and in the Faculty Senate. He asked for help in their mutual interest and common concern.

In the question and answer period following, Wood expressed support for efforts to get faculty back into the classroom, subsidization of humanities, and developement of residential learning opportunities. He said, however, that the issue of an all University Senate was a campus issue and expressed the feeling that experience in Boston makes the Trustees and him ready for anything.

What To Do--Just In Case

By EDWARD FOGARTY
MDC Staff

All interested in becoming medic marshalls are invited to attend a meeting Wed., April 14 in room 802 of the Campus Center. This meeting is compulsory as they will be taught how to handle the equipment they will use.

The Student Mobe Committee has bought enough supplies for 30 people. Each person will be supplied with gauze pads, tape, and a water bottle. It is requested that people supply their own cutting utensil and water container.

"Any person is eligible to become a medic marshall, so long as they can keep their cool under pressure," said Mark Rosoff, Medic Marshall Co-ordinator.

"The person who has been hit by tear gas usually feels like he has the flu and is very angry. It is up to the medic marshall to calm this person as well as attend him," he said.

Rosoff said that the most important function of the medic marshall was their presence. They serve to relax the tension of the crowd and calm down dangerous situations.

"The type of person we don't want is the one who will over-react. This will only serve to create more tensions in the crowd," he said.

In recognition of the medic's peace keeping role the Washington Police have agreed to give them special consideration along the march route. They will be given fast notice of troubled areas and directed to these areas.

"This type of consideration is contrary to that received in Chicago where medics were beaten, if they were at the scene of any action," said Rosoff.

Co-ordination of the various medic groups is being taken care of in Washington by Dr. Randy Cope of the Medical Committee for Human Rights. There will be three or four first aid stations along the route. Doctors and nurses will be available at the stations and on the streets.

"We can't foresee trouble this year. If the crowds go where they're supposed to, then there is no reason for violence," said Rosoff.

Last year's violenee was a result of confusion. Two lines of police were squeezing against a crowd of people and shot tear gas into the crowd. The poliee were actually pushing against each other, although they didn't realize it, he said.

The type of tear gas used last year was pepper gas, a weak tear gas. Nothing stronger is expected to be used this year.

N.E.S. Recruiting Soon

The N.E.S. Coordinating Committee will hold two meetings tomorrow in the Campus Center. The purpose of the meetings are to recruit volunteers but for two different reasons.

The first meeting will be held in room 177 of the Campus Center at 5:45 PM to discuss with interested students the possibility of their working with the N.E.S. Committee as a full time member. The second meeting will be held in the NES office room 104 at 7:00 PM for students interested in participating in two field trips this Spring involving tutees from the NES centers.

The first field trip planned will take place April 24. The destination and the activities that will occur will be discussed at the meeting. Interested students who have approached the NES committee should attend this meeting. Any interested tutor wanting to plan an outing with his or her tutee should also attend this planning meeting.

A bus will be chartered so hopefully there will approximately be 30 to 40 children from Springfield looking to wear you out and cover as much ground as possible. So if you're looking to loose a little weight come to this meeting.

The meeting to be held at 5:45 PM is the regular coordinating committee meeting which has as the main topic of discussion new faces and new blood. The ideal person to drop in on this meeting would be a tutor with a few more years left at UMass.

There are specific tasks shaping up in the organization which will need people to fill them. One such task would be that of an educational librarian who not only catalogues things but also writes up brief instructions or game descriptions for such things as cuisenaire rods.

Essentially, if you can imagine the organizational needs of a tutoring program then the type of work a volunteer will do is self explanatory. It is serious work and it almost means putting academics in a second rate position, possibly where it belongs.

Therefore, if you are interested in belonging to an educational program organization or joining in on a Saturday romp please attend the respective meetings tonight at 5:45 PM in room 177 and at 7:00 PM in room 104 in the Student Activities area in the Campus Center.

Draft Counselor's Corner

One More Deferment

By GILBERT SALK
MDC Staff

In past columns I've discussed the hardship deferment for cases of financial hardships. There are two other hardship conditions which may qualify a registrant for a 1H—A deferment. These are emotional and physical dependencies.

If anyone is either emotionally or physically dependent upon you to the point that your absence would constitute a severe hardship, you may well qualify for this classification. These conditions are sometimes hard to document, but let's look at the general categories to give you an idea of the approach.

Let's say, for example, that your father is dead and your mother is an invalid. She is not bedridden, but her doctor has confined her to the house and forbidden her to do any hard work. If she is dependent upon you to do the housework or shopping or to take her to the doctor for checkups, you may have a hardship situation.

To document this ease, you would first need to get a letter from her doctor stating that he has restricted her to the house, deseribing her condition. You should next get a letter from her stating her condition, that you have been performing certain chores for her, and that she would be unable to find (or, perhaps, pay) anyone else to do the work. Additional letters from people who are familiar with the circumstances (such as relatives, clergymen, family friends, social workers, etc.) would help strengthen the case.

Of course, if there are others who could do the work in your place, this would not constitute a hardship situation. It is important to note here that the dependent does not need to be a relative. If anyone is physically dependent upon you in any way for any reason, see a qualified draft counselor to diseuss the situation. You may qualify for the 1H—A hardship deferment.

The emotional dependency is probably a slightly more common one. If your being drafted would cause somebody extreme emotional upset, you may qualify. A cautionary note: This does not mean that if your girl will cry when you get your notice, you don't have to go. The key word in this case is "extreme." Usually, this means that a nervous breakdown or some psychosomatic illness is likely to develop if you are forced to leave.

Again, this is not limited to members of the family. Documentation is necessary, however, and must establish two things. First, it must demonstrate that there is a true dependency relationship. Then you must prove that some extreme emotional reaction is likely to occur.

This is obviously easier to do if the individual has had some history of emotional problems and has been treated by a psychiatrist and/or hospitalized in the past.

If you feel that you may qualify for such a deferment, see a draft counselor. Both of these eategories are tricky to document, and you should have competent advice. PEACE

Award Committee To Meet April 20

By DEBBIE BERNSTEIN
MDC Staff

Richard Conklin, Assistant to the Provost, has announced April 20 as the first meeting of a committee in charge of submitting recommendations of nominees for the Distinguished Teachers Award. This committee, a division of the University Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate, is chaired by Glenn Gordon of the department of government.

The Distinguished Teachers Award is funded by Standard Oil of Indiana. Usually three recepients are chosen, eaeh receiving a grant of one thousand dollars. Winners for 1970-71 were Mr. Caldwell Ray of the department of economics, Bill Wilson of the department of sociology and Dick Garber of the Physical Edueation Department.

The committee is now in the process of soliciting nominees from students. An opinion sheet will later be circulated to colleagues, department heads, deans and students of the teachers.

While eaeh committee is in charge of setting its own criteria for the nominees, they have in the past been evaluated in six categories. These are:

His ability to stimulate students through challenging ideas and effective communication techniques.

Knowledge of subject matter in his discipline.

His ability to interpret and relate the results of contemporary scholarship through his teachings.

His ability to relate to students and colleagues in such a way as to advance the general purposes of the academie community.

His interest in counseling students.

Consistent, distinguished, teaching record for a period of years.

Any other criteria considered equally or more important by those filling out the opinion sheets is also taken into consideration by the committee.

Conklin, seeretary of the committee, urges students to nominate teachers they feel fulfill the above qualifieations. This can be done by submitting the name of the faeulty member and a short supporting statement, ineluding what he teaches and other general information, to either Gordon in the Government Department or Conklin in the Provost's Office. The deadline for nominations is April 23.

Winners of the Distinguished Teachers Award will be announeed at 1971-72 opening Convocation.

KAT Wins 'Sorority Sing'

By TED HAYKAL
MDC Staff

An evening of light voices and harmony was presented last night at the 28th annual Sorority Singing Concert sponsored by the UMass Panhellenic Council.

First place winners were Kappa Alpha Theta with their selections of "A Time For Us" and "Jesus Christ, Super Star," directed by Bonnie Poremba. Kappa Kappa Gamma took second place honors with "The Windmills of Your Mind" and The Beatles's "With a Little Help From My Friends." Susan McCarthy did the directing for the second place winners.

"Stone Soul Picnic", and "The "Stone Soul Picnic," and the "Declaration of Independence," under the direction of Carol Desantis, brought third place honors to the group representing Sigma Kappa.

Judging was done by Miss Kathy Stencel and Mr. Newton Miller on the basis of appearance,choice of numbers, and performance.

Performing during the judge's deliberation were the Music Gals who were enthusiastically received by the girls attending the annual event. They sang a number of selections such as "Soon it's Going to Rain," "Save the Country," and "I Believe". While they were singing "Side by Side," the audience joined in the singing.

Dean Curtis, Dean of Women, presented the first place winners an award of a silver platter inscribed with the name of their sorority.

Janice Camoe introduced the Sororities and the guests during the 1 1/2 hour Sorority Sing.

Also participating in the performance were girls representing Sigma Sigma Sigma, Chi Omega, Iota Gamma Upsilon, and Lambda Delta Phi.

Penobscot Bay-"Shipwreck Alley"

BELFAST, Maine (AP)—Belfast Hlabormaster Robert Young told the Environmental Improvement Commission Monday Penobscot Bay "would become shipwreck alley" if Maine Clean Fuels, Inc., is allowed to build an oil refinery on Sears Island.

Young cited the combination of heavy tanker traffic and the hazardous navigational aspects of the bay.

His testimony came during the sixth day of the EIC's public hearings on the controversial proposal to build a $150 million oil desulphurization plant on the 1,000-acre uninhabited island.

Maine Clear Fuels has applied to the EIC for permission to construct the refinery complex on the Penobscot Bay island. The commission has the power to veto any industrial development of more than 20 acres that might endanger the environment.

Young also said MCF's proposed ship channel would require continuous dredging to accommodate the giant tankers bringing oil to the refinery.

Young, who is also a lobster fisherman, told the commission that even small oil spills would destroy lobster eggs.

Carston Peterson of Jonesport, a retired harbor pilot, testified that the approaches to Penobscot Bay are the most dangerous on the Atlantic coast.

Proponents of the project testified at the earlier sessions, which began in Searsport March 23. The closing sessions have been scheduled to allow the EIC to hear testimony from those opposing the refinery.

Petitions with the names of more than 23,000 Penobscot Bay area residents were presented to the commission Monday.

Harold S. Pachios, attorney for the Coastal Resources Action Committee, handed EIC members copies of resolutions passed by 11 nearby towns opposing the proposed refinery.

Russia's Role Worries U.S.

WASHINGTON(AP)-The United States expressed serious concern Monday over Russia's growing role in the defense of Egypt, implying the latest Soviet arms shipments could upset the Middle East cease-fire.

The State Department, setting forth offieial anxiety over the situation, also sought to put pressure on Israel for some new peace move toward Egypt.

A spokesman implied that the lack of progress in peace negotiations was to some degree responsible for the latest Soviet shipments.

Press Officer Charles Bray told a news conference:

"We're keeping careful tabs on the most recent flow of Soviet equipment to the United Arab Republic Egypt so we may have some idea of its effect on the military balance and because of the implications that this kind of action may have on the present cease-fire conditions in the area."

Officials told newsmen that the United States must be alert to a military buildup at a time when progress has slowed down on the negotiating front. These officials said that the greater Soviet involvement in Egypt's defense is the latest evidence of the dangers of big-power confrontation in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Bomb Law Being Tested

The constitutionality of a law which prevents a student from receiving finaneial aid and work study if the student has been convicted of making bomb threats to university property is presently being tested by the University against a UMass student.

The student, convieted for a recent bomb seare, has had a hearing concerning the following Federal law:

"No part of the funds appropriated under this Act shall be used to provide a loan, guarantee a loan, a grant, the salary of or any renumeration whatever to any individual applying for admission, attending, employed by, teaching at, or doing research at an institution of higher education who has engaged in conduct on or after August 1, 1969, which involves the use of (or the assistance to others in the use of) force or the threat of force or the seizure of property under the control of an institution of higher education, to require or prevent the availability of certain curriculum, or to prevent the faculty, administrative officials, or students in such institution from engaging in their duties or pursuing their studies at such institution."

"The University has taken action to determine whether this section will apply to the recent case of the person who made bomb threats," said Student Senate Counsel, Richard M. Howland.

"The Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts is representing the student in the present case," Howland continued. He also called attention to the fact that "the regulation may apply, and be found constitutional, which will add to the burden of penalties already enforceable under federal and state criminal laws."

Student Dies In Tower Fall

A UMass freshman, Philip Burke of 413 James House, fell to his death early yesterday evening from Washington Tower in Southwest.

Burke, a psychology major, lived at 14 Chestnut St., Gloucester. His death was ruled an apparent suicide by medical examiners. Burke's parents were reportedly on campus at the time of his death.

According to a University spokesman, Burke apparently fell from the twelfth floor lounge onto the hood of a car parked on the Fearing St. side of Washington.

In The Nation And The World

Israel Offers Partial Mid-East Settlement

(AP) - Egyptian officials turned down Monday a suggestion by Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Dayan to withdraw Israel's troops from the Suez Canal under a permanent cease-fire and agreement that no Soviet or Egyptian troops will cross the canal.

The Egyptians insisted their forces must occupy positions on the Israeli-held side of the canal.

"Egypt will accept nothing less," officials in Cairo said. "We have nothing new to add. Our position has been clarified by President Anwar Sadat's restatement of April 3."

Sadat, in his restatement, defined the partial withdrawal of Israel's forces from the Sinai Peninsula as the first step toward relinquishing all Egyptian territory occupied since 1967. Sadat said he would then reopen the canal.

Sadat also said Egypt would promptly cross the waterway to "assume its national duties" as Israel withdrew.

Dayan, who put forth his idea Sunday at a news conference in Tel Aviv, said any partial pullback "must lead to the comprehensive settlement for which we are willing."

Authoritative sources in Cairo described Dayan's suggestion as a "partial settlement which Egypt cannot accept anything less than total settlement," they said.

Cairo emphasizes that it requires Israeli evacuation of all occupied areas, including territory in Syria and Jordan. It also requires restoration of "Palestinian rights" in an equitable settlement of the refugee problem-something which has elluded world statesmen for years.

Dayan apparently envisaged some sort of demilitarization of western Sinai to be patrolled by international forces.

Sadat, who has said April will be Egypt's "month of decision" on peace or war, met in Cairo Monday with heads of state from Sudan and Syria in a "minisummit" of Tripoli charter states.

Strong man Muammar Kadafi of Libya, the fourth member of the Tripoli charter, bowed out of the sessions without explanation at the last monent and, instead, dispatched two members of Libya's Revolutionary Council, Maj. Abdel Salam and Maj. Abdel Moneim Elouini.

The Tripoli charter was negotiated and signed a year ago by the late President Gamal Abdel Nasser with Libya and Sudan. It envisages the eventual confederation of member states. Syria later joined the charter.

The chiefs of state hope to consolidate policies in case current peace efforts collapse.

Temporary Increase In Air Fares Approved

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Civil Aeronautics Board authorized Monday a temporary 6 per cent increase in domestic air fares and the airlines indicated they would put it into effect May 7.

The board moved also to permit the airlines to raise the increase to 9 per cent within 50 days.

Since that proposal is subject to the filing of exceptions, there could be a delay in its effectiveness, or even a reversal of CAB decision.

Hence the interim 6 per cent increase, which the board said it was granting "because of the immediate and pressing need for fare relief and the sizable losses being experienced by the carriers."

The 6 per cent and 9 per cent increases both apply specifically to coach, which is the basic fare. But since the relationship of coach to other fares remains unchanged, the same increases will apply to all the other fares.

The increases are for fares only in the 48 adjoining states, a CAB spokesman said. International fares, and fares to and from and within Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and other outlying areas remain unchanged.

The value of the fare increase to the industry was difficult to compute because of uncertainties as to whether all airlines would go along with the full increases permitted, and as to what changes might be in prospect in volume of traffic and in the general economy.

CAB Chairman Secor D. Browne said estimates of the added revenue expected from a 6 per cent increase range from $115 million to $400 million, for a one-year period.

Last year the trunk airlines lost $97 million, and the local service airlines lost $57.9 million.

Edward E. Carlson, president of the nation's largest domestic airline, United, called the CAB action good news indeed.

Ceylon Gov't Accelerating War With Guevarist Rebels

COLOMBO (AP)—Government forces heavily outnumbered on the ground have stepped up their air war against the Che Guevarist rebels who are still reported in control of Ceylon's outlying jungle and plantation regions.

There was increased air activity over Colombo Monday and the government announced aerial attacks on the terrorists in Kosgama and Waga, rubber plantation districts near the city.

Occasional air raids by twin-propeller craft with a machine gunner leaning out of the side to enforce curfews in the ancient Singhalese capital of Polonnaruwa were reported by travelers returning to Colombo.

Two large Soviet-built aircraft were sighted on the tarmac at Bandaranaike International Airport, believed to have been brought from India to help the hard pressed government.

An Air Ceylon Trident jet has been shuttling British ammunition from bases in Singapore for the past five days.

Informed sources in London said Britain is supplying restricted quantities of small arms and ammunition to the army, which is largely British-equipped.

Both the United States and Britain are reported considering a request from Prime Minister Sirimavo Bandaranaike for helicopters. The United States already has agreed to supply spare parts for the four American helicopters in the Ceylon air force.

The American flag vessel R. V. Melville from the Scripps Institution at San Diego, Calif., remained at anchor in Colombo harbor for what its crew and scientific staff said was a possible evacuation of Americans at the embassy's request.

The government reported several clashes with the insurgents Monday, claiming 20 terrorists were killed in a battle at Balle, in the north-central region of the country.

Government forces appeared to have the rebel activity in Colombo, the capital, under control, and military supremacy of several areas occupied by the guerrillas was reported re-established.

According to informed sources, military authorities have seized secret documents outlining plans for an attack Tuesday or Wednesday by the insurgents on Colombo.

Nixon Tax Plan Charged "Inflationary"

WASHINGTON (AP)-A former chief of White House economic advisers said Monday President Nixon's multibillion-dollar tax break for business could be inflationary, would actually hurt investment in the near future and should be withdrawn.

"This looks to me like wrong tax cut in the wrong way at the wrong time," said Walter W. Heller, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President John F. Kennedy.

Doubts about the legality of the plan "will have a chilling effect on investment plans, thereby reducing the economic impact of these proposals," Heller said.

He joined a well-coordinated chorus of opposition to Nixon's proposal to speed up tax write-offs for depreciating equipment at a 20 per cent faster pace, a system that could cost the Treasury $36 billion over the next 10 years.

The opposition is led by consumer advocate Ralph Nader, Democratic Sens. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine and George McGovern of South Dakota, a public-interest tax lobby called Taxation With Representation, several private economists and some union leaders.

Heller, now a professor at the University of Minnesota, said the proposal will cause no big rush to accelerate investments and will take a long time to achieve its stated purpose of stimulating the economy.

"Indeed, after starting out slowly, the plan would reach its peak in revenue loss and economic thrust just about the time that demand inflation will again confront us," he said in a statement.

Heller's position was announced as the Nixon administration prepared to release on Tuesday its third "inflation alert," a White House exposition on wage and price movements.

Instead of Nixon's depreciation plan, Heller favors reinstating the 7 per cent investment tax credit.

Nixon announced the new depreciation changes early in the year, and administration officials have said they will go into effect basically unchanged despite a May 3 public hearing on the proposals.

The opponents are attempting to force the administration to withdraw the regulations, submit them to Congress and try some other route to boost the economy. Nader announced plans last week to launch a legal attack against the move.

Aid Coming For Viet-Vets

WASHINGTON (AP)-Contending the nation owes its Vietnam veterans an extra measure of help, President Nixon announced Monday a $1-million program to attract disadvantaged veterans to expanded GI bill job and education benefits.

Nixon said the Office of Economic Opportunity program is aimed at direct contact with the 350,000 Vietnam-era unemployed veterans by cadres of former GI's from poor backgrounds who are now studying under the GI bill.

"We owe these men a debt of gratitude for their service-but we also owe them something more," the President said. "The dismaying fact is that unemployment among Vietnam-era veterans still is significantly greater than it is among non-veterans in the same age bracket."

The programs-administered for the OEO by the National League of Cities and the U.S. Conference of Mayors under a $1,016,375 OEO grant is to start in low-income and blue-collar neighborhoods in 10 cities on a demonstration basis.

Details were spelled out by government officials and veterans involved in the program after an hour-long meeting with the President.

Former infantry Lt. Robert Penn, a Negro who already has been trying to attract disadvantaged veterans to GI bill benefits in his hometown of Buffalo, N.Y., said the primary beneficiaries of the GI bill have been men with high school educations.

"Somehow they're not reaching the less advantaged," Penn said.

"What we're going to try to reach is the high school dropout. Veterans can talk to veterans better."

The cadres of former GI's already taking advantage of GI bill benefits are to recruit disadvantaged veterans not only for on-the-job training and education under the GI bill but for other programs including rehabilitation for drug-addicted men.

The cadres, said OEO director Frank Carlucci, will conduct their out-reach work in the ghettos, slums and the barrios.

Carlucci estimated that more than a million low-income Vietnam-era veterans are eligible for GI bill benefits but many are not taking advantage of them and often don't know about them.

James F. Oates, Jr., head of a Jobs for Veterans Program created by the President last October, said 350,000 veterans now are unemployed.

Carlucci said the pilot project to recruit them for GI benefits is to be conducted in Los Angeles, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago and Indianapolis and five other areas to be announced later. He said the project is cosponsored by the National Urban Coalition.

Psych Dept. On Move

The $582,000 National Science Foundation Grant just received by the psychology department is "an indication that the department is ready to move to a position of real strength in research and graduate education," according to Prof. Richard T. Louttit, head of the department.

The award was made this week by the National Science Foundation and will support training of graduate students in the social science aspects of psychology.

It will enable the psychology department to increase its faculty and its number of graduate students. Other funds will provide for hiring technical and support personnel and obtaining equipment and supplies.

According to the National Science Foundation, the $582,000 supports an area in which UMass already has significant doctoral level strength to serve as a base for further improvement.

Part of the University's support is a new psychology building, Tobin Hall, expected to be ready for occupancy in fall, 1972.

To be supported by the National Science Grant are the five social science areas of the psychology department--cognitive processes, personality psychology, child psychology, educational psychology, and social psychology. The other two areas of the department, clinical psychology and biopsychology, currently have training grant support from the National Institute of Mental Health.

Development of the grant application was done under the direction of Prof. Seymour M. Berger, head of the social psychology area of the department.

The psychology department grew to its present status under the leadership of Dr. Mortimer Appley, now dean of the Graduate School.

Potters Display Their Wares

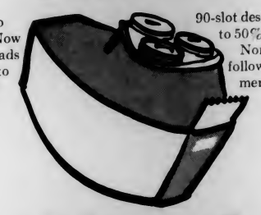
Ceramic Invitational has brought the works of 10 American artist-craftsmen to UMass April 9-30.

On display in the Herter Hall gallery from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday will be ceramic creations which include one of clear glass with neon gas light; two glass beer mugs; a doughnut with expansion joints; an earthenware "temptation pie;" and a fired clay, sand-filled weather balloon.

The artists are: Dale Chihuly, an assistant professor at the Rhode Island School of Design; C. Fritz Dreisbach, resident artist at the Penland School of Crafts; Erik Gronberg, associate professor at the University of Nevada; Nancy Jurs, former teacher for the School of American Craftsmen and College of Continuing Education; Rodger Lang, associate professor art at Metropolitan State College in Denver; Timothy W. Mather, assistant professor at Illinois State University; David Middlebrook, assistant professor at the University of Kentucky; Donald L. Reitz, associate professor of ceramics at the University of Wisconsin; David Shaner, full-time potter in Bigfork, Montana, one of only six known occupational potters in the United States; and Robert C. Turner, acting chairman of the art department at State University of New York, College of Ceramics.

The show was organized by Jim L. Wozniak, associate professor of ceramics. It is open to the public without charge.

Powell Criticizes Gov't Intervention



NEW YORK (AP)-The president of the Associated Press Broadcasters Association, Thomas Powell, criticized Monday the congressional subpoena on the Columbia Broadcasting System in connection with its production of news documentaries.

"It is in the splendid diversity of America's professional news sources that we should look for correction of any abuses of the editorial function and not to members of a government agency attempting to set itself up as an arbiter," Powell said.

Untitled Eulogy

You get up in the morning and look in the mirror, go through the day and you still feel nothing. Everything's there in front of you but you can't feel it, you can't touch it, it isn't real. There's nothing you can do about it. You sit in the Hatch and wait, but after a while you realize, you know, you can feel it and it hurts, they're not going to come to you because you look sad and lonely.

It's different when you can at least feel something, but you can't remember when the last time anything touched you was. It might have been the moment your roommate came in drunk and told you that you were a hot shit and you went to sleep feeling good. But you woke up the next day and he had forgotten what he had said and no matter how anxiously you looked at him, he just complained about his head.

You try and you try to fix it so you feel good about something but the problem is that you don't know what you feel bad about, so you just drift and drift, you go from place to place and you get a little bit interested in one thing and another but they all turn out the same and you wonder why you even bothered. You look back and think there was nothing in it for me anyway. But even so, you still can't stop thinking that it was your fault, you were the one who didn't fit in, that nobody liked or even listened to. That hurt, You go to the dining commons with the guys on the floor and you're always at the end of the line. There's always someone behind you but you never see him.

So what do you do? Maybe you accept it and after a while you realize it wasn't so bad and that you're getting along all right now, so what was the problem then? Or maybe you let it build up and up and it's too big for you to handle by yourself. Then you're in trouble and you're all alone. There's no one to turn to but yourself and when you turn, you find you don't even care yourself....

The Chancellor's Chastity Belt

Oswald Tippo is normally a very cranky man on Monday mornings, and even his wife's poached eggs and Irish coffee do nothing to ease the beginning of the week for the Chancellor. So it was, to say the least, unusual to see the Chancellor bouncing into Whitmore yesterday morning with a big smile across his face.

Oswald Tippo had read the newspaper and had seen the A.P. story which, he felt sure, would end his headache over the proposed increase in UMass tuition.

The story read like this. "By official decree, chastity belts are not safety devices and so are subject to taxation in Britain. The customs office has classified the belts as "minor items of apparel," which makes them taxable."

This was a great day indeed for the University. For, as every Whitmore administrator knows, the sole reason behind the legislative drive for an increase in tution is the State's need for additional revenue sources. The chastity belt scheme, if enacted in Massachusetts, might pour enough new funds into the State Treasury, and make a tuition increase unnecessary.

So Tippo ran into his office yesterday and called Bob Wood, who runs the University from his office in Boston. Wood, who is very political, liked the idea, and said that he would talk to a friend of his in the State Legislature.

But Wood's suggestion of the chastity belt idea didn't thrill the legislator. "Who in hell is going to buy a chastity belt today," the legislator questioned? Wood came up with the idea of launching a major advertising campaign which would read something like, "Strap one on for the State."

But the legislator didn't think that this would go over too well either. So Wood called Tippo back and said that he didn't think the legislature would go for the idea of not increasing tuition and taxing chastity belts instead.

Now, Oswald Tippo is smarter than the average administrator, which probably makes him smarter than the average State legislator. Tippo came up with an idea yesterday afternoon, an idea which all the legislators in Boston will probably buy, an idea that will put the chastity belt idea to use and will keep the tuition hike to a minimum.

Tippo reasoned that the University can charge all students a Chastity fee at registration, of say perhaps $15, and then just forward this money right to Beacon Hill. All students must pay University fees without questioning them, and thus there would be no moral arguments that could come up in Tippo's use of the chastity belt idea.

Tippo also feels that the Chastity tax will please some parents, and promises that no students will be exempted from the tax. The whole idea pleased the Chancellor so much that he took his wife out to dinner last night and told her about his idea.

But, like all great, progressive thinkers, Tippo often gets some flack from his wife. Emma Tippo told Oswald she didn't like the idea and asked, "Will there be an additional charge for a key?"

The Greatest American Export

By JIM MORAN
MDC Staff

A prof I have here claims the greatest American export to the world is the hot dog. Well, taking into consideration the man and the attitude the statement is easy to excuse, but the events of recent days makes one wonder.

Lt. William Calley is a man accused, and convicted of murder. He was found guilty by a Military Court of Justice for the murder of 22 Vietnamese civilians, and sentenced to life imprisonment at hard labor. William Calley is a soldier. How in hell can the man get a fair trial by a Military Court. The man should have been tried by a civilian one.

This isn't to say that the man is innocent. It's to say that I don't believe any man (Calley in particular) should be subject to justice as administered by the military. How is it possible for a group of people with a vested interest in a particular career to try one of their own for such a crime as murder, murder that stigmatizes that group. It can't.

The greatest claim to the efficiency of military justice is that it is immediate. But in that immediacy can the rights of the individual be guaranteed? Let's put it another way. Can a group of five officers, and one enlisted man, all career men, judge a short time enlisted man? Can a group of boy scouts try another boy scout for raping an old lady?

It's interesting to note that now some of the jurors of the Calley trial want to change their vote. What kind of bullshit is that? How in the hell much longer are we going to let American Citizens, with every right that that title is supposed to guarantee, be tried by such undemocratic organization as the military?

We like to picture mankind as steadily pulling himself towards freedom. Always the individual is better off today than what he was in the past. If that's true then it's time to offer equal justice to all men, Calley included.

Our illustrious President showed his faith in military justice, when he said he would have final word in Calley's sentence. If he has no faith in the so-called justice then who does.

While we're on the subject of Captain America did you happen to hear what they are investigating now? A C.B.S. documentary called 'The Selling of The Pentagon'. Somebody hurt the poor generals' feelings, and somebody is going to try to scare hell out of somebody else. Give them the finger, and show them a copy of the Bill of Rights.

Something else before I conclude. Why doesn't Dick retire J. Edgar Hoover? The man was appointed by Calvin Coolidge more than 47 years ago. He can't have that much on that many people.

The job of director of the F.B.I. is an appointed one by the President. But the same man keeps getting reappointed. I don't want to put Hoover down. He's done a lot for us before most of us were even born, but if it is true that the F.B.I. is listening in on the phone calls of the Congress then they ought to get that guy out of the business. It's time for him to retire anyhow.

That's it for now. If you like the column let me know. If you don't, keep it to youself. At least I write about something that I hope stimulates you.

On The Road With Kerouac

After I saw Blow Up I had to go out and get some white jeans. Now I've got the bug to throw a few things in a bag and disappear for a while. For a long while. The feeling's been accumulating, I've done a little thumbing and some driving around the country, but when Casey and I got back from the South, he said "Burger, there's a book you've got to read." Casey's in the Guards now, I drove him out a few nights ago, but just before he left he gave me a copy of ON THE ROAD by Jack Kerouac. I've just put it down and I've got the bug to leave again.

Although I'd never read anything by him, Kerouac's spirit was with us as we sometimes thumbed, drove and walked from here to the City to Philly to Chicago, where we got the car (from a used-car dealer named Leonard, who's also my father) and then south to New Orleans and Florida, stopping at garages until we got almost back; D.C. at rush-hour sunset, New York again then almost as far as Worcester until the car gave up for the last time and we had to borrow Casey's cousin's truck to tow it in.

Kerouac had come, Casey told me a few times, from Lowell which is near Chelmsford where he lives. What a great man, Casey kept saying and I just myself found out.

ON THE ROAD is the most autobiographical tale of chases by car and by thumb and bus, from one coast to the other by one of the first freaks. Sal Paradise, moderating, floats back and forth from New York to California and back again, eating apple pie with ice-cream because it has at least some nutrition and tastes good, drinking, smoking, making it with the honeys. Once he says that the prettiest girls in the country are in Desmoines, Iowa. I don't believe it but Casey was right and I laughed and laughed and when they went to see the hootchy-kootchy girls in Chicago I laughed some more, because that's what Leonard calls them.

Most of the time Sal travels with Dean Moriarty who drives like a maniac, races Cadillacs at 110 mph, steals cars when he can't afford or borrow them, has wives and babies all over the country and - Casey says - is based on a real life person who hung around with Kerouac and Allan Ginsberg in the Fifties, then drove the bus for Tom Wolfe while acid was legal and who now is dead. He really drove like that and like Casey says you just can't pull that stuff for too long before it catches up with you.

Along the way they look occasionally for Dean's father who is a hobo somewhere. Spooky enough when Dean says to Sal that one day they, too, will die the death of a hobo. Spooky because just recently the author died a broken, sick and poor man.

I asked Casey's dad if he had known Kerouac. "Not personally," he said, "but people around here didn't like him. He was a dirtbike and a no-good."

That he may have been, and it may have been reason for his landsmen to reject him. But Kerouac was one of us. So much so that I can't get him out of my system.

Letters To The Editor

Only Hurting Themselves

In the 4/12 Collegian, there was an interview with Mr. Neil Mulligan, concerning several lawsuits against the Student Senate. I think that Mr. Mulligan should check some facts before giving "exaggerated information."

First is the case of Senate President Elters. The article contained the reason why a non-undergraduate may be the president because it protects him/her from potential expulsion or ejection from the University community by the administration. It is not the meaning of the law to leave the job open in perpetuity for someone, as Mulligan says. However, anyone who knows anything about government/politics (senate or otherwise) should realize that no one can be (or will be) "Student Senate President forever."

Second is Mr. Mulligan's objections to, and reforms for student government. The Senate, as a whole, acts as the legislature entirely. The Senate officers act as the executive branch. They do so through a communication and a practical necessity. We have to remember that we are not a minature Washington, D.C. We don't have the communications lines, the facilities, or the people to have a Presidential cabinet entirely separate from the Senate. Mr. Mulligan also proposed doubling the size of the Senate, as it "hasn't changed since we had 4,000 students." This is another gross exaggeration. When we had 4,000 students, we had about 20 Senators. We now have over 80 Senators (1 Senator per 150 students).

Next, Mr. Mulligan has said that the Senate is proposing a $13.50 increase per student, in the Student Activity Tax. Again, Mr. Mulligan please update and check your facts. In early March, the Chairman of Senate Budgets Committee (in another MDC Interview) said that the Tax may go as high as $50 per student. This is now more than a month later, and you'll find that the figure is down to $40.50, as reported in last week's MDC. (In addition, the class tax has been dropped). This figure may further dip, depending on this week's budget hearings. These meetings are Tuesday and Wednesday, and shall be open to the public, as usual.

Finally, Mr. Mulligan says that the Senate has the authority to do anything that is legal, providing the action is not against state or federal laws. If you look at the facts, you'll find that the Senate has scope over certain areas, with "restrained powers".

I think Mr. Mulligan should remember one thing that seems to have been overlooked: the Student Senate is composed of students, and is elected by students. You'll find students of almost every political belief, with almost every academic major. Student Senators have no desire to do something that will be detrimental to students. Why should they want to hurt themselves?

John Hogan, Senator

Any Suggestions?

To the Editor:

Wednesday I was in the Campus Center where there were many grown ups in formal attire and name tags. Feeling playful, but sincere, I smiled at many of them over a period of about two hours. Every one of them had the same reaction, stare and quickly snap their head away. Later on a friend and I quietly walked into the Campus Center Auditorium and sat down to try to grok the meeting taking place (Massachusetts Principals Conference). The room was half-filled with suits and tags, and their manner was very bored. They were voting on a motion. We were then asked by a monitor if we were members of the conference. We quietly said no and then were asked to leave. Our egress was trailed by the monitor repeatedly saying, "I'm sorry, I'm sorry". The energy in the room was very noticeable. Anyone who happened to notice our being there stared and looked away nervously...almost wishing someone would do something (ashamed?) which the monitor did. Now I'm an education major and I never saw so many 'hard core' educators in one place and to tell you the truth, if I'm fortunate enough to have a child, I can't see letting him (her) be raised by wooden stick-people. Someday most of you will give them control of your child. Any suggestions?

Rediculously Small

To the Editor:

Sometime soon go to Boston. Go to Egleston Square station and take a Stuart Street bus. Ride down Columbus Ave. and look around you. See the dirt and the ugliness, the overcrowding, the poverty. Imagine what it is like to be raised here, where every stranger is an enemy, where the senses are rubbed sore and raw by the ugliness and the noise. See those who have managed to survive with incredible dignity and love. But see also the human beings ruined by their surroundings, driven to drink, to drugs, to violence, to cynicism.

Then ask yourself why this is allowed to exist; what it would be like if the billions poured into defense, into napalm and atomic bombs, into virulent bacteria and choking gas, into more and more sophisticated military and police techniques and armaments, were poured into the city to make it a decent place to live. Pick up the paper and read how the Kennedys, the Rockefellers, the Fords and the Vanderbilts live.

Now tell me that the enemy is Communism. The enemy is the Soviet Union, the Vietnamese people, Allende, Castro, Mao Tse-tung. Now tell me this is a classless society with opportunity for everyone.

You know what I'm Saying? Let's go to Washington and say it. The three demands of the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice are:

1. End the war now.
2. A guaranteed annual income of $6500 for a family of four.
3. Free all political prisoners.

Three ridiculously small demands considering the robbery and brutalization that goes on every day.

Gerald V. Gillespie

Don't Care Enough

To the Editor:

Concerning the letter of Mr. Robert A. Corry in the 6 April edition of the MDC: How could a few "interchangeable flunkies" invalidate an otherwise valid peace movement supported by 1700 veterans, or even one-half that many. The conspicuousness of a few veterans who also belong to other "invalid" peace movements is a result, not of their joining the Veterans for Peace, but of Mr. Corry and 1449 others NOT joining.

The Veterans for Peace have not been very stringent in their membership requirements. They have asked only that members be veterans and that they oppose a continuation of the war in Indochina. Because of this, members have been known to also be members of MOBE, of the Episcopal Church, of the Democratic Party, and even students at UMass.

I suggest then, that the reason the Veterans for Peace is not a "valid" peace group is that we older veterans really don't care enough to make it one.

And, by the way, I don't remember hearing shouts against Imperialism at the Veterans for Peace meetings, only of grave concern for a mistake our government, a government we favored strongly enough to support by joining its armed service, is making in Indochina.

My Finger On It

To the Editor:

If this letter is published it hopefully will fulfill one of my course requirements whilst I pursue the fleeing M. Ed. degree. I do this not out of respect for the course but rather out of respect for the powers that be. That is, for the people who have been given the power (or who have taken the power - whatever your view may be) to grant degrees by or from and to niggers like you and me.

And if you powers and instructors that be think I think you know something I think I should know you're wrong but I do think I think I know something you don't know because what I think I think I know I don't think you know or you would not think I think you know something I think I should know and if I ever put my finger on it, I'll keep it there.

Dennis J. Kolodziejski

A Mere Token

To the Editor:

One Senator (Kennedy) and four Congressmen (Boland, Drinan, Harrington, and O'Neill) from Massachusetts have joined in sponsoring the Vietnam Disengagement Act of 1971. The rest of Massachusetts' delegation must be encouraged to support this attempt to reassert Congressional authority.

Seventh-three percent of the people want the US OUT of Southeast Asia by the end of this year. Congress will listen...if they're convinced we mean it. Letters (with home addresses) are certainly worth the time and postage.

A mass demonstration April 24th will be more meaningful if it is seen as a mere token of the opposition to the War. Write today. March on the 24th.

Editorial Points

Yesterday was the kind of day when UMass really bares its hairy chest to the sun.

If UMass' political awareness was at a level equal to the rate of consumption for intoxicants people wouldn't be wondering "What could happen if Amherst went the road of Berkeley."

No matter how you look at all the options presented by Vice-Chancellor Campion for increases in board and room rent, it still's going to cost us more to live here.

The ultimate insult: "You may be small...., but you're weak."

This editorial points column has really taken off, and your neighborhood daily now rejects about 30 "points" each day. But keep writing in. We like student humor.

Associated Press reports that U.S. planes are dropping 7 1/2-ton blockbusters on North Vietnamese besieging Fire Base 6. For such a small country, North Vietnam must have some awfully huge blocks.

Awful Lot Of Manure

To the Editor:

May I add my comments to those of Gil Salk in the March 31 Collegian. He says "You are what you eat...We need to give serious thought to what we eat, and release old ways of food production which will help us to stop polluting our bodies..."

He's got to be kidding!

Such nostalgia is touching but the old ways of food production are a guarantee of mass starvation on a grand scale. The increase in population grinds inexorably on and worldwide food production is racing frantically to keep up. The "green revolution" in agriculture has bought approximately ten years as a breather. The fantastic successes in hybrid corn, dwarf wheat, short-stemmed rice, sorghum, millet, etc. which have increased yields as much as ten-fold are a real tribute to the dedication and talent of the scientists who have accomplished these miracles. Yet one theme is common to all of the crops above. They have been genetically designed to take advantage of the potential of massive applications of fertilizer in order to accomplish their increases in yield. The world is in a veritable revolution in fertilizer usage. With it goes an increase in the use of chemicals for crop protection. The President's Science Advisory Council has prophesied a six-fold increase, world wode, in the next 20 years, in the use of pesticide chemicals. The increase in fertilizer use may well be much more than this. Many experts sincerely doubt that even this will be sufficient to avert widespread famine.

Mr. Salk makes a plea for organic gardening. Fine! I agree. They are 50% correct. The use of mulch and organic debris for soil conditioning is admirable and highly desirable. However, when a case is made against chemical fertilizers and pesticides, the organic gardeners should realize that they are now in the home garden hobby area and should not make any serious claims in feeding the world or even this country. One example may be sufficient. In order to get an optimum corn crop in the corn belt (200 bushels/acre), 200 pounds of nitrogen fertilizer per acre is required. This is equivalent to 20 tons of barnyard manure per acre. If you multiply this by the 12,000,000 acres in corn alone in the U.S., it makes an awful big pile of manure. For one crop alone! Where do the organic gardeners expect to get sufficient organic fertilizer to produce the food required for this country alone?

A return to the old ways indeed! Today, we have approximately 1 1/2 billion people too many to even consider this. At the present rate of increase by the year 2,000 we will have 4 1/2 billion too many for a return to the old ways. The energy involved in considering nostalgia for old ways of food production might be better spent in propaganda for population control. Think about it! We have encountered the interest in organic gardening in a new course, F.S. &T. 101, "The Struggle for Food". Hopefully we can put this in its proper perspective!

Mental Health--A Service For Students

By PAULA PAVELCSYK
MDC Staff

The University Health Services are not all housed within the walls of the Infirmary. The Mental Health Service, in the midst of its frequent movings, has made the third level of Machmer Hall its home since last August. Earlier homes were the Infirmary, Brooks House, and Arnold House. The most recent hope is that the Mental Health Services will, after dwelling in a soon to be built separate prefab building temporarily, make its permanent home in the new Infirmary.

The Mental Health Services were established around 1960, with Dr. Julian Janowitz as the first staff member and director of the service. About two-thirds of the work has been individual counseling and therapy, although group therapy sessions have been conducted, as well as dormitory talks about topics like drugs, sexuality, and general mental hygiene. Such talks were carried on by community counselors in the past.

The Service used to involved in a counselor training program for dorm counselors. This vital training helped counselors to recognize and understand emotional and psychological problems. Today, the work consists mainly of individual therapy for university students, carried on by a staff of two psychiatrists, seven psychologists, and one social worker.

Most of the students who visit this department are self-referred, however, some are referred by Infirmary physicians who feel that their patients' medical problems are the result of tension or anxiety. Other referrals come from heads of residence and friends. The staff sees some 1500 students a year, most of whom begin counseling in somewhat depressed or anxious states. Nevertheless, most of the patients are not "mentally sick" in the opinion of Dr. Cann, one of the staff psychologists. However, a few students are quite seriously emotionally disturbed. For many students, one to four one-hour meetings with a staff member suffice to help them overcome their problems, although others may need more meetings, and some require medication and/or a few days in the Infirmary. In such cases the advantage of on-campus treatment is evident--a "disturbed" person can continue his role as a student. Some of the problems encountered are suicide attempts, feelings of depression, and identity conflicts.

The role of the Mental Health Services in the drug problems on campus has been mainly the dormitory talks that were conducted in earlier years. The fear of having authorities discover the use of drugs by an individual is the main obstacle to the student seeking help. Some drug users, of whom there are quite a few on campus, still think that the Mental Health Services is the kiss of death for them. This fear, however, is ungrounded, because all records are kept strictly confidential. Information is released only with the students' written permission. Parents are not notified when a student visits Mental Health Services for a drug problem or any other reason. Implied is the understanding that the student himself will discuss his situation with his parents if they express concern. The University Administration and law enforcement agencies honor the Mental Health Services' confidentiality policy.

The University Mental Health Services exists for the welfare of the students.

The staff members basically act as the patients' agents and work to get their clients to feel more comfortable with themselves and at times to become aware of new dimensions of their being. Unlike the hard sciences, a science of behavior can not always produce observable, tangible, material results. The improvements in a patient's emotional and psychological state are often subtle. Inherent in psychotherapy is the belief that a person has the potentiality to adjust himself, improve himself, and become aware of himself and his relation to the society around him.

The Mental Health Services hopes not to simply mold the student to the "establishment." Nevertheless, one of the criticisms of this service has been that it is an establishment organization. Many students are unsure on the topic of their future and the question of how to establish themselves in society after graduation. The freedom and lack of inhibition on this campus, although it has many good points, may create fears and problems for students on the threshold of leaving college life for the cold cruel world outside academia. There is concern about the gap between college life and the outside world and anxiety about life and the draft. In these aspects, psychological counseling can help a student become more comfortable psychically with himself, and this may mean becoming more confortable with the outside world.

A study was made on the majors from which the patients at Mental Health are drawn. Students from English, psychology, sociology, philosophy, and related liberal arts majors comprise a higher percentage of mental health patients than other majors; the differences are small but significant. According to Dr. Cann, it may be that there are fewer students from the "hard sciences" and engineering because of the level of concreteness that these majors offer. The more amorphous, vague, and undelineated the program of study, it seems, the harder it may be to form a concrete view of the world. This is tied in with a searching sense of what is going on in oneself. On the other hand, science majors relate the objectivity of their majors to their view of reality.

One's view of the world and of oneself could be made more stable and "real" by modern psychology. The Mental Health department is on campus for the service of drug problem students who have confused thinking, or observable psysiological effects of tension or anxiety. When in doubt about yourself, consult your nearest Mental Health agency. Call 545-2337 for an appointment.

Door-Knocker Asks Freedom

BOSTON (AP)—Stephen F. Krasner, 22, of Englewood, N.J., petitioned the Supreme Judicial Court Monday to order his release on bail pending his appeal from a year's jail term for making a battering ram used to smash open a door at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Superior Court Judge Henry H. Chmielinski imposed the sentence after a jury convicted Krasner in Middlesex Superior Court last week. The judge denied bail pending an appeal.

Krasner was convicted of making a steel pipe battering ram which four persons used Jan. 15, 1970 to smash down the door of the office of MIT President Howard W. Johnson. About 50 persons, some of them students, occupied the offices for 36 hours, protesting disciplinary measures taken earlier against some students.

The indictment against Krasner originally was dismissed in Superior Court, but the state appealed, and the Supreme Court upheld the contention that the ram was a burglar tool.

Krasner received his degree in architecture from MIT last September. The battering ram was made in the metallurgy department in a class conducted by a teaching assistant in metal sculpture.

Law Series Continues Tonight, Topic Is Equal Housing

The second in a four-part series to explain rights and responsibilities under the law will be Tuesday, April 13, from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Amherst Regional Junior High School Auditorium.

Springfield attorney David Burres will speak on "Equal Opportunity Laws in the Sale and Rental of Housing." A member and former chairman of the Hampden County Civil Liberties Union, he is commissioner for the Western area of the Massachusetts Commission against Discrimination.

The Tuesday evening sessions are co-sponsored by the UMass Center for Business and Economic Research, the Amherst Continuing Education Division, the Hampshire County Board of Realtors, Amherst Human Relations Council, Amherst Housing Authority, Amherst Chamber of Commerce, Citizens Review Commission, the Hampshire County Civil Liberties Union, and the Hampshire County Bar Association.

The course, which is free to the public, is designed to inform people of Amherst and surrounding communities what the law says about duties, rights, and responsibilities regarding employment, housing, police-community relations, and the court system.

Spanish Club Presenting Film Festival

Beginning April 13, the Club Hispano in conjunction with the Department of Hispanic Languages and Literatures of the University is pleased to present a spring FILM FESTIVAL. The series consists of 3 films in Spanish and 1 film in Portuguese, all with English subtitles.

Tuesday, April 13, the Brazilian film "Vidas Secas," adapted from a novel by Graciliano Ramos, will be shown at 8:15 p.m. in room 227 Herter Hall. This film deals with life in the backlands of Brazil.

Wednesday, April 14, at 8:15 p.m., the Mexican film "Subida al Cielo," will be shown in 231 Herter Hall. This film, directed by the renowned Luis Bunuel, is the story of a mother who is dying, her son who has just been married, and her two other wonderfully psychopathic sons who scheme to get the inheritance.

Wednesday, April 21, at 8:15 p.m., the Spanish film "La Caza," will be shown in 231 Herter Hall. This anti-war allegory by writer-director Carlos Saura, reunites four old war comrades on a rabbit hunt in the hills where they had formerly fought. Each man has changed and as the film progresses the self-interest and brutality of each is revealed.

Wednesday, April 28, at 8:15 p.m., the Spanish film "Miguelin", which won the Children's Film Award, at the Cannes International Film Festival in 1965, will be shown in room 231 Herter Hall. It is a film for and about children, specifically, Miguelin, a little boy who devils the Sacristan of the village cathedral to teach him his Latin responses so he can become an altar boy.

Tickets may be purchased at the door or in room 416 Herter Hall. The price for students is 50¢ per film or $1.75 for the series. The price for non-students is 75¢ per film or $2.75 for the series.

For further information call 545-2887.

Bruins Deadlock Canadiens; Host Hopeful Habs Tonight

BOSTON (AP)-The Boston Bruins, confident the adrenalin is flowing once again, were back in the role of favorite yesterday after trying their best-of-seven National Hockey League playoff series with the Montreal Canadians at two games apiece.

"It was a great game to win," Defenseman Bobby Orr said after the Bruins squared the series Sunday night with a 5-2 victory in Montreal. "It means we came home with a lot of confidence."

The Bruins, who blew a four-goal lead in a 7-5 loss in the second game and then bowed 3-1 in the third, trailed the Canadians 1-0 in the second period before Orr took charge in the fourth meeting.

Orr tied the score with a backhanded swipe at the puck and went on to connect for two more goals, becoming the first defenseman in the 44-year "modern era" history of the Stanley Cup playoffs to register the "hat trick."

The Bruins, who set all kinds of scoring records during the regular season, were frustrated by rookie goalie Ken Dryden for three games before they broke loose.

"It was our best game of the series," Boston Coach Tom Johnson said. "We held Canadians to 12 shots on goal in the first two periods and any time you do that you have to be playing well."

After defeating Montreal in five of six regular season games, the Bruins figured to breeze past the Canadians in the first round in defense of the Stnaley Cup.

However, Dryden, a 6-foot-4 All-American at Cornell last year, has been tough for the Boston sharpshooters. He has made fantastic saves, particularly with a quick glove, in robbing the Bruins.

Dryden, who was on the bench in favor of a sixth skater when Boston scored its fifth goal Sunday night, is expected to be back in goal for the fifth game in Boston Garden Tuesday night.

Gerry Cheevers will remain in the Boston net as Johnson plans to stick with his "hot" goalie the rest of the way. Veteran Eddie Johnston, the victim of the second game blitz, was relegated to backup duty.

Johnson also announced that Mike Walton will remain at left wing, replacing Wayne Carleton on the third line with Derek Sanderson and Eddie Westfall. Walton had one goal and helped spark the Bruins Sunday.

With Oklahoma City eliminated from the Central League playoffs, the Bruins recalled defensemen Bob Stewart and Ron Plumb, center Ivan Boldirev and left wing Don Tannehill for standby duty during the remainder of the NHL Stanley Cup series.

The Virgo person, although generally restless, is capable of absorbing details. Those born under this zodiacal sign can fool themselves, but it is difficult for others to pull wool over their eyes. These people can capture subtle nuances. They usually are aware of fine print. Virgo is drawn to Capricorn, often marries Pisces and can have brilliant conversations with those born under Scorpio.

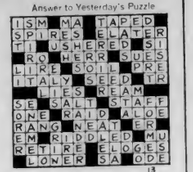
A's Win

MILWAUKEE (AP)—Joe Rudi and Rick Monday blasted third inning home runs and Roland Fingers pitched a four-hitter, to give the Oakland A's a 5-0 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Monday.

Rudi led off the third against Lew Krausse with a shot over the left field fence. Two outs later, Sal Bando was hit by a pitch and Monday socked his second homer of the year.

The A's added two runs in the ninth on Don Mincher's double, a single by Bando, a ground out and Dick Green's single.

Fingers, in complete control from the start, gave up a single by Danny Walton in the second inning, then held the Brewers hitless until the seventh.



The game was delayed twice by rain-for 25 minutes before the start and for 52 minutes in the fifth inning.

Redmen Trample Jumbos 25-0

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

Next time, the Jumbos from Tufts University should send their football. The visitors, playing as though this was their first appearance on a baseball diamond, absorbed a 25-0 bombing from the Redmen yesterday in a game played at Varsity Field.

UMass, very nearly replicating its 29-0 shellacking of Tufts two years ago, couldn't do anything wrong. When again, the Jumbos didn't do all that much right.

Capitalizing on a host of walks and seven Jumbo errors, the Redmen also added some timely hitting to run up the astronomic score.

UMass had 14 hits on the day, including two grand slam home runs, which must be a record for a Redman team. Dan Esposito, connecting for his second round-tripper in as many games, blasted the first grand slam in the second inning. His clout followed a run-scoring single by Mark Palau and a walk to Ed McMahon. Espo jumped on the first serving by Tufts' John O'Kane and sent it some 400 feet over the right-center field fence.

Mike Sawyer had chipped in with a bases-clearing triple in the first inning, and Espo's homer and a few unearned runs gave the Redmen a 4-0 lead after two frames.

After UMass had added single tallies in the third and fourth frames to increase their lead to 12-0, the game settled down somewhat with Rich Taylor for Tufts and Redman John Olson pitching well. Olson in accordance with Coach Dick Bergquist's pre-game pitching plan, had replaced starter Chip Baye in the fourth inning. Baye, the promising freshman, boosted Redman hopes considerably with a fine performance. He gave up only one hit in four scoreless innings while striking out three and walking two. Baye displayed good speed and a good curve in his stint.

Olson, although not quite as fast as the hurler he replaced, exhibited fine control in his three innings, giving up just one walk while striking out four.

The score remained 12-0 until the bottom of the seventh inning when the home team exploded for 10 more runs, the highlight being a grand-slam home run by utility man Dan Kelly. Kelly's blast, like Esposito's cleared the right field barrier and came with Jim Saracino, Hosea Kelly and Brian Martin on the basepaths and with already six runs across for the Redmen.

Colabella followed Olson to the mound in the eighth inning and retired the last six men in order, thus completing a combined two-hutter by the three UMass hurlers.

UMass completed the scoring in the last of the eighth with three runs to make the final 25-0.

Eleven men got into the hitting column for the Redmen as Bergquist substituted freely after the fourth inning. Mark Palau, Mike Sawyer, and Esposito each had two hits apiece.

At last report, the University of Connecticut is bringing a baseball team to Amherst Wednesday, a real good one at that. So it won't be soeasy, but then at least it will be a true test of how far U Mass baseball is going this season.

Spring Spotlights New Weekend Heroics

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Saturday will go down in the annuls of UMass sports history as the day of the big man. On the baseball diamond at A.I.C., on the Connecticut River at Wesleyan and at the first home track meet in six years, the heroics of the big man stood out in a day marked by the adversity of the weather and the excellence of Redman efforts.

At A.I.C., the Redman nine was spearheaded in their victorious northern opener by the pitching of 6'1 Jack Bernardo, 6'3 Tom King and 6'6 Tom White and the hitting of 6'5 first baseman Dan Esposito.

The three jurlers limited the Yellow Jacket hitters to only five safeties, two of which were of the infield "bleeder" type and one was on a misjudged fly ball.

Fifteen A.I.C. batters went down on strikes and it seemed as the heights of the pitchers increased, the strike out victims increased per pitcher. Bernardo had two, King five and White finished off with eight.

Esposito supplied the Redmen with the big stick in the batting order that the coaching staff has been looking for. He had two hits, one of which was a towering shot over the right field fence.

On the Connecticut River, the UMass crew team won its opening race in convincing style over the Coast Guard Academy and Wesleyan, the home school and a team in the Redmen had not defeated on home waters in the half dozen years of its existence.

Averaging over six-feet tall and almost 200 pounds per man, the crewmen performed with the strength, speed and skill that will undoubtedly mark their racing form throughout the season.

This is the biggest, fastest and best crew team to ever row for UMass and by the season's end these bright and brawny athletes will have made their presence felt in the big Regatta's and Championship races.

After six years, a home track meet was held at UMass on one of the finest track facilities in the nation and certainly the best in New England.

On this day the UMass weightmen did something that track experts in the Boston area would never even dream of happening. They put it to the Northeastern strong men and in a very convincing manner.

To bring out the true accomplishment of the UMass weightmen it should be noted that over the past decade the Northeastern weightmen have been the most feared and respected group of track athletes in New England. Any talk of Northeastern track always centered on the big men.

During this time the Huskies produced many shot putters and weight throwers of national prominance and going into Saturday's meet, Northeastern was sporting a nationally ranked hammer thrower and the New England champion in the shot put.

As things turned out, Eddie Arcaro scored 12 out of a possible 18 points which is a perfect weight performance for a meet. He broke the school mark in the shot of 51' 6" and in so doing drubbed the New England champ.

Rocco Pettito led a UMass sweep in the javelin coming within two inches of the school record at 196' 8".

Add to these two individual winners the second, third and fourth place finishes of Jim Queeney, Gil Sylvia, Dennis Boisvert, Barney Schneider and John Homan and one can see the magnitude of this stomping of the Huskie strong boys.

In the spring it often seems rare seeing big men win the appaudits of so many. Usually big men are equated with the basketball and football seasons.

But this and probably many other spring weekends and weekdays will belong to the big men of the UMass spring sports teams.

Oarsmen Labeled N.E. Power; Cop Pair of Races Saturday

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

MIDDLETOWN, CONN.--After finishing in second place in the first two races, the UMass oarsmen fought the current, wind and waves for the top honors in the last two races. It was coach Mike Faherty's varsity combination of one of Kurt Betchick's freshman teams who overcame the very impressive Coast Guard Academy crews, as Wesleyan University's Cardinals were totally out of every event on a very windy, brisk, cloudy Saturday afternoon. The Redmen proved themselves to be a strong New England power, a team their opponents will have to work hard to beat.

Things began somewhat discouragedly when the Redmen's slower rate of stroking gave them no chance to catch up to the strong Coast Guard freshmen and junior varsity boats. This low stroking is accredited to the delay of beginning practice on the water this year because of bad weather.

At the start of the first race, the Coast Guard frosh gained a half boat length lead over the Little Redmen. Slowly UMass got to within a one tenth boat length of the lead, but a steaming sprint in the final portion brought CG a 6:14 timing. UMass crossed the finish line at 6:20.5, and poor Wesleyan stopped at 6:29.5.

While Coast Guard was stroking a 34 or 35 per minute, the UMass freshmen, untrained by shorter water time, rowed at 32. The red ribbon team's seating was: Bow, John Gombar, 2, John Curtis, 3, Russ Schott, 4, John Lund, 5, Richard Clair, 6, Jim Kennedy, 7, Philip Kennedy, Stroke, Kevin Kaylor, Cox, Jody Lianides.

The 1500 meter course led the shells relatively straight-away upstream into a stiff current, piercing headwind of about 16 knots, and moderately rough water which caused lower times.

In the junior varsity event, Coast Guard quickened to a half length on the UMass jv's in the starting sprint where CG's firing 43 strokes per minute was opposed by the Redmen's 34. When the race settled down to 34 1/2 for the Guard and 30 for UMass, the Redmen's strength kept bringing them close to the lead, but the five extra strokes was too wide a margin to give.

Also suffering some hard times in rough water, UMass finished at a 31 beat, closing in on Coast Guard and lost first place by only a half length, where five extra strokes should have figured for two lengths of a lead. There was no trouble beating Wesleyan, as the times read: Coast Guard, 6:11.5, UMass, 6:13.6, and Wesleyan, 6:20.4.

Downed by two seconds were: Bow, Paul Winchell, 2, Mel Strein, 3, Clay Morin, 4, Doug Thompson, 5, Chris Hodson, 6, Kevin O'Brien, 7, Rick Jones, Stroke, Steve Kinner, Cox, Bob Jayes.

The strongest boat ever to come out of UMass' Crew Club, in averaging 6'2" and 197 pounds, lined up with Dave Richard at bow, Al Flanders at 2, Joe Piela at 3, Tom Mone at 4, Bill Moran at 5, Robert Weimar at 6, Ted Fitzpatrick at 7, Jeff Allen at stroke, and Chris Jedrey the cox, captured first prize in the varsity race, which proved to be the fastest and most exciting competition of the day.

Cut down to only three participants because the grads from the M.I.T. Boat Club were scratched beforehand with early news that they could not come, Coast Guard was looking for a clean sweep of the meet. However UMass' varsity surged out to an early lead rowing at a 37 tempo while Coast Guard was at 42. The bulk of the race saw the Redmen leading all the way but still understroking, 32 to CG's 35. About 1000 meters through, the coastal protectors closed to near a half length, but a UMass power 20 sped them to a length in front, and the last 200 meters were rowed at a 34 pace. Wesleyan's varsity was left behind in open waters in the first 400 meters, making the event a two-boat race. The shortest times of the day were: UMass 5:46.1, Coast Guard 5:47.8, and Wesleyan 5:54.6.

The enthusiasm and joy of winning their first race hit the other Little Redmen shell when they crossed the line at 6:50 after starting off four boat lengths ahead of the third varsity and freshmen mixed Coast Guard crew, which ended at 6:59.5. Mark Brown, Rich Jamara, Jim Ulwick, Joseph Labenski, Chris Kudla, Steve Ryan, Fred Scalese, Bob Sanderson, and Mike Thompson were collapsing in the seats of their pocock from a thrilling exhaustion.

Both coaches were pleased with their wards' showings, but expect to do some rearranging for this Saturday's meet against Syracuse an Georgetown.

"As the season's opener, we looked impressive, and are probably established as the crew to beat in New England. I think Syracuse and Georgetown should look out for an upset," were Coach Faherty's closing remarks.

New England's Innovative School of Ed

The Massachusetts Alternatives

Weather: "Here comes the Sun."

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, SCHOOL OF EDUCATION, AMHERST TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 1971

DEAN DWIGHT W. ALLEN: "Please study the programs described in the following pages. Note that they are quite different from one another. They reflect our assumption that your collective needs, desires, styles and goals are varied. They reflect our observation that pressing social needs can be met in a variety of ways. They also give a clear indication that teacher education is no longer perceived as a peripheral concern of this School of Education."

UMass School of Ed Makes New Commitment To Teacher Ed

The School of Education of the University of Massachusetts has committed itself to improving the preparation of teachers. Two months ago, the School created the new Teacher Preparation Programs Council (TPPC) with broad powers and resources to encourage the involvement of all Centers and all faculty and graduate students in teacher education.

Appointed to TPPC were two undergraduates, one graduate student, and six faculty members. Membership was deliberately limited to nine to keep TPPC small enough to be workable and effecient. Members' names are: Richard Clark, Chairman; Norma Jean Anderson, Jon Ball, Paul Chandler, Reginald Damerell, William Fanslow, Michael Greenebaum, William Read, and Horace Reed. Associate Dean Earl Seidman is an ex-officio member.

Immediately after being formed, TPPC requested all Centers, faculty and graduate students to originate new programs and propose them to TPPC. The result is a remarkable array of programs approved for the coming school year.

The rationale for having alternative programs from which students can choose was given by a TPPC spokesman: "No school, no educator, nor state certifying agency can recommend one program, or one series of courses and experiences as being the best way to prepare to teach. The variables are too numerous and too changing."

Elaborated another TPPC member: "One variable is the students, themselves. None is alike in interest, personality, life style, or goals. A program suitable to one may be entirely inappropriate for another. By offering alternative programs, the student can self select the one which is most in keeping with his or her interests and aims."

One of the criteria established by TPPC for evaluating programs is the program's ability to make closer connections between educational theory and actual practice. In all the programs approved by TPPC, both components are handled by the same faculty and staff. Courses, workshops, seminars, and practice teaching are all experienced within self-contained programs.

Internships, pre-practicums, tutorials, field experiences, and externships have been greatly expanded in most alternative programs because agreement is virtually unanimous and universal among teachers and faculties of all schools of education that the greatest learning takes place in off-campus classroom experiences. Practice teaching in some programs is done as far off campus as California, and even Europe.

Because individual programs have limited enrollment, the School of Education is advising students to seek admission to his program of choice well in advance of preregistration.

Each alternative program is reported in detail on the following pages. Close attention should be paid to program prerequisites where applicable, and the specific means of gaining admission.

Pre-Teachers To Live Semester Off Campus

The educational experience of on-the-job training, implementation of educational change, communication with other teachers and administrators in "real" job situations, life away from the University; these are the components of the Off-Campus Teacher Educational Program.

Realizing that much of a new teacher's education comes while trying to survive on his first job, the Off-Campus Program allows a student to experience many of the alternative educational situations, difficulties in implementing new methods and ideas, and general problems of "field survival" that a new teacher faces, while the supervisior, evaluation and resources of the School of Education are still available to him.

With the focus on actual field experience, the program will be divided into three phases.

The first, entitled the "Pre-Practicum" phase may include up to six credits. Included will be a series of lectures on foundations, not necessarily a semester-long course, but tailored to various field needs; a supervisory seminar, using microteaching clinics for self-help; discussion of alternative structures, designed to give general knowledge of present changes in education; seminars on field survival, designed to help students realize the "real life" situation in the field; and an intern-extern seminar, which will allow externs to help pre-interns train for their coming intern experience and will allow externs to meet with faculty to help evaluate the total program.

The "Practicum" phase of the program will be a semester-long off-campus experience including up to 15 credits. Practice Teaching will be arranged in a number of identified schools and school districts throughout the U.S., Canada, and England, which have unique problems that are of keen interest to many students. The practice teaching experience will vary greatly depending on the school program selected by the student. This semester will also involve peer supervision, utilizing concepts learned in the micro-teaching clinics, with periodic reports to the University. Weekly seminars with the cooperating teachers and the staff of the school and one-week workshops on site in the off-campus centers will also be part of the practicum semester.

Bill Bybee and Bill Fanslow. Fanslow is the Director of the Off Campus Program, Director of the Office of Field Experiences, a member of TPPC. He received his Ph.D. in Secondary Education from Stanford University.

The "Post-Practicum" is the final phase of the program involving about two credits. This phase will also allow an extern to involve himself in other courses and experiences at the School of Education to round out his experience.

The program will involve 150 students in the field per semester - generally first semester seniors and juniors, but not limited to those two groups. Under-graduates may be included, particularly in the pre-practicum phase as early as their sophomore year. This program meets all Massachusetts Certification Requirements. Beginning with Spring, 1972, all participants must have at least one semester on campus after their field experience.

The official name of the program is "Off-Campus Teacher Education Program K-12." Further information about the program, or about admission to the program may be obtained from William Fanslow or William Bybee.

Young Husband-Wife Team Offer Low Structure "Explorations!"

A one-year teacher education program has been created for students who do not want or need a structured program, but who are willing to get involved with themselves, with others and with the schools to try to bring about some change. Directed by a young couple, Marsha and Jeffrey Goodman, "Explorations!" welcomes any student with initiative, responsibility, drive, enthusiasm, guts, inventiveness, a spirit of inquiry, a desire for fun, and a love of life and people.

With as yet no fixed blueprint, "Explorations!" will be built by the combined efforts of the group members. Each student will plan his own personal curriculum, worth up to 15 credit hours per semester, within the program. It will be possible to work toward certification. "Explorations!" will offer the required number of elementary education semester hours as well as the supervised student teaching experience. Other requirements can be negotiated. The group can expect to participate in such things as intensive workshops, weekend retreats, independent study, and site observations in many types of schools. A major thrust of the program will be to explore alternative and innovative schools and to arrange internships ranging from radical free schools to traditional classrooms allowing students to explore their own personal teaching style and values.

Approximately 35 students (preferably juniors and seniors) will be admitted to this program. There are no formal pre-requisites. However, a personal interview is required with the Goodmans before registration. They will be available in Room 225, School of Education at the following times:

Tuesday, April 20 10:00-3:30 and 7:00-9:00
Wednesday, April 21 10:00-12:00
Thursday, April 22 10:00-3:30

If you are absolutely unable to make any of these times, call 545-0941 for an appointment. For further information, the Goodmans can be reached at home at 253-3100 or through a note left in their mailbox in Room 126, School of Education.

Freshmen!

It is especially important for Freshmen to attend a Program Presentation at the Mark's Meadow Auditorium on Thursday, April 15 from 9:00-10:00, from 10:00-11:00 or from 11:00-12:00 to hear all about the School of Education's Alternative Programs. Many will be admitting Sophomores next year. Attending can affect your future for the next 3 years!

Norma Jean Anderson is the new Assistant Dean for Student Affairs with responsibility for admission, academic advisement, and placement. She received her Ed.D. from the University of Illinois.

Individualized Program Is Old And New!

The Individualized Program is designed for two groups of students: those who are already well along in their preparation and want to finish within the same framework as they started; and, those who are not admitted to other programs or who prefer other routes to teacher preparation.

Typically students in the Individualized Program will take courses in the following areas: Foundations, Psychology, Curriculum and Methods, and Student Teaching. In addition, sophomores and juniors who have had little experience with children will take a pre-practicum where they can gain some experience. Within the Individualized Program, students are free to propose a variety of programs for themselves in education if the basic components as traditionally defined do not meet their objectives.

Open to any students, elementary and secondary, who have been admitted to the School of Education, students should develop their program of study with personnel from the Undergraduate Advising Office prior to pre-registration. Students who were in the teacher preparation program last year will not have to change their earlier plans.

The Individualized Program is under the direct control of the Teacher Preparation Programs Council (TPPC).

Ed Majors For Alternative Schools "Go Wild" 26 Days Each Program Year

Designed to prepare secondary education majors for such alternative schools as the Metro High School in Chicago, and the Pennsylvania Advancement School in Philadelphia, The Alternative Schools Program (TASP) features two on-site internships in urban settings, and also two 26-day Outward Bound wilderness experiences.

The second and fourth semesters of the two year program will be spent almost entirely in internships in metropolitan areas. TASP students will live with families in the community wherever possible and will have first-hand experience in community development and team-building. Most of their time will be spent in getting to know the people who the alternative schools will be serving and building a background of skills in community work.

The first and third semesters will be spent on campus in learning modules selected from a wide array of options, some already existing at the School of Education such as Humanistic Education or Aesthetics and others which will be specially developed for TASP, such as Futuristics or Communications. On campus, the student will be a member of a support group of 10 to 12 students working together to review each other's work and to facilitate personal and professional growth.

Outward Bound is a worldwide organization which conducts groups into wildernesses where the uncomplicated challenge of the elements forces the individual to cope with understandable stress in himself or herself and others. The shared experiences of the group also help build a bond, a sense of community. Research indicates that Outward Bound tends to produce a greater flexibility in a teacher's style, to increase the degree of independence allowed to students, and encourages empathy and understanding, aside from pedagogical relationships.

TASP students will receive a Bachelor's Degree at the end of the senior year, and a Master's Degree at the end of the full program. The TASP staff will take an active role in helping students find jobs in alternative schools following graduation.

Normal entry into the program will be at the beginning of the junior year, although full participation in TASP will not start until the student is a senior. As juniors, students will develop a teaching specialty with the advice and help of a doctoral candidate of the Center for Urban Education. By the end of the junior year, students will have completed the core curriculum requirements of the University.

Students of any of the cooperating members of the Five College Group are invited to apply for admission to TASP, expecially students belonging to a minority group and/or coming from an urban background. For the coming academic year, enrollment will be limited to 55 juniors and 50 seniors.

Admission to TASP is by personal interview with Donn Kesselheim, the Program Director. Interested students should sign up for an interview on the sheet outside Room 130C at the School of Education before April 20.

A. Donn Kesselheim, Director of the Alternative Schools Program. He helped establish an experimental school-without-walls -- the Chicago Public High School for Metropolitan Studies (METRO). A Harvard Ed.D.

Unique Program In Early Childhood Ed

A newly developed program is now available to students interested in teaching pre-school, kindergarten and primary grade children. It will provide a professional year of training for juniors, seniors, or as a post-Baccalaureate year of preparation to teach children from age two to eight.

Unlike more traditional approaches, the program will be built on two field experiences: eight weeks in the fall and another eight weeks in the spring during which students might live off campus.

Ideally, each field experience will be in a different type of community. Students, thereby, will gain some understanding of the varied cultures and backgrounds of the children with whom they work. Hopefully, too, the teaching environments will offer different types of structures, ranging from highly organized to informal.

Teams of faculty and students will be created wherever possible to work together, support each other, analyze experiences and evaluate growth. Seminars will be held regularly during the field experiences with instructors traveling to or near the on-site locations.

The Early Childhood Program (ECE) will consist of 30 credit hours, in five phases: orientation, 1st field teaching, transition, 2nd field teaching, and post-teaching. Students will not be able to register for courses other than those of the ECE Sequence.

Prerequisites include some previous contact experience with children, such as working for Head Start or as a Vista Volunteer, and completion of Psychology 262, 301, or Human Development 270.

Limited to 40 students; juniors, seniors, and post-graduates. Selection will be based primarily on an interview with David Day, the program director.

Interested students should sign up for an interview outside Room 4 at the School of Education from April 12 to April 16. Interviews will be held April 23 through April 28.

David Day, Director of the Early Childhood Ed Program; also of Head Start Leadership. A Wayne State University Ed. D.

Atron Gentry, Director of the Urban Education Center and its new program. Former Director of the Westside Study Center in Pasadena, California. His major interest at the School of Ed is the training of teachers for inner cities and the development of inner-city programs such as the Career Opportunities Program. He received his Ed. D. from UMass.

Urban Ed Majors To Become Inner City Reform Strategists

A new wholly contained program that will give students a political sophistication to the degree that will enable them to become successful teachers and reform strategists in inner city schools has been devised by the Urban Education Center.

Given the present state of crisis in most urban school systems, it is not enough for teachers to have learning concepts and teaching skills. They must be able to relate academic theories and concepts to urban children; understand the socialization process of schools; be aware of the values they impart in the classroom; be able to reflect on what is happening in the midst of diversity and conflict; and be able to deal with problems of institutional racism. Teachers must also have a working knowledge of the problems of accountability, decentralization, and community control of schools.

To prepare students emotionally and intellectually, the focus of the program will be an internship combining teaching and living in an inner city community. Students will intern in groups of ten to thirty in various cities including: Boston, Worcester, and Springfield, Massachusetts; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Brooklyn, New York; Patterson, New Jersey; Louisville, Kentucky; and Los Angeles, California.

Methods instruction will occur on site with workshops involving the student, cooperating teacher, and graduate supervisor. The intern experience will be structured to develop a procedure for moving from a case study approach to working in tutorial and other capacities in small groups to preparing and coordinating lessons with an entire class.

Internship will follow a semester of on-campus courses including "Introduction to Urban Education." After internship, participants will return to Amherst for one or two semesters of follow up experiences, including an Evaluation Seminar. Externs may then choose from a variety of advanced courses in urban education and related courses in other School of Education Centers and University Departments.

Near the completion of the two year program, participants will engage in a second practicum involving specific projects in curriculum development. Students will be encouraged to initiate projects relating to their individual teaching plans.

The official name of the program is Center for Urban Education Teacher Education Model, or CUETEM. In Fall and Spring, 1971-72, CUETEM will admit 200 students to the program. Approximately 90 students - 60 elementary and 30 secondary education majors-including juniors and seniors, will begin their on-site internship in Fall, 1971. In January, 1972, after a semester of pre-practicum experiences, an additional 110 students will be placed in internships in urban areas.

Admissions to the program will be handled by members of the Urban Education Center. Individual counseling can be arranged by calling the Urban Ed. Center and making an appointment with Barbara Love, Bobby Gentry, Billy Dixon, or Carolyn Peelle.

15 Students To Become "Islanders" For Year On Martha's Vineyard

Total immersion for one academic year in the public school system and the self-contained Martha's Vineyard community is the unique feature of the Integrative Program in Teacher Education (IPTE). Simultaneous with practical classroom experiences, students will pursue a program of common and individualized readings, projects, seminars, and conferences. The theoretical, the experiential, and the clinical will be thoroughly integrated.

Lest the idea of spending an academic year on a resort island lead to thoughts of play and vacation, the Program Director warns that IPTE has a strong commitment to academic rigor as indicated by the following course content areas:

A. Theories and techniques of learning and teaching
B. The "self" in the learning-teaching process
C. Theoretical foundations of education
D. Development and evaluation of in-class curricula
E. Case Studies of community roles in education
F. Differentiated teaching experience
G. Independent Study

Students will be encouraged to specialize in the areas most pertinent to his or her personal and professional growth.

IPTE is open to both juniors and seniors. Enrollment for 1971-72 will be limited to ten elementary majors and five secondary majors.

Selection for the program will be in three stages. First: completion of application form obtained from Donald Cuniff, the Program Director, followed by a personal interview with him. Second: tentative selection by the Director and a representative of the Martha's Vineyard school system. Third: Review by an impartial observer, and final selection.

Don Cuniff, Director of the IPTE Program, is a doctoral candidate at the School of Ed. His Masters Degree is in Administration and Curriculum Development.

Integrated Day Program For Seniors & M. Ed. Candidates

The one-year Model Elementary Teacher Education Program (METEP) has been designed to prepare teachers with strong competencies relating to the Integrated-Day approach to teaching.

This relatively new approach to the education of children, views the teacher's role as exposing the child to a rich environment of materials to explore, to encourage the child to be self-directing, become intensely involved in activities which interest him, and, by continual diagnosis and assessment of his intellectual growth and development, to guide the child to experiences which will allow him to maintain a maximum rate of growth and development in all areas of concern. In this way the child develops the desire and ability for self-education.

The first semester will consist of a 16 credit workshop providing participants with competencies in diagnostic and strategic skills in the management of the Integrated Day as well as in curriculum and content areas. The METEP faculty is attempting to coordinate the following areas in an integrated modular program:

Language Arts, Reading - Masha Rudman
Science - Dick Konicek
Math - Bill Masalski
Aesthetics - Susan Brainerd
Human Relations - Al Ivey
Curriculum Development Mason Bunker

During the second semester each candidate will serve an internship in an Integrated Day elementary school working with carefully selected supervising teachers. Observation, evaluation and underlying philosophy will be included in the workshop semester, as well as in the internship semester.

Current juniors and seniors will be accepted into the METEP program. For the fall of 1971, enrollment will be limited to 50 senior elementary education majors and 15 Masters of Education candidates; 50 junior elementary education majors will be admitted in February, 1972.

Admission will be based on a personal interview with the project staff and a written statement from candidates including reasons for wanting to participate in the program. Application forms are available in Room 210 at the School of Education and should be filled out and returned there by 9:00 A.M. on April 20. The names of applicants who are selected for personal interviews and a sign-up sheet will be posted outside Room 210 by 9:00 A.M. on April 21. For further information contact Bill Masalski or Masha Rudman at the School of Education.

William Masalski, Director of Integrated Day, METEP, and Masha Rudman. Masalski's special area is Math education while Rudman's is Language Arts and Reading.

Job Opportunities

School systems are looking for full time professionally oriented staff members who have gained a healthy confidence in themselves, are able to demonstrate success in day-to-day activities and responsibilities, yet who have energy, insight and training to contribute beyond the normal requirements. Their training should include being able to meet basic certification requirements and also demonstrate performance through activities in and out of a school. Emphasis will be placed on the candidates's ability to relate positively to the age group for which he will be responsible, as well as to colleagues and people in the community.

In general, the field of education is no longer able to absorb unlimited numbers of persons desiring to teach. Successful systems can now be selective and employ only those who meet their own specifications and standards.

Current needs exist in the areas of industrial arts, school librarians, school psychologists, special teaching for learning disabilities (mentally retarded, socially and emotionally handicapped, speech and hearing specialists, remedial specialists, especially reading and perceptually handicapped) school social workers, instructional media specialists; kindergarten and early childhood specialists, school nurses, environmental specialists, and elementary counselors. Unfortunatey although the need exists for the foregoing, during tight budget settlements they are the first to be cut or have operation curtailed.

At present, math seems to be the academic area not saturated with applicants. The physical sciences would follow, and then the biological sciences. Foreign languages and English offer much competition for positions and such steady positions are extremely competitive. Another major factor for consideration is geographic location. Greater opportunities exist in urban and inner city schools as opposed to suburban schools where openings are minimal.

Teacher Certification

Prospective teachers need to know certification requirements and how they stand in relation to them. Variations from state to state are considerable. Any student who expects to teach outside Massachusetts should study the requirements of the state where he or she may be, and plan to take courses satisfying those requirements. Information of this topic is available both in the Education Library and the Placement Office at Whitmore.

Certification requirements for elementary and secondary teachers in Massachusetts are:

Elementary School Teacher (Kindergarten through Grade VIII) 18 semester hours in Elementary Education. Not less than 2 semester hours must be in supervised student teaching in the elementary grades. The remaining semester hours must include courses covering 2 or more of the following areas: Educational Psychology including Child Growth and Development, Philosophy of Education, Methods and Materials in Elementary Education, Curriculum Development in Elementary Education.

Secondary Teacher (Junior and Senior High Schools) 12 semester hours in Secondary Education. Not less than 2 semester hours must be in supervised student teaching in the secondary schools. The remaining semester hours must include courses covering 2 or more of the following areas: Educational Psychology, including Adolescent Growth and Development, Philosophy of Education, Methods and Materials in Secondary Education, Curriculum Development in Secondary Education. 18 semester hours in major subject field or fields.

The Department of Education has concurred with the University of Massachusetts, School of Education that the alternative programs described in this newspaper will meet minimally the professional education requirements for a Massachusetts Teaching Certificate at the appropriate level. Nevertheless, students who plan to teach out of state should become aware of, and build into their programs, any additional requirements.

Soph-To-Senior Continuous Program Directed By Marks Meadow Principal

Beginning in September, elementary education majors will have the unique opportunity to begin a two-and-a-half year association with the new Teacher Education Program at Marks Meadow (TEPAM). The Marks Meadow staff will be assisted by School of Education faculty and graduate students as they address themselves to major and difficult issues in education.

TEPAM will consist of five phases, each a semester in length. Phase I, "Exploring Education Careers," is a 3 credit course designed to allow students to explore their interest and commitment to teaching. The course will include directed observation, selected readings, and exploratory contact with teachers, interns, and students.

TEPAM's Phase II will consist of a six-credit course called, "The Child and His World." Each student will begin a systematic observation of one or two children whose development will be followed over a two-year period. Seminars in child development and psychology will parallel the systematic observation.

Mike Greenebaum, Principal of Mark's Meadow, Director of the TEPAM Program, Faculty Member of the School of Ed. and TPPC Member.

Full-time student teaching for one semester will make up Phase III. Using this classroom experience as a catalyst, students will spend the following semester (Phase IV) exploring problems and concerns which they could not have anticipated or dealt with earlier in the program. This phase will include directed reading, seminars, and course work in foundation areas.

Phase V will be a final semester of full-time teaching during which the student will undertake the duties of a regular staff member including working with student teachers in earlier phases of TEPAM.

Undergraduates may enter TEPAM in either September or February of their sophomore year. Thirty juniors can be admitted to Phase II of the program at its inception in September who have had some prior experience with young children and can demonstrate a commitment to following through with the program. Normally, the only entry into the program will be fifty sophomores to Phase I in September and another fifty in February. Out of each group of fifty, only thirty will be able to continue on to Phase II.

Education majors who are currently freshmen and sophomores will be admitted to the program on the basis of an interview with Michael Greenebaum, Prineipal of Marks Meadow, and Director of TEPAM. Interview appointments can be made by signing up on appointment sheets in the Marks Meadow office. Interviews will be held between April 20-23 in the Marks Meadow Office.

Ed Psych

To many, a teacher who is ignorant of educational psychology is like a doctor who knows nothing about medicines. Many of the alternative programs, thus, require that partieipants take edueational psyehology, or work in related fields sueh as child or adoleseent development.

Whether or not a student is in a program which requires ed. psych., students at the School of Education are advised to heed the counsel of placement officers, certification directors, and employers of teachers who say, "take it!".

International Ed Offers Possible Experience Abroad

Student field experienee in other cultures or subcultures as a means of inspiring and training teachers to teach about other cultures will be one goal of the new International Education Program.

Believing that Ameriean Edueation needs to teach about other ways of life, especially of the non-Western world, this one-to-two year program is considering possible field experienees for its students in sueh places as Northern Ireland, Mexico, and Frenehspeaking Canada, as well as in the U.S. This field experienee would be worked out individually within each student's sehedule and would include teaehing, taking courses, or an independent study project involving another culture or subculture. Tutorial or on-campus independent study projects will also be possible.

George Urch, a Director of the International Ed Program, has a long list of overseas ed credits. Ph.D. from Michigan.

The program will also make provision for prospective teachers to become competent in the Foundations of Education, teaehing methods and/or curriculum development. Students will receive counseling combined with a field experience and field supervision, making it possible to individualize the program to meet the specific needs of each students.

The program is designed for junior high and secondary social studies and English teachers, and elementary education majors. Prospective teachers in other fields may also join the program.

Massachusetts certifieation requirements for social studies and English teachers at the secondary level will be met by the program. Elementary education majors will need to take approximately six credits outside the program towards certification.

Enrollment for the program for September 1971 will be limited to approximately 10 elementary edueation majors and 15 secondary majors, from either the sophomore or junior elasses. The same number of students will be admitted to the program in February, 1972. Admissions to the program will be made on the basis of personal interviews with the directors, George Ureh and Bob Pearson. Further information on the program is available at Montague House. Interviews for admission should be arranged through the projeet directors.

Spring '72 Program Prepares For Fall Internship With Summer Workshop

Beginning the Spring semester, '72 the Sociological, Historical, Philosophical (SHP) Teacher Education Program will allow students to get both the B.A. and M.Ed. degrees in five years with the last year being a paid year long job experience. Students need not decide to enter the program until their junior year.

This new program has been designed to provide a novice teacher with as solid an educational foundation and professional training as possible, while ensuring the acquisition of professional skills in ideal as well as actual teaching situations. The program's major emphasis is on integrating the practical classroom situations with the related theoretical considerations, avoiding both sterile scholasticism and mindless activity. The program hopes to allow each student to assess his own capabilities and potential, to build his strengths and minimize his weaknesses, and to gain the confidence to function effectively and humanely.

Mike Amori, Director of SHP Teacher Ed Program, a doctoral candidate has M.A. in Science Education.

Students enter in the second semester as juniors with a three credit tutorial seminar. During the succeeding summer, students will enroll in an intensive four week workshop creating ideal teaching situations in preparation for the Fall semester internship.

During the Fall semester internship the student will teach in a local school, granting nine hours credit, and concurrently take two courses: a methodology seminar to assist in the public school teaching situation, and an educational psychology course. At the end of the internship, the student is granted his Bachelor's Degree, by virtue of the previous summer's credit he graduates in January. The student then embarks on his Master's Degree program.

The Spring semester is spent in course work on campus, especially a nine credit educational foundations experience which attempts to build upon the previous teaching experience and analyze them in terms of their theoretical components. An additional six hours of electives are chosen in consultation with the student's advisor.

The following year the student is placed in a a full time, paid-in-full teaching position in a public school under the supervision of an in-service advisor on the program staff. The student continues seminar work focusing on integrating the teaching situation with its theoretical considerations. At the end of the year the student is granted fifteen hours credit, and, in June, receives his Master's Degree. The program will fulfill Massachusetts certification requirements.

An orientation session will be held during the Fall semester, 1971, to further acquaint interested students with this program. Following the orientation session, students will have individual interviews with a member of the Educational Foundations Center. Admission to the program will be based on an interview. Approximately 50 students will be chosen to enter the program mutually. There are no specific prerequisites for entrance to the program.

Three Additional Programs For Students To Consider

A program for which space does not allow an adequate description is a one year exchange for 8 UMass students in Special Education on the Fitchburg State Campus. For information about it, contact William Fanslow, or the Student Affairs Office, Room 123.

There is another program under the auspices of the federally funded Northeast Regional Media Center for the Deaf whose Director is Raymond Wyman. His office is in Thompson Hall.

Still another program is Distributive Education which will be accepting 30 to 40 secondary education majors for the Fall of 1971. Information may be obtained from Robert Levine or Jack Hruska in Room 2, School of Education, or by calling 5-1527.

Cost Of Living No Higher Interning Off Campus

Many of the alternative programs offered by the School of Education require interning off campus as far away as California. The Director of Field Experience reports that the basic living expenses are usually no higher than on campus.

For example: for the current academic year, housing in Southwest and Orchard cost students $280 per semester; for board, $265 which does not include meals on weekends, for linen, $15 per semester. Therefore, the amount students have for room, board and linen for one semester off campus is $560.

Of course, many areas offer a far greater opportunity for spending much more on entertainment than Amherst. Entertainment, nevertheless, is hardly a basic cost of living. The Director of Field Experience finds that the basic costs are about the same as for on-campus in Amherst.

Speaks In Cage

Rennie Davis Seeks Help For Vietnam

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

"May Day comes out of Viet Nam. It is an appeal from the people of Viet Nam for help." With these words Rennie Davis, Defendent of the Chicago 8 conspiraey eharges and longtime movement aetivist, began an hour long talk at the Cage last evening elaborating on the May Day activities, the urgency of the Indo-Chinese situation and the People's Peaee Treaty.

Davis, who recently returned from a trip to Viet Nam, told the 650 people who turned out to listen to him of the terrible conditions eaused by the long war in South East Asia. He stated that chemieal sprays being used by the U.S. Army in Viet Nam are causing many children to be born with severe deformities. He told the group that the Army has sprayed over ten million acres with poisonous sprays with no regard to the people living there. He went on to say how the people are being driven out of the small towns and into the cities. The Viet Namese Society is being destroyed and the proud culture of the people is being ruined, continued Davis.

Speaking about the students in Viet Nam, Davis said that students are moving and aeting in response to the student anti war movement in the United States. He told the group about a movement of students which was broken up by combat police using helieopters and gas. Over a hundred were arrested and taken to a prison in Kan Sahn were they remain today confined in horrible conditions.

"In South Viet Nam today," he said, "there are approximately 200,000 political prisoners receiving tortorous treatment.

Speaking about the May anti war movement, Davis told the group that what goes on in the movement will have an impaet on Saigon and Viet Nam. He said that we must move now and what we do will create power aeross all of South Viet Nam.

The People's Peace Treaty was the next topic in Davis' speeeh. A mule train which carried the body of Martin Luther King will be used to earry the treaty from the Southern States to Washington D.C. It will eontain a number of demands designed by hundreds of thousands of Amerieans. "This document lays out a way to end the war," Davis said.

On April 19th G.I.s from all over the country together with wives and mothers of serviеemen killed in South East Asia will gather in the Nation's Capitol to conduct a war protest. The veterans will launeh an incursion into Congress to put on a mock search and destroy mission. They will also surround the Supreme Court and hold the members captive until it works on the constitutionality of the war, Davis told the audienee.

The People's lobby was the next topic of discussion last evening. He said that this event will be the most largest people's lobby in the United States. "This won't be a one shot event, we will be there to stay," Davis told the group. While in Washington the people will congregate in the halls of Congress, eireulate eopys of the people's Peace Treaty to Government workers and will assemble campsites to live in.

May Day, Davis told the group, is an international distress signal. On May Day, May 1st, demonstrations will take place all over the world. People from all over the planet will take to the streets and demonstrate to show the world that Viet Nam lives. On this day a festival of peace will take plaee and the people will issue an ultimatum to President Nixon that they will stop the Government of the eountry if the Government doesn't stop the war in Viet Nam, Davis told the applauding audience. A organizing headquarters will then be set up to eonduct the various activities.

He went on to say that on May 4th one of the largest non violent civil disobedienee campaigns in the eountry will take plaee. People will march to all the major roads leading to Washington and sit there arms folded to keep the large flow of Government workers from getting to work. Davis continued by saying, "At 7:30 10,000 people will sit down to shut down the Pentagon."

On May 5th, the grounds of Congress will be the site of another demonstration and he told the group that this and other Universities should hold a one day strike in support of the anti war movement.

"THERE TO STAY"-Rennie Davis, one of the Chicago 8, tells 650 people in the Cage last night that the people's Lobby would stay in Washington until their demands were met.

STARS AND STRIPES ITS NOT-This was the background for Rennie Davis' speech in the cage last night--and its nothing less than the North Vietnamese flag.

'Time Of Man' Examines Earth

The TIME OF MAN, a film produced in cooperation with the American Museum of Natural History, will be shown throughout the area today through April 16th, courtesy of Pioneer Valley Chapter, Zero Population Growth, 210 Elm St., Northampton.

This film was originally shown as a major documentary on television. It explores the meaning of the word environment through an examination of the natural history of the earth and its creatures. It also contains a series of case studies on animal populations and primitive human cultures which have survived or perished according to their ability to adapt to their environment.

In part of the film, Dr. Margaret Mead examines various primitive tribes in the world. The movie turns also to modern western society, with a montage of newsreel clippings illustrating the trend of man's behavior in the twentieth century.

The TIME OF MAN will be shown to Southampton Middle School and Easthampton High School on April 14th; Williamsburg High School and Goshen Schools on April 15th and Amherst Junior and Senior High Schools on April 16th.

During the evenings of the week, ZPG hopes to reach all audiences. Tuesday evening the movie will be shown as part of the Business and Professional Women's Club annual dinner meeting.

The film will be open to the public free of charge, Wednesday through Friday evenings at the following places:
April 14th 8:00 p.m. Academic Building, Lecture Room, Hampshire
April 15th 7:30 p.m. McConnell Auditorium, Smith College

Is A Toothbrush Really A Dangerous Weapon?

WINNIPEG, Man. (AP)—Crew members of a small commuter airliner, aided by heavy cloud cover, pulled a bluff on three young would-be hijackers Tuesday and landed at Winnipeg International Airport, where authorities were waiting.

Three juveniles armed with sharpened toothbrush handles tried to force the pilot of the regular Dauphin-Winnipeg Midwest Airlines flight to land on a highway, airline spokesmen said. The pilot told them there was too much snow on the road surface and they decided to go to Yorkton, Sask., 105 miles west.

The copilot of the seven-passenger plane, using a special hijack code, notified Winnipeg of the circumstances.

When the plane entered heavy cloud cover, the pilot began a gentle turn back toward Winnipeg. He kept the aircraft in cloud until it was only half a mile from the Winnipeg airport.

The pilot grappled with the three young hijackers while the copilot landed the plane, the spokesman said.

The three were turned over to police and juvenile authorities.

No reason was given for the hijack attempt.

'Hippies' Move Into Mansion Fix It Up Better Than Ever

DETROIT (AP)—Five rock musicians and 15 of their hippie-style friends have moved into a mansion in Detroit and apparently they're most welcome tenants as they repair and refurbish the 47-room estate and keep vandals away.

"We're doing what we can. It's a great old house and we can help fix it up," said Larry Merryman, 23, who heads the Stonefront rock band that lives and practices in the home's theater-size ballroom.

Emanuel J. Harris, a Detroit attorney who now owns the mansion, once the home of millionaire Gar Wood, said the young people have been devoting part of each month to refurbishing and repairing the area. He said they also have been protecting the place from vandals.

Besides Merryman and four other band members, the granite mansion on small Greyhaven Island in the Detroit River is the residence of 15 other persons, ranging in age from 8 to 40. There also are 5 dogs, 9 cats and 5 kittens.

Prior to Merryman's signing of a $700-a-month lease eight months ago, the mansion had gone through a number of rentors who let repairs slide and the grounds become overgrown with weeds.

Police said the group has caused no problems except for "excessive crowds at times." They said the neighbors there are three other houses on the island have had no complaints other than those about the traffic problem when there are parties at the mansion.

"The only difference between their parties the neighbor's and ours was that they lined up Cadillacs and Imperials and we had beat-up Chevys and Volkswagens," said Roselyn Leonard, who sings folk songs professionally with her husband David and lives in the mansion with her two daughters, ages 8 and 10.

Current projects of the community are planting a flower and vegetable garden, mowing the lawn, removing the stumps of dead trees and patching together some balustrades along the river side of the house.

What To Do For A Flood

The Inter League Committee for the Connecticut River will present a conference on "Flood Zones: How They Should Be Managed," tomorrow, April 15, at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

Sessions will start at 10 a.m. and will end at 3 p.m. The public is invited. The conference chairman, Mrs. Bernard H. Flood, said: "The conference is the direct outgrowth of the comments made by the Citizen Review Committee appointed by the New England River Basins Commission to review the Comprehensive Study of the Connecticut River."

Interest in the valley centers around the proposals made for a number of flood control dams. Many citizens are questioning these and asking if there are alternative methods such as flood plain zoning to be used, she added.

The discussion periods will be open to general participation. Mrs. Flood said "The specifics of programs will be briefly reviewed by speakers but the bulk of the time will be spent in attempting to develop an understanding of the complexities of the problem and the prospects for success of the various methods outlined."

If You Sign Up For An Interview—Go!

By JANET PEARLMAN
MDC Staff

The Placement Office is on this campus to serve the students. Recently their efforts have been frustrated by the students themselves. Those who are signing up for interview appointments with a recruiter have not been fulfilling their commitments.

Not coming to these interviews means that some students who were turned away for interviews need not have been (they lost an opportunity they could have had.) Students who fail to call to cancel their appointments are only hurting their fellow students.

When the recruiters do not receive many students they do not feel that their trip was worthwhile. When the reputation of UMass goes down students who are not responsible for its decline suffer unjustly. If a student should have to cancel, please write a note to the recruiter explaining your reason for not attending the interview. In this way it will not reflect badly on UMass.

Various aptitude tests available to all students throughout the year to help themselves find their own resources. These tests can help you better understand what kinds of fields you are best suited to. The Placement Office specializes in Career Planning. It is there to help undergraduates plan their futures. Sophomores should drop in to seek advice.

Note to independent study majors you should document your work for the files in the Placement Office by getting a signed statement from your advisor. This will make your credentials more explicit for any interested employer.

At Special Meeting

Ten Budgets OK'd by Senate

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate met in a special meeting last night to continue debate on next year's budgets for student organizations. At the time of this writing, 10 budgets had been heard and no changes made in their collar amounts. Four others were postponed and more were being heard.

Accepted by the Senate without monetary changes were the following: Area Government ($65,832 @ $4/Area resident), Belchertown Volunteers ($775), Black Mass Communications ($14,185), Coalition for Environmental Quality ($6,320), Collegian ($89,427), Action Labs ($2,448), Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs ($1,560), Committee on Poverty ($1,581), Northeastern Educational Services ($8,205), and Draft Counseling Service ($5,295).

The only changes made in any of these were to remove restrictions on how three of the groups spent their funds allocated for speakers. The Senate Budgets Committee had recommended binding clauses on this "honoraria" category in most groups to restrict them from paying their speakers for more than travel expenses.

The Senate voted to remove the clause from the Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, the Committee on Poverty, and Free University. This followed an unsuccessful attempt to remove it from Black Mass Communications.

Senators opposed to the binding clause argued that it was an "unwarranted restriction" on groups which should be allowed the responsibility of deciding, themselves, on how to use the funds given them. They argued that only the individual groups could tell how best to spend money on speakers. Senators desiring to retain the binding clauses argued that the Senate is responsible for protecting its constituencies and should have some control over how money is spent.

Among the groups postponed until tonight was Index. There was a motion on the floor to reduce the student funds in the budget to $1 from $63,565. This could either eliminate publication of a yearbook or lead to the printing of a book financed by subscription only. The postponement was granted until tonight so that representatives from Index could be present to explain how this or any other decrease would affect the publication.

Miss. Activists Need Help Electing Blacks

Legitimate and constitutional black power will be the subject of a number of meetings to be held on the campuses of the five college area this week. Rev. Owen Brooks the director of the Delta Ministry of the national Council of Churches will be the guest of the W.E.B. Dubois Black studies department and will be meeting with students and faculty to discuss a possible Mississippi Project by the five college black community this summer.

Mississippi, long a symbol of white racist political and economic oppression of black people, is attempting to roll back the political gains made by its black community since the Voting Rights Act of 1965 by a recent law designed to disfranchise the black population before the statewide elections scheduled for this November. Reverend Brooks representing a coalition of elected black officials and grass roots leadership is in the area to discuss the possibility of black faculty and students from the five college coming to Mississippi to work with local black communities in re-registering black folk and helping to put together and run candidates for office.

The black electorate in the state represents 47% of the total electorate and blacks significantly outnumber whites in some 20 countries. It is in these twenty counties that the major effort of the summer project would be concentrated.

The black electorate in the state represents 47% of the total electorate and blacks significantly outnumber whites in some 20 counties. It is in these twenty counties that the major effort of the summer project would be concentrated. Even before the visit of Rev. Brooks the idea of valley participation in the struggle of the Mississippi Black community has been discussed. The Five College Black Studies committee has decided to make this effort the major one of black studies in the valley this year.

Mike Thelwell chairman of the W.E.B. Dubois Department said recently, "this is precisely the kind of project serious black students should be concerned about. If the student response is what we hope it will be, if the funds can be found, and we have already begun exploring sources of funding in the black community because we feel that black folks must find the tools for their own liberation -- although funds from acceptable white sources will not necessarily be rejected -- and if technical and mechanical details can be worked out, then there will be such a project. The black studies department requies community participation of its students and we see no reason why academic credit can not be worked out for students participating in this very real struggle for liberation."

A general meeting of the black community is scheduled for Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. at which the situation and details for implementing the program will be discussed.

C.C. Fee Increase Imminent

By EMORY ROUNDS
MDC Staff

"Next year the Campus Center tax will probably be somewhere around $60. But that's using last year's figures, and not having next year's budget to look at."

Such is the cost of the Campus Center, said newly elected Student Union Governing Board President Robert Nims in an interview yesterday. Besides the $12 increase Nims discussed the Board's new constitution and some ideas for the "Awful Waffle."

Nims explained that the student fee covers the paying off of the original bonds on both the Campus Center and the Student Union. The fee will also cover some of the operating costs of RSO, will help pay for the buildings' professional staff (administrators, janitors, part-time help, etc.), and will contribute towards Program Council's budget. Nims said that although the bookstore, hotel, and food services departments of the buildings contribute," it would hardly be enough to keep the building operating on its own."

The SUG Board has also informally communicated to Whitmore and the Board of Trustees that "students are not going to be held responsible for the financial loss of the Campus Center Garage." Nims continued by explaining that "although in five or six years the garage could be a very lucrative operation, students shouldn't have to absorb close to a $3 million yearly loss right now when they can least afford it."

"Sometimes the students don't see the benefits they receive in places like the bookstore, where they receive a five percent markdown on all hardcover books." Nims went on to discuss some of the ideas coming up next year, "for instance, there may be two prices on bookstore merchandise, one being for students with I.D.'s and the other for non-students. This may be tried in the food services, but the problems are obvious. But I can confidently say that the prices in the Hatch and Coffee Shop will not go up."

"Another idea is something in the line of a catalogue shopping type operation, with maybe Sears, where the students could order merchandise at a discount," Nims said. "And the crafts center run through the program council will be in full swing next year."

Nims then went on to explain the Board's new constitution. "The most important aspect of this constitution is that it clarifies the Board's relationship with the professional staff, and the Administration. Students, through the mechanics of the Board, now have an even greater voice, in areas such as building policy and use. It will also bring the Board's committees to a better understanding of the areas they deal with, such as Food Services."

The new constitution calls for the presidents of the various student senates, upon the recommendations of the outgoing Board officers, to appoint members of the Board each April. These positions will be open soon, and anyone interested should keep an eye open for more information.

School of Ed. Marathon Workshops In Full Swing

By CINDI PRICE
MDC Staff

You have been assigned the letter D. Your next task is to mill around a large room with your eyes shut, seeking six other people in order to spell out the word, Tuesday. Remember your eyes are shut and you can not utter a sound. Sound hard? It is.

This was one of the exercises run in conjunction with a workshop, held yesterday at the School of Education, on increasing the effectiveness of task groups.

Marathon week is now in full swing at the School of Education. One to two hour seminars are being held daily on topics relevant to education. "Problems of Urban Education", "The Newest Media for Education; Casettes", "Computer Games", "Scope Tutoring Program", "A Focus Program on Louisville Schools" and "Reinforcement Theory and Self-Concept" were a few of the programs offered on Tuesday.

In addition, several movies on comparative education systems were being shown. Questions concerning the School of Education and the new Alternative Schools at the School of Ed. were answered by Dean Dwight Allan and Bob Woodbury.

Walking through the corridors, and attending the classes, it was evident that many people from outside the University were in attendance. Some had come to conduct workshops in their area of expertise, while others were there to listen.

The Educational Video Corporation, a subsidiary of the American Program Bureau, ran some of their films on closed circuit televisions located in the corridors. The Corporation has developed and is now marketing a casette teleplayer. This runs on a closed circuit television. EVC is now trying to set up a network of colleges and universities to air their programs.

The programs, made by EVC, are geared to the college audience and focus on controversial topics. The first series, comprised of ten shows, features such guests as Bill Baird narrating a filmed abortion, Dr. Abruzzi, chief physician at the Woodstock Festival, Ralph Nadar and Bernadette Devlin.

Another seminar explored the use of computers as an aid in learning a foreign language. This program is now being utilized at the University of Illinois. One of the problems encountered with this system is a lack or oral comprehension and practice.

Doris Cole, an instructor at Worcester State College, explained the necessity for better utilization of the environment. Until recently, the education field has failed to make students aware of their living surroundings. She stated that educators who wish to stimulate visual awareness in their students might explore some of the following areas; evaluation of the local environment through field trips; visual noise created by pollution; camouflage techniques of man-made objects; and the disappearance of natural resources from the local area.

Three members of SCOPE, a volunteer turoring service in Worcester, spoke to a small group about their program.

A seminar on urban education, comparing the school systems and philosophies of England and the U.S., was given by Prof. Thomas Bernard of the Dept. of Psychology and Education at Mount Holyoke College.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

In order to introduce a new line of youthful consumer products to retail outlets, A.A.E. of Cambridge, Mass. is offering a special summer sales program to eager and responsible students. A car is necessary, and previous sales experience is desired, but not required. Average commission earnings - $2,000. plus individuality and creativity within the job.

ARVN Drive to Break Siege

Heavy Fighting In Cambodia

SAIGON (AP)-Advance elements of a 3,000-man South Vietnamese relief force pushed to within a mile of Fire Base 6 without opposition Tuesday in a drive to break a two-week North Vietnamese siege at the central highlands outpost.

U.S. jets attacked enemy missile sites in Laos and heavy fighting was reported by the South Vietnamese in Cambodia.

The relief operation at Fire Base 6 began after massive U.S. aAir Force B52 strikes-heaviest in the highlands in nearly a year-pounded the area a mile east of the base.

In addition, two U.S. C130 cargo planes dropped two more 7 1/2-ton bombs into an area west of the base near the junction of the South Vietnamese, Laotian and Cambodian borders. Two of the blockbusters were dropped on Monday. The bombs had been used previously only to blast away jungles so that helicopters could land. The bombs are sometimes called "Daisy Cutters."

The B52 bombers, flying in from their Thailand base, struck six times to clear the way for the relief force, unloading some 600 tons of explosives.

There was no report of fighting either at the base or around it, as has been the case almost daily since the first North Vietnamese attack March 31. It was possible the enemy forces had pulled back to regroup and resupply, although there were no solid intelligence reports to confirm this.

The base has been the focal point of fighting in South Vietnam since the end of the South Vietnamese campaign in Laos.

It is one of a string of hilltop outposts in the central highlands blocking some of the outlets of the Ho Chi Minh Trail.

Elements of two North Vietnamese infantry regiments and one artillery regiment-about 7,000 or 8,000 men-were originally reported in the area.

Their offensive in the highlands was believed by some allied commanders to be a retaliatory blow to the South Vietnamese drive into Laos in February and March, although Hanoi's troops have mounted highlands attacks at this time of the year for the past few years.

In Washington, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said the North Vietnamese have lost the capability of mounting a sustained offensive in South Vietnam despite their attacks in the central highlands.

Speaking at a news conference, Laird said enemy forces battling in the highlands were not involved in the Laotian operation.

"Any attack is a serious attack," he said, "but the capability for serious attacks in that area is not great."

Small-scale fighting was reported elsewhere in South Vietnam.

The U.S. Command said two F105 fighter-bombers attacked North Vietnamese surface to air missile sites inside Laos three to five miles southwest of the Mu Gia Pass, a mountain gateway leading from North Vietnam into the Ho Chi Minh Trail.

The command said the U.S. fighter-bomber fired two missiles at two sites after radar gear on the planes indicated the ground sites were "locked on" the U.S. planes and preparing to fire. Results of the U.S. strikes were not known, the command said.

South Vietnamese headquarters said 148 North Vietnamese troops were killed in fighting near the eastern Cambodian town of Suong on Highway 7, about 20 miles west of the Vietnamese border and 105 miles northwest of Saigon.

Headquarters said South Vietnamese losses were 16 killed and 38 wounded.

The fighting erupted early Tuesday when the North Vietnamese shelled and attacked one of the seven South Vietnamese task forces in eastern Cambodia.

Saigon headquarters said the attack was repulsed with help from U.S. helicopter gunships and fighter-bombers.

The North Vietnamese also shelled command posts of two other rask forces and a third South Vietnamese position. The South Vietnamese said their casualties were light.

U.S. Will Be Present In Asia After Pullout

WASHINGTON(AP)-Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said Tuesday the United States will keep air and naval power in Southeast Asia, under the long-range Nixon doctrine, after American ground troops were withdrawn.

Asked what Vietnamization and the Nixon doctrine envision in U.S. air support after the U.S. troop pullout, Laird told a news conference:

"I would envision that the United States presence as far as air forces are concerned, that this would be part of the realistic deterrent which we will maintain in Asia...

"To say that we would not have a presence in Asia under this realistic deterrent strategy...would be very misleading."

Thus Laird was more explicit than previously on intentions to maintain such power in Asia beyond the Indochina war.

At the same time, he repeated his forecast that the United States will complete the shifting of combat responsibilities in Vietnam from American troops to the South Vietnamese army this summer.

However, he said as he has before that combat forces will remain in Vietnam to protect what he called "the American presence," meaning air and logistics elements supporting the South Vietnamese.

Once again, Laird predicted that the controversial South Vietnamese ground incursion into Laos will prove to have been a success, when an analysis is made in September and October whether the enemy is hurting for supplies.

Laird said current attacks launched by the North Vietnamese in the northern and central region of South Vietnam are being carried out by North Vietnamese troops which were not involved in battling South Vietnamese invaders in Laos.

And the North Vietnamese, he said, are using ammunition, supplies which they already had available before the South Vietnamese interrupted the southward flow of material in February and March.

In general, Laird indicated a belief that the North Vietnamese can mount localized attacks but that "the capability for sustained attacks in that area is not great."

On other subjects:

—Laird said there is evidence that the Russians have "gone forward with sophisticated weapons shipments and the establishment of a naval base in the Mediterranean area." This was the first official comfirmation of reports that the Russians have been building a base for their Navy in Egypt.

—The defense secretary said, in taking about cost increases in weaponry, that inflation has accounted for more than a 50 per cent boost.

—He said, "I don't believe its appropriate for me to comment"on aspects of the trial of First Lt. William L. Calley, Jr., convicted of murder in the My Lai Massacre case.

Catholic Bishop Calls For Lt. Calley Pardon

BOSTON(AP)-A Catholic bishop from Detroit said Tuesday that President Nixon should pardon Lt. William L. Calley. Otherwise, he said, the American people will not face up to the collective national responsibility for what happened at My Lai.

Said Auxiliary Bishop Thomas Gumbleton: "It seems to be what is happening here is that the American people, who have become more and more aware of the kind of atrocity this whole war is, that the American people are beginning to look for someone on whom guilt can be placed, and that perhaps they have found this person in Lt. Calley."

Bishop Gumbleton made his comments on The Advocates, a nationally televised public affairs program, during a debate on the question of a pardon for Calley.

The young Army Lieutenant has been convicted of premeditated murder in the deaths of 22 civilians in the assault on My Lai in 1968.

The bishop continued, "As long as he, Lt. Calley, remains the single focal point of guilt that is involved in this war, then the American people are not going to face the fact that this whole war is based on the promise that civilians can be killed...It would be effective to have a pardon of Lt. Calley only if, at the same time, we were willing to look at the fault that the royal American nation is involved in."

If Calley is punished, he said, "I think we will feel absolved of our own participation and we will not feel accountable for what has happened."

Also appearing on the program was Army photographer Ron Haeberle, whose pictures of the dead and wounded at My Lai were used as evidence in the Calley court martial.

Haeberle said he felt "sick" as he took the pictures of the victims, but he said of Calley's actions:

"He committed a grave thing, but I don't call it murder."

Other witnesses on the program included Harvard Professor Seymour Martin Lipset, who predicted the American people would come to accept and understand the verdict against Calley when they learn more about what happened at the Vietnamese hamlet.

"I think very few people realize the people who were killed were people in custody, that they weren't just people hiding behind buildings who might have grenades."

He said he believed the uproar over the Calley case is "the beginning of the postwar debate between the right and left, between the pro and antiwar groups, as to why we lost the war or why American aims in Vietnam weren't accomplished."

Dr. David Crane of Indianapolis, a psychiatrist who testified for the defense at Calley's trial, said on the program:

"I think the most dramatic impact of the Calley verdict is the fact that any G.I. in the combat zone today, if he is given an order which he deems to be a legal order-and it is, in fact, an illegal order-he can be executed for acting on that. If it is a legal order, and he deems it to be an illegal order, he can be executed. And while he's making this decision between the legal consequences of the two, he may be executed by the enemy."

US-SINO Table Tennis Match Goes Smoothly

PEKING AP—Visiting U.S. table tennis players met a Chinese team Tuesday before 18,000 cheering enthusiasts, in a match that could be described as an exquisite display of Chinese tact and politeness to guests.

The Chinese regard themselves-and are regarded widely-as among the world's best table tennis players. They could have fielded powerful players and humiliated their American guests. They didn't. It turned out that the Chinese men won only by a score of 5 to 3 and the scrappy U.S. women's team bowed to the Chinese women 5 to 4.

"They played us in what they had billed as a friendly match, and I believe their selection of players and the match they played were unquestionably friendly, since they provided entertainment for thousands of people rather than trying to destroy us with a quick victory," said Graham B. Steenhovern, 59, of Detroit, president of the U.S. Table Tennis Association.

"We are sure they used this demonstration as a means of providing their younger players a chance to learn something from the American-type game."

The match was played in a vast, modern gymnasium. The thousands of Chinese spectators burst into applause when the Americans marched in with the Chinese team. A banner in Chinese said, "Welcome to the table tennis team from the United States."

The Chinese even took the time to express sympathy for an ailing member of the U.S. team, John Tannehill, 18, of Middleport, Ohio. The voice on the speaker said, "We tender him our sympathy and regards."

Tannehill has been the most enthusiastic of the visiting team members about China and the Chinese. He has described Chairman Mao Tsetung as the world's greatest moral and intellectual leader, and has said that in comparison he saw the United States as "a nation of conformists rather than individualists."

From his sick bed, Tannehill said he would like to spend another couple of weeks in China, and that is the feeling of most of his team as well as the correspondents covering the visit.

With Tannehill remaining at the Hsin Chiao Hotel, recovering from chills, headache and stomach trouble, the Americans had only seven players on the floor as the lights went down and play began at two tables in the center of the gymnasium. The audience was deeply intent.

Long-haired Glen Cowan of Santa Monica, Calif., was a crowd favorite, not because of his play so much as because of the red headband he wore to keep back his copious locks. Although they obviously favored their own team, the Chinese were generous in their applause for the visitors.

The American players were Cowan, Errol Resek of New York, George Braithwaite of Brooklyn, N.Y., Jack Howard of Seattle, Wash., Connie Sweeris of Grand Rapids, Mich., Olga Soltesz of Orlando, Fla., and Judy Bechnenski of Eugene, Ore.

As the teams left the court, several of the Americans walked hand in hand with Chinese opponents.

It was a smoothly staged show from beginning to end, although there could be no mistaking the unrehearsed good will of the crowd.

The game, however, in a sense was only a sidelight to the larger aspect of this first visit by any American group to China in two decades.

It would be watched carefully around the world for signs of any real improvement in the frayed relations between the United States and the People's Republic. The initiative was clearly Chinese, and if it is followed up by more such gestures, there is a prospect of progress.

From what a visiting correspondent could see in Peking in two days, the fading away of the tumultuous cultural revolution which convulsed China from 1966 to 1969 has been accompanied by what seems an incredible measure of relaxation as the nation turns its attention to rebuilding, politically and physically.

The cultural revolution destroyed the political foes of Chairman Mao Tse-tung, chief of whom had been President Liu Shao-Chi. In answer to my queries, I was told by Chinese-who seemed astonished that the question was asked to all-that Liu indeed was alive and that he probably was being re-educated.

Men Held In Assassination Plot

CHICAGO (AP)-Four men accused of plotting the assassinations of Mayor Richard J. Daley and the Rev. Jesse Jackson were held incommunicado Tuesday and a police official said he expects several more person will be arrested.

No official or investigator would discuss details of the case with newsmen.

Although the accused men's bonds were set at only $5,000 each, Thomas J. Lyons, director of the police intelligence division, said, "This is not a prank but..a seious offense."

A source in the state attorney's office who would not permit the use of his name described the alleged plot as a move by black militants to touch off racial strife during which they could loot stores and later sell the stuff.

But Jack Schmetterer, first assistant state's attorney, would say only, "We are investigating and it would not be professional for me to comment."

Deputy Police Supt. John T. Kelly said he expects more arrests.

The anonymous source in the state attorney's office said alleged plotters planned to kill Daley and Jackson, a civil rights leader, just before the election last week in which Daley was chosen for an unprecedented fifth straight four-year term.

Jackson endorsed Daley's Republican opponent, Richard L. Friedman, three days before the election.

Charged with solicitation to murder and awaiting arraignment in Circuit Court April 21 are:

—Earl P. Dillard, 37, and Howard Harris, 33, both unemployed laborers; Charles Whiteside, 35, a bartender; and Terry Simmons, 38, an unemployed steelworker.

Simmons and Whiteside were arrested April 5, but the initial complaints against them did not name any intended victims. The case came to light when Harris and Dillard, arrested April 10, were brought into court Monday on complaints that said, "On April 3, with intent that murder be committed against the Hon. Richard J. Daley and the Rev. Jesse Jackson, he encouraged and requested others to commit that offense."

Daley was vacationing in Florida and unavailable for comment. A spokesman said he didn't know if the mayor had been informed of the alleged plot.

In Nashville, Tenn., Jackson said, "I hope that whatever the facts are established to be, the law will be soundly enforced in pursuit of justice as it affects me, the accused and the well-being of our city."

U.S. Saves Day

COLOMBO, Ceylon AP—A U.S. Air Force plane landed in the capital of this strife-torn nation Tuesday with vitally needed spare parts for Ceylon's air force, which has stepped up attacks against a youthful rebel force.

One Ceylonese jet crashed after a strafing run during the day against the rebels.

In another development, informants said the government had ordered some officials of North Korea's embassy to leave the country.

Six U.S.—built helicopters were being readied by Britain for immediate shipment to Ceylon to give government forces more mobility in fighting the hit-and-run guerrillas, called Che Guevarists, who have attacked government installations from their jungle hideouts since April 5.

Britain is the major supplier of Ceylon's armed forces but the Ceylonese air force is equipped with American Bell Jet Ranger helicopters. It was reported in London that Britain would pay for the helicopters and eventually would be reimbursed by Ceylon, a member of the Commonwealth.

A Foreign Office spokesman in London said Ceylon had asked both the British and U.S. governments for six more helicopters. Britain, he said, made arrangements with the United States to ship them to Ceylon. Britain has no similar helicopters.

Spare parts flown in by the U.S. plane were for helicopters already being operated by the Ceylonese.

British small arms and ammunition were being airlifted to Colombo from Singapore.

The crash of the Ceylon air force jet was the only major action reported Tuesday.

The plane crashed in flames, killing the pilot after he carried out strafing operations on insurgent positions near Trincomalee on the northeast coast, the government said.

On the diplomatic front, several members of the North Korean Embassy were asked to leave the country, according to informed sources. They were believed linked to the insurrection, although it was not clear how or how many were involved.

Sierra Club Will Recycle, Reprocess University Paper

In recent weeks, a sampling of opinion was sought by the Western Mass. Group of the Sierra Club regarding the idea of separating office waste into recyclable paper and other, mixed trash, for the purpose of selling it for reprocessing. The response has been overwhelmingly favorable. As a result the Director of the Physical Plant and the Chancellor have endorsed a pilot program, to be carried out by the University and to run through the end of the fall semester 1971. If successful it is hoped that the operation will be expanded.

Collection of separated recycled paper began last week in the first building, Munson Hall, thanks to its custodian Mr. Ryan. Miss Eva Schiffer and Mr. Paul Whiteman, Head of Custodians, will work out the details of the operation with the departments and custodians of each building separately and will supply each office occupant with a copy of the list of items which are (and those which are not) acceptable. Consistently the most helpful comments and suggestions have been received from custodians. Needless to say, the success of the entire operation depends on the close cooperation between them and office occupants.

1. The custodians will do no separating. Any separating must be done in the individual offices. (No separation will be attempted in classrooms.) Anyone in a given department not wishing to participate is free to leave his trash mixed as heretofore. We only ask that everyone conscientiously refrain from contaminating separated recyclable waste paper. Such contamination will jeopardize an entire recycling operation.

2. The following is a list of recyclable and non-recyclable items. IF IN DOUBT, DISCARD (i.e., throw it into the mixed trash). The list is based on specifications by the company, to whom the paper will be sold for reprocessing in Holyoke and Springfield paper mills. Specifications vary from one dealer to the next depending on his equipment.

Acceptable (need not be flattened out):
- computer cards and printouts
- newspapers
- cardboard cartons
- magazines
- paper bags
- letters, memos, envelopes
- xeros, mimeo and ditto copy (no stencils); occasional staples are O.K. (removed by magnet)
- soiled paper towels, napkins, tissues
- junk mail (no cellophane!)
- maps
- padded book mailing envelopes
- old examinations, telephone books, catalogs paper plates if not waxed or plastic coated
- cardboard "saucers" used for meat packaging, even if soiled
- old Christmas cards, picture postcards
- match covers (no matches!)
- inside box from frozen vegetables
- cardboard packaging if not waxed or plastic coated
- cardboard egg cartons

Not acceptable:
- carbon paper, stencils (mimeo or ditto)
- any waxed paper products: coffee cups, milk cartons, wax paper, outside wrapping from frozen vegetables, paper plates
- photo copy material
- photographs: black and white, color prints and slides
- cellophane
- scotch tape
- any plastic: plastic bags, plastic egg cartons
- styrofoam: coffee cups, etc.
- aluminim foil, pie plates
- cigarette and cigar butts

3. Computer cards and printouts: Most departments generating these already recycle at least the cards. Others are reminded that the company pays $20.00/ton for printouts, from $26.00/ton up for cards (boxed) and picks up cards in appreciable amounts on demand 2-3 times a year from The Computer Science Department.

4. Storage bins outside buildings in the program will be clearly marked "Recyclable paper only -- no trash, please." Please help explain around campus the importance of NOT CONTAMINATING BATCHES OF WASTE PAPER SEPARATED FOR RECYCLING.

5. The newspaper collection organized by CEQ (whose Mark Segal has worked closely with us as well) will continue unchanged.

The rational for the recycling of paper is that the University generates about 40 tons of waste paper per week. This represents about 60% of its total trash. Obviously, whatever amount can be salvaged will help reduce land pollution and save in future land acquisition and landfill operation costs. In addition, it takes 17 trees to produce one ton of paper. 40 tons represents 680 trees.

De-inked waste paper can be used to manufacture newsprint, building board, corrugated cardboard, match covers, and - with varying amounts of virgin fiber - most other kinds of paper, including bond. It is hoped that the University and the town may in time be persuaded to contract for paper supplies made for recycled paper, as New York City and the Federal Government are now doing.

For any information, suggestions, or requests regarding the program, contact Eva Schiffer, 516 Herter Hall (Tel. 5-0324 or 256-6057;0.

Mobe Calls One-Day Moratorium May 5

Students from across the country are organizing one-day moratoriums and strikes on May 5 to commemorate the murders of students last year at Kent State and Jackson State Colleges.

The UMass Student Mobe has proposed a one-day moratorium on May 5 at UMass. They have called for a University-wide meeting of every student, every religious, political, and interest group, as well as every sorority, fraternity, and dormitory to vote on that proposal. Debate over that proposal and the university vote will take place in room 162-175 of the Campus Center at 7:00 p.m. tonight, Wednesday.

The National Student Mobilization Committee, the National Student Association, and the American Association of Student Governments, in concert with Black Student Unions across the country have endorsed a one-day moratorium on "business as usual" on May 5 to commemorate the deaths of our brothers and sisters and to demand immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Southeast Asia.

Since last May's antiwar actions which rocked the country, thousands more have died in what the SMC calls the quagmire that is Southeast Asia." Antiwar activities have been indicated on preposterous charges--and jailed, the SMC claims.

"Because the War has continued unabated, because Nixon has with impugnity escalated the War by invading Laos and bombing the North, because he feels he can pick off antiwar activists one by one, and because he continues to contradict the clear will of the majority to end the War in Southeast Asia, we feel it's important to put some political punch in our opposition to the War," said one UMass SMCer. A one-day moratorium against the War and in solidarity with antiwar activists throughout the U.S. will make it clear that we are serious about ending the War. We are not "fair-weather" opposition, appearing only once in the fall and once again in the spring," he added.

Frank Melton, editor of THE BLUE AND WHITE FLASH, the student newspaper at Jackson State, said in a recent press release: "My brothers at Jackson State College asked me to deliver this message to the President and the nation; when you have racist people like Governor John Bell Williams and the Mississippi Highway Patrol shooting innocent Black students on a college campus, and you front with us and the nation to act like you're concerned but you don't do anything about it, to hell with you because I've got a war on my hands right here at home against you and all other people like you.... Therefore, as a Black student, I urge all Black students to join in a call for a National Moratorium on April 24 and May 5, to protest through non-violent action, the War in Vietnam and to demand immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia and to demonstrate to the world that the policies of the Nixon administration are distasteful and offensive to the people of this country."

Craig Morgan, Student Body President at Kent State, added "We're asking you to commemmorate Kent State not because intimidation and harassment of the student antiwar movement is unusual, but because May 4, 1970 proved that it is not. If four can be killed, nine wounded, and 25 indicted at an average, unknown, midwestern university, then it can happen anywhere."

Orchard Hill Closeup

Residential College-Actuality or Myth?

By ANN GURNETT
MDC Staff

Orchard Hill Residential College has its roots embedded in the traditions of Harvard, Yale, and the older English Universities. Although it might not seem at first that a school with a 'cow college' reputation like UMass could accomplish such a feat, Orchard Hill has been an operating branch of the University since 1964.

The concept of a residential college first came to the attention of UMass faculty and administrators in 1963. At that time a Faculty Committee was formed to look into the possibility of establishing an institution loosely modelled after the Yale House system on UMass' Amherst campus. The group, advised by the Master of a Yale house, submitted a proposal for the beginning of such a program to the Administration and Trustees. The proposal was accepted in the Fall of 1964 and the program began to 'function'.

It was decided to set aside a new building complex located on Orchard Hill as the site of the Residential College. The complex, comprised of four buildings, was designed to accomodate 1300 students, with apartments for Heads of Residence and Faculty Residents. To be attached to each dorm, but not in a residential capacity, were a preceptor and twelve Faculty Fellows. Also appointed was a Master, performing the job of overall director and coordinator in both an academic and social sense for the entire college.

The rationale behind establishing a Residential College was the anticipation of many faculty members that the sense of anonymity experienced by many students was certain to increase as enrollment grew but life styles remained stagnant and inadequate. It was felt that a residential college would offer to the interested student the advantages of a smaller college in conjunction with a variety of well-developed courses within the broader scope of the University.

The rock just outside the gates to the Orchard is a familiar sight to any Hill resident, expecially those who live on the East side of Dickinson. Now that spring's here, more people will be wandering around absorbing the aesthetic value it contributes to its surroundings. (MDC photos by Gib Fullerton)

Originally it was planned that as many required courses as possible would be taught in the dormitories, as well as whatever electives seemed wise. Whenever possible, courses were to be taught by Faculty Fellows. The reasoning behind this was that by having their own staff who they could get to know both socially and academically, and by having classes in common, the students would feel that their education was more personalized and more in their control.

Informal programs, such as films, lectures, concerts, and panel discussions, were to be methods of incorporating all four dormitories into a genuine living-learning experience.

In summary, Orchard Hill Residential College was planned with a goal of making it possible to attend a small, personalized college within realm of the University. Throughout its seven years of operation, the College has had its successes, but it has also failed in many of its original objectives. The whys and hows of this failure are an interesting commentary on the entire University and its Administration.

The Hill is in its prime in the spring, when the apple trees start blossoming. O Lot looks a little different without its blanket of snow, along with aimost anything else you can think of.

Problems Encountered...

"The Orchard Hill Area has been struggling for several years to obtain recognition and support as a semi-autonomous Residential College. The struggle has been frustrated because of a situation which has not given the staff of Orchard Hill an opportunity to do more than perpetuate the status quo. This situation stems from a lack of 'local control' and the absence of the commitment to actually develop the concept of a Residential College." (The Residential College: An Organizational Proposal.)

The above quote mirrors the feelings of students, Administrators, and faculty of Orchard Hill in relation to the Hill's failure to fulfill that which was expected of it. The primary reason for the failure, according to Allen Davis, assistant to Leon Barron, (Master of Orchard Hill) is the fact that Orchard Hill is at the bottom of Whitmore's list of priorities.

"When we came back, in September," Davis said, "we were notified by Whitmore that the Master's Trust Fund, originally the sole monetary source for the Hill, had been cut completely. We didn't have a penny to call our own. When the Administration was contacted and asked about the matter, we were informed that the Physical Education Trust Fund was more important than was the financing of the College. We were fortunate" he continued, "in that we had made an agreement with the Student Personnel Office that we be allowed to use their funds."

The money that was supposed to have been allocated to the Master's Trust Fund was to have financed social functions, courses, and darkroom facilities. It was not to have been used in paying teachers of Orchard Hill courses.

The disappointments did not end there for the residents and administrators of the Hill. After seven years of trying to have a dining commons built solely for residents of the Hill, a cost feasability study was approved last year by the Board of Trustees with a maximum budget of $50,000. Before the study could be started, however, administrators of the Hill learned 'through the grapevine' that the administration had cancelled the study and had no intentions of ever building a dining commons for the Hill. Once again, it was a question of priorities, and the Hill wound up on the bottom of the list.

Perhaps the most frustrating disappointment to be encountered was, according to Davis, the refusal of the Faculty Senate and Administration to pay attention to a proposal to have Orchard Hill recognized as a semi-autonomous Residential College, for the second year in a row. The proposal was sent for two consecutive years to Deans whose names were on the mailing list. Upon receipt of the proposal, the Deans were supposed to read and consider them and then submit them to the Faculty Senate for consideration.

"As far as I know," said Davis, "not one of the leaflets ever reached the Senate. It's been one delay after another to have our petition recognized."

A final blow was landed with respect to faculty teaching courses on the Hill. According to an alleged agreement made between Dean Shapiro, his successor Dean Allen, Provost Gluckstern and Dr. Barron, Orchard Hill would have been allowed to borrow up to five full-time faculty positions, amounting to five faculty teaching on the Hill per semester. Each department that 'lent' faculty to Orchard Hill was to be compensated by Provost Gluckstern's office. However, none of the departments were compensated for the faculty lent to the College, due to a 'mix-up' of sorts somewhere midway between the administrations of the Hill and the University. This confusion engendered much resentment which was ultimately aimed at the Hill, making it difficult for Hill administrators to work with faculty in several departments.

People playing softball in the bowl have become an everyday sight, as have the frisbee champs. The sign in the upper right of the photo was placed there by concerned students to advertise the conflicts the Hill has been having with the Administration.

Future...

The string of disappointments has brought the students, administration and faculty of Orchard Hill to their feet. In an attempt to finally earn the title of 'Residential College' which the Hill has displayed for seven years with no actual foundation, a seven part petition has been drafted by a steering committee formed of twenty five representatives of the Hill community. The steering committee has also organized the students of the Hill into a unified group searching to finalize the conception of a residential college. In a series of meetings starting with the entire Hill community and narrowing down to individual corridor meetings, the students have defined their role within Orchard Hill Residential College and are seeking to impress their feelings upon the Administration. A meeting last night, April 13, held between Bromery, Gluckstern, Campion and the students of the Hill and one to be held today, between the Master of the Hill and the same administrators, may well be the climax of the fight to make Orchard Hill a semi-autonomous Residential College. If it succeeds, it may pave the way for Southwest and other residential living areas to follow and assure the University of a truly diversified, personalized living-learning experience.

Thanks are forthcoming to Dr. Leon Barron, his assistant Allen Davis, Larry, Steve, and all the people involved in making the Hill the place it is. It can only be hoped that the steering committee, the students, and Dr. Barron and his associates can impress upon the administration the necessity of making Orchard Hill the semi-autonomous Residential College it was originally intended to be.

Untitled Thoughts

I remember when I smelled a flower and I was in a fragance of beauty
I remember when I heard a bird and I was in a song of joy
I remember when I tasted a raindrop and I was in a rainbow of truth
I remember when I felt a touch and I was in a heaven of love
I remember when I saw a smile and I was in a sea of eternity
I remember when I was a child of innocence; pure and untouched
But now the flowers have wilted and I smell the stench of filth
But now the birds have died and I hear the sounds of hate and violence
But now the rain has stopped and I taste the hopelessness and despair
But now the touch has gone and I feel the emptiness and void
But now the smiles have faded and I see frowns of bitterness and anger
But now I am not a child because I had to grow up fast
I've become a product of civilization.

In The Vernacular

If you have come this far in life, you've probably seen and read any number of columns trying to portray au currant vernacular and other idosyncracies of the English language, which have a great deal of usage amonst certain defined "elements" within the greater society. The classy magazines tell their readers about how the Black Panthers talk, always with the rigid "pig" and "honkey" leading the list. Russell Baker lets everymen know what "everyman" is talking about. And Mad Magazine perverts everything down to a reasonable level of absurdity.

UMass has developed an extraneous vocabulary which possibly cuts to the heart of what a University is all about. For example:

CO—ED—This perfectly sexist term used to mean the pretty Homecoming queen type with a tight sweater and enough to fill it. Now it's a dormitory where men have easy acess to those former co-eds.

ADMINISTRATION—This used to be the watchword for incompetency and vagueness, compounded by a profound desire to eat at the Top of the Campus and have a drink after .. whatever they finish doing what every they do all day. They haven't changed, but they have multiplied and created longer lines at the Whitmore Coffee Shop.

LIBRARY—If it has a complete listing of "SEED AND GRAIN QUARTERLY" dating back to 1794 you know its a library. Chief characteristics include lots of room for books they don't have, and a promise for even more such space in the near future. But, libraries aren't built of books alone, the new one is constructed with baked clay from the fertile plains of tomato land.

HATCH—This was once a place where bunny rabbits grew fat and copulated, now people just get fat and think about it, while they try to get stomach cancer from drinking coffee.

THE SQUAD—It has a grassy area in the middle, analagous, we imagine, to the hair in the armpit everyone knows it is to this University. The Quad (from the Greek?) can be recognized easily by its graceful exterior and putrid interior and is never mentioned in any of the University's official propaganda.

STUDENTS—They are the clean cut young ladies and gentlemen portrayed on this year's course catalogue. They don't smoke marijuana and only have beer on Spring Day.

GREEKS—Just another group of those teeming millions trying to establish their "role" at the big University. They do it by remaining true to the more tradiitional American values...sex, violence, football, etc.

SEX—This is one of those subjects that has become a little touchy-feely.

MARIJUANA—A new substitute for orange juice and Wheaties that the Chancellor once studied as a Graduate student. "We used to have it in jars" says Tippo. Maybe he had something there?

TOP OF THE CAMPUS—"A great place to get high."

STUDENT SENATE—"A course given by the government department to teach those who never broke from mother University how to act civil inspite of themselves.

ALTERNATIVE—A way of getting through four years of University education without any of the harmful effects of education.

(VIABLE)—Getting away with it.

A Living Monument

WASHINGTON—Once again the critics are yelling for J. Edgar Hoover's resignation. House Majority Leader Hale Boggs last week demanded that Atty. Gen. John Mitchell replace the FBI leader. Other senators have asked the President to force retirement on the 76-year-old Hoover.

The trouble with this is that neither John Mitchell nor the President of the United States has the authority to make Mr. Hoover quit.

What very few people realize is that J. Edgar Hoover is a National Monument and he only one who can alter his status is the National Fine Arts Commission.

The National Fine Arts Commission is composed of seven people who have the authority to declare which monuments in Washington stay and which ones go. There is no possible way of moving J. Edgar Hoover unless the Fine Arts Commission decides he no longer serves an historical purpose.

So far, the commission has been reluctant to declare Mr. Hoover surplus. One commission member told me, "The test of an historical monument is whether it represents an era that everyone is interested in."

"What era in history does J. Edgar Hoover represent?" I asked.

"The Dillinger period. Mr. Hoover is the only monument we have in Washington commemorating the wonderful days of John Dillinger. If we put Hoover in storage, there will be a big gap in our national history."

"But there has been an outcry lately to replace him with something modern and more up to date."

"The National Fine Arts Commission faces this dilemma every day. Do you stay with the old or go with the new? It is our feeling that Mr. Hoover is the only living national monument left in Washington, and we would be doing a great disservice to the country if we tore him down."

"I can see that from your point of view," I said. "But what about progress? You can't ignore the needs of the capital."

"You must keep in mind," the man said, "that Washington is a tourist town, and people from all over the world come here to see the foundations of this country. The first sight everyone wants to see is J. Edgar Hoover. For 47 years he has been one of the main attractions. Children have grown up with his legend. He is an inspiration to every American. We would not be fulfilling our function if at this late date we took him off his pedestal."

"I appreciate history as much as anyone," I said. "But if the Fine Arts Commission refused to replace Mr. Hoover, he could be the FBI forever."

"Perhaps, but our business is to protect this nation's landmarks. We're not concerned with politics or the demands of the times. All we ask ourselves is 'Does it fit in with the old architecture of the city, will it recreate an ambiance of a bygone era and does the monument tell us something about ourselves?' Mr. Hoover fulfills all these qualifications."

"Well, if you won't put him in storage, are you at least thinking of moving him to a less conspicuous part of town?"

"Frankly, we are giving that some consideration. If the pressure continues, we may authorize a new spot for him away from the Justice Department."

"Where?"

"We have a wonderful site we're looking at right now, near the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception."

The Evil Machine

Probably one of the easiest ways to make the headlines these days is to write an article on ecology and hand it to your friendly editor. I'd like to take advantage of this fact and try to shed a ray of light on an often overlooked area of ecology-noise pollution.

A few summers ago as a swingshifter at UMass, I got my first exposure to rural noise pollution. While sitting through my classes, small armies of lawn mowers would invade the otherwise placid environment with such noise that we would have to stop talking until they had temporarily gone by. As soon as the bell rang and I made my way to the next class, they would surround me with all the din of a diesel locomotive.

There is really no argument that the lawns be cut, but must it be done with all the brain blasting fanfare of a jackhammer? It has never ceased to amaze me that a 350 h.p. Cadillac can whiz by at sixty mph in almost complete silence, yet a five horsepower lawn mower, or a Honda trail 90, rarely leaves anyone within a thousand feet undisturbed.

Not only is this noise bothersome, but has been proven harmful. A sustained noise level of 85 decibels can and will cause permanent ear damage. Think of this next time a lawn mower goes by blasting out 98 decibels, or that harmless Honda at 110 decibels.

Spring is just around the corner along with green grass (what's left of it here), and the diligent mowing men. There is no reason however, that we must be assaulted by the machines' booming blast this year. I understand that there is now on the market an inexpensive and easily installed muffler that cuts down the noise by 40 decibels. This would make the lawnmower about as loud as ordinary conversation.

I would like to urge those in the physical plant to consider this device, not only to save the lazy summer serenity of our campus, but for the health of our students too.

No Girls Need Apply

A number of high schools received a copy of this letter last fall. With college acceptances going out now, we thought it was timely.

"As you undoubtedly recall, I visited your school last spring instead of this fall due to our heavy fall schedule of visitations. Therefore, I am enclosing with this letter a data processing listing of all the students who applied from your high school last year with all of their characteristics and the action taken upon their applications...

"For this year we believe that any girl who ranks in the top 15 percent with mid-500 boards who is recommended by you and in a good solid college program undoubtedly will be admitted. For the males drop in down to the top 25 percent with low 500's with the other same characteristics and they should make it. Please defer submitting applications until the first set of marks are out unless you have outstanding candidates who wish to apply earlier...

Sincerely yours,

Adding Unwilling Bodies

To the Editor:

On April 1, 1971, the U.S. House of Representatives voted, 293 to 99, to approve H.R. 6531, the Administration-supported bill which would extend the draft for two years, until July 1, 1973. During the two days of debate preceding the final vote on H.R. 6531, House members rejected more than a dozen amendments by anti-war congressman, including an amendment by Rep. Michael Harrington (D—Mass.) to end the induction authority by July 1, 1971; an amendment by Rep. Charles Whalen (R—Ohio) to extend the draft for only one year, until July 1, 1972; an amendment by Rep. Donald Frazer (D—Minn.) providing that no registrant drafted after December 31, 1971 be required to serve in Indochina; and an amendment by Rep. Sam Gibbons (D—Fla.) providing that no registrant be drafted for service outside the United States unless the President or Congress had officially declared war or declared a state of national emergency because of armed attack.

This bill just passed in the House should be of particular concern to college students because, should the U.S. Senate version of the bill, S. 427, be approved, the new law would permit the President to abolish all undergraduate deferments (except, curiously enough, divinity students' deferments, which were reinstituted early in the House debate). Before egalitarians begin applauding the House action at removing this large loophole, which for years has favored the more affluent who could afford college--it should be noted that to some extent the abolition of undergraduate deferments would be retroactive; i.e., any registrant who obtaineda college deferment after April 23, 1970 would henceforth be ineligible for such deferment and liable for the draft. Thus, it seems that a number of the young men in the class of 1974 may soon be chosen to add their unwilling bodies to the front lines in Indochina.

Insidious? Yes, particularly in light of the fact that a majority (52%) of American citizens indicated in a Harris Poll in January, 1970--more than a year ago--that they favored an end to conscription and institution of an all-volunteer army. (A Life magazine/Harris Poll survey reported in January, 1971, that 69% of 18-, 19-, and 20-year-olds favor a voluntary military over any form of compulsory service.) The House bill also included a provision increasing the required civilian service of conscientious objectors from two years to three. The House rejected, 242 to 131, an amendment by Rep. David Dennis (R—Ind.) which would have continued the required CO term at two years. This new CO provision is apparently the response of our "Representatives" to the 100,000 CO applications submitted by young men to their draft boards during 1970.

Within a few days' time the Senate will consider various bills concerning the draft. Those who wish to join in lobbying against draft extension, and/or draft repeal, may contact Arlen Brunson or myself at 306 Moore House, 546-5371.

To the Editor:

Up until now, the Campus Center dining room and bar hasn't really given me anything to complain about. I'm complaining now. First of all there are never enough waitresses or cocktail waitresses to go around during the onslaught of a convention.

Secondly, students are not allowed to charge drinks. Only departments with special accounts are afforded this priviledge, yet if the concerned is worried about non-paying students, it is absurdly simple to track them down. It certainly shouldn't be too difficult to demand payment from a student who would be required to give his address (and possibly his ID number).

Thirdly, the dining room does not seem to think that the student's money is as green as an olster's. Repeatedly, students have to wait for a table while conventioneers or someone over thirty is seated immediately.

Who's Kidding Whom

To the Editor:

An organization or group may call itself anything it wants, and many do. Reading the April 12 article on Harambe, the Third World organization, however, one wonders who is kidding whom.

"Third World" has a pretty clear meaning in the world today. It refers to countries of the globe which belong to neither the "free world" (America's allies, in large part) nor the Communist bloc (China, the Soviet Union, and their allies). Many, but not all, of the third world countries are composed of non-white peoples. Some countries of the third world are quite vocal about being third world; for them, third world is a concept they find value in stressing. Other countries which qualify for third world status haven't yet announced their involvement. Being of the third world may--but does not necessarily--involve commitment to certain attitudes or policies about the world, power, imperialism, development, racism. Being of the third world does, necessarily, imply being foreign.

At this University there are more than 600 foreign students enrolled, the majority of them from third world countries. I recognize none of their names among the seven officers of the Third World organization listed in Miss Stadnicki's article. Is it possible the real third worlders at UMass haven't yet discovered there is a campus organization which is "meeting their cultural and social needs"? Or perhaps the real third worlders have heard, and don't want any part of an organization which, knowingly or unknowingly, is intruding on their prerogatives and identities in its pretentious and unjustifiable claims of representation.

Unfair Practices

To the Editor:

The following is a petition drawn up by forty women who applied to become part of the UMass Nursing Program: To the students of the University,

We the undersigned, have been made aware of the grave difficulties within the School of Nursing at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. We demand that the administration expand the existing inadequate facilities to accomodate those students already enrolled at the University who wish to enter this department, before accepting any new students."

We ask for the united support of the entire student body in this endeavor, which is crucial to the adequate development of a nursing program to fulfill the health needs of the Commonwealth.

There will be a table in the Campus Center as well as petitions in the Dining Commons to gather signatures from the University community at large. We hope to point out publicly the plight of the potential nursing student here at the University.

The University has already begun accepting incoming freshmen and transfer students into the nursing program for next Fall before even considering those of us who wish to change our major to Nursing from within the University. We feel that this is a grossly unfair acidemic practice, and further shows how a University with the size and potential of UMass can act in a manner which does not care for the students it has already enrolled.

As Clean As Thou

To the Editor:

Concerning Jim Moran's column of 13 April; I believe Mr. Moran underestimates the fairness of military courts. As a 24-year old reserve short timer I served on several court martial boards. In civilian life I have not yet been entrusted with jury duty, and probably won't be until I'm an upstanding member of the community. The military requires that the defendant be offered the services of a lawyer no less qualified than the prosecutor, and free of charge. Most Judge Advocate General types (drafted lawyers) are also short timers and work diligently to protect the defendents. In addition the defendent may hire a civilian lawyer. How well do our civilian courts protect us?

I'm not suggesting that the court which tried Calley was not under an awful lot of pressure, both from within the military and from without, but it appears to me that Mr. Calley was tried by much more of a jury of his peers (most had been to Viet Nam) than he would have been in most civilian courts. I think the military establishment is as clean as the civilian one in this area.

Sporting Attitude

To the Editor:

What does Julius Erving owe to the University of Massachusetts? It would seem to me highly possible that Julius Erving has given the University more than he has received and I would suggest, therefore, that it would be intellectually, physically and emotionally impossible for him to arrive at a decision that would be right for "...Massachusetts, his family and himself". I would submit that there is no alternative other than to accept the fact that Julius Erving alone knows what is best for Julius Erving.

The ABA is a fact of life and whether or not the University of Massachusetts coaches and basketball fans approve of the tactics used to sign the 'star' it would surely be more fitting at this time to adopt a sporting attitude and say, "Good luck Julius and thank you for what you have done for the University of Massachusetts".

Editorial Points

The Surgeon General of the United States made some interesting observations in a recent report concerning the effects of marijuna. The document stated that it takes about forty marijuna cigarets to do as much damage as two cigarets in terms of tar and nicotine. A good suggestion, perhaps, for those smokers trying to quit might be that they simply cut down to about a pack of marijuna cigarets a day.

Greater Flexibility

To the Editor:

During the last six months, Americans have twice been asked by the American Red Cross to join in a massive letter writing campaign to the government of North Vietnam, demanding that it uphold the points stated at the Geneva Convention, in the treatment of American War Prisoners. The effectiveness of this and other United States efforts can be measured by what seems to be a greater flexibility in Hanoi's stand. Since the start of 1970:

1. Three times as much mail has been received from U.S. prisoners in North Vietnam as in the previous five years.
2. Approximately 320 Americans have been identified as prisoners of the North Vietnamese as compared with scarcely 100 a year ago.
3. Hanoi has indicated prisoners may write and receive one letter a month and that families may send relief parcels once every other month.
4. In May, 1970, six weeks after the American Red Cross launched its second "Write Hanoi" effort, a total of 194 letters were received by families of U.S. prisoners, five of which had no prior confirmation that the men were in fact prisoners. There were also letters from 21 men known previously to be war prisoners, but from whom their families had not heard.
5. Latest figures show that some 430 American servicemen are being held as prisoners of war. Another 1,000 men are missing and possibly captured.

In conjunction with this movement, there will be a "Write Hanoi" campaign during the week of April 20th through the 23rd, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. This will include a table in front of the University of Mass. Campus Store in the Campus Center. There will be form letters to sign and personal letters to write along with buttons, flyers, and pamphlets.

On Thursday, April 22 from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. on the 8th floor of the Campus Center there will be an informative discussion concerning P.O.W.'s and Men Missing in Action. The moderator will be John Kozlowski, the Springfield College Recruiter, and assisting him will be Mrs. Norman Hinckley of Springfield, mother of a P.O.W., and tentatively, Miss Patricia Sullivan of Northampton, sister of a P.O.W.

As part of this movement the campus religious centers will include special prayers for P.O.W.'s and men missing in action on April 18th and 25th.

YSA Ubiguity

By MATT TACKEFF

During the late 30's and early 40's there was a substantial part of the American population which was opposed to American military involvement in WW II. The largest anti-war group of that period was the isolationist "America First" committee. That organization was democratically run and ideologically diverse. All of its participants were united in a common effort to steer America clear of any involvement in the European holocaust. The group had several distinguished followers: Senator Bob Taft, a Republicsn; A.J. Muste, a Pacifist; and (prior to Hitler's breach of the Hitler-Stalin non-agression pact William Z. Foster and Earl Browder of the Communist Party. The fact that the committee had diverse membership seemed to hide the fact that among the nucleus and ringleaders of the organization was a hard core cell of professional antisemites and Nazi sympathizers, people like Charles Lindgergh, Gerald L.K. Smith, and Father Coughlin.

Most members of the committee were honestly anti-war, they just didn't realize that they were fronting for the Fascists.

Today there is a similar anti-war front, the MOBE. The following of the MOBE is diverse. I myself worked for the MOBE in high school. In reality, the MOBE is run and operated by a corps of "interchangeable flunkies" from the YSA, a Trotskyist outfit. Today, many people are aware of this, but when I was involved in the group, many people in it were unaware of it and withdrew from the MOBE when they found that they were fronting for the Trots. Sid Finehirsh calls it "red baiting" for people like Mr. Corry and Mr. Baglione to call attention to the ubiquity of Claire Moriarty, Bernie Lougee and Sid himself in the leadership positions of other organizations. I don't think so. Why should the YSA get uptight at charges of their ubiquity? Unless perhaps they are trying to hide that fact in order to maintain effective front groups.

Private-Public Colleges Must Join Against State

Robert Wood, President of the University of Massachusetts, said last night that private and public colleges and universities must join in a collaborative, rather than competitive effort, to "convince state and federal lawmakers anew they are a national resource which cannot be allowed to go under."

Speaking on the financing and future of higher education in New England, Dr. Wood stressed that "No amount of fiscal wizardry and belt-tightening is going to save private higher education, however, without some substantial infusion of federal and state assistance."

Public higher education, he said, will require "a very substantial commitment of resources" if it is to strengthen its quality and meet its increased needs.

Both public and private institutions are vital to this region's success. They can weather higher education's financial drought if the different experiences they have to offer are based on "collaborative, not competitive planning." President Wood noted that Massachusetts and New Hampshire spend less per capita on public higher education than any other states in the nation.

New England's academic community needs to be "genuinely united" against the "tidal wave of growth and change," if it is to build a better future for New England and the nation.

"The real challenge is going to be how to remain clear about the university's essential purposes, and how to protect these from being bled to death in the name of economy."

Dr. Wood cited rising blue collar wages, faculty expectations, tuition backlash, construction costs, computer costs, unexpected repairs, vanishing research dollars, and--"let's face it--competition with low-tuition public institutions that make college presidents--particularly at private colleges--feel like Kamikaze pilots."

"If there is anything that the present fiscal crisis teaches, it is that this is no time for amateurs in the financial management of education. The days of Mr. Chips sort of running the school with his left hand are over."

President Wood addressed a meeting of the New England division of the National Association of Educational Buyers at the University's campus center here. The NAEB is a professional organization of educational and hospital business and purchasing people.

He predicted in the next decade the demand for higher education will grow rapidly; experimentation will become more widespread, but without financial extravagance; there will be increasing pressure to get more for the money and better utilization of facilities; additional federal and state resources will have to be found, for public and private institutions.

Dr. Wood told the audience, however, that if the new decade "brings just more and not better education, we will have failed the future."

Zero Population Growth

Man Must Stop Multiplying

(Ed. Note: The following article is the first in a series dealing with the problems of over-population. The articles are presented by four members of the local chapter of Zero Population Growth (Pioneer Valley ZPG). Three are graduate students at the University of Massachusetts. The fourth member is a local gynecologist. Each article will outline specific population problems: Implication of population growth; Food Supply; Resources; Responsibility for growth; Obstacles to slowing population growth; and methods of population control. Further information may be gained by contacting John Maytum at 584-8591 or George Wilder 549-0768

Today there are many responsible people who are seriously and justifiably concerned about mankind's present state of affairs and doubtful about his future. Their concern is over many and varied issues: war, pollution, crime, nuclear proliferation, corruption and inefficiency in government, famine and many others. Yet, in the words of Thoreau, "there are a thousand hacking at the branches of evil to one who is striking at the root." Overpopulation may well be that root. This does not mean that all our problems will be solved if we limit our growth, but it does mean that none of these problems will be solved if we do not halt our unneeded and harmful multiplication. Thirty-eight Noble Prize winners led by Julian Huxley and Cass Canfield recently issued the following statement: "Unless a favorable balance of population and resources is achieved with a minimum of delay, there is in prospect a Dark Age of human misery, famine, under education and unrest which could generate growing panic, exploding into wars fought to appropriate the dwindling means of survival."

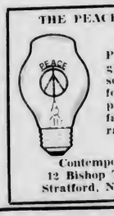
How do people determine that there is a serious population problem? There are several basic statistical indicators. The birth rate, or number of children born per thousand per year, and the death rates are significant values when considered together. If the birth rate exceeds the death rate, then population is increasing. In the "have" nations of the world (Western Europe, USSR, New Zealand and the US) birth rates are relatively little ahead of death rates. In the "have not" nations, however (Asia, Latin America and Africa), birth rates are stalled at high levels while death rates are declining. Before one retains the impression that there is no population problem in the U.S., he should consider that the U.S., with 6% of the world's population, consumes 40% of the world's resources.

The rate of population growth, which is a function of birth and death rates, is expressed as the annual population increase. The U.S. with an annual rate of population growth of 1% is now doubling its population in 70 years. World population is now growing at the rate of 2% per year and may well double in 35 years. Yet only two years ago, the world's doubling time was 37 years. Kuwait, doubling every nine years, has the world's highest doubling rate. Thus, human numbers are skyrocketing.

Birth rates, alone, can be misleading. The percentage of the population under 15 years of age is a useful indicator for future growth, since it reflects the number of people who will soon reach reproductive age. The extreme difficulty of substantially reducing the growth rate of a nation with a high proportion of young people has been illustrated by recent events in Japan.

Faced with an acute population problem after World War II, Japan made a drastic effort to limit its population growth through birth control measures. Abortion was legalized. As a result, Japan cut her birth rate in half in less than 15 years, something no nation had done before. Yet, during those years Japan's population increased 20%, from 75 million to 90 million people.

Despite her attempt, Japan's population increases were inevitable because in 1945 her population contained a high proportion of young people with no children of their own. They subsequently produced the bulk of the nation's children.



India's population contains a highly disproportionate number of young people, and that is basically why India's population prospects look so grim. In contrast, Sweden's population is almost uniformly distributed throughout all age groups, and their future appears comparatively bright. In the U.S. the birth rate has shown a continuing increase since early 1969.

We cannot afford to wait for another generation to put the brakes on population growth. If, for example, the U.S. achieved replacement level (in which each female produces an average of one female offspring) in the year 2000, population growth would not stop until 2065 with a final population size of more than 350 million people. The President's commission of Population and American future recently released this forboding statement: "If families had two children and stabilized immediately, the population would still grow from 206 million to 260 million by the year 2000. By 2071, the total would be 341 million. If families had an average of 3 children, the population would be 321 million by the year 2000 and nearly one billion a hundred years from now, the commission stated.

According to Paul Ehrlich, author of the Population Bomb and a population biologist at Stanford, if we continue at our present rate of increase for only 900 years, the present population would theoretically grow to 60 million billion people. This number would correspond to a population density of about 100 persons per square yard of the earth's surface, land and sea. Of course, due to war, famine, disease and pollution these proportions would never be reached. And these seem to be the chief agents that mankind is relying upon to limit his population growth, rather than some birth control procedures.

The question of just who is providing all the fuel for this population explosion will be examined in the next article.

David Kherdian, Armenian Poet, To Read In UMass Poetry Festival

By TOM DERDERIAN
MDC Staff

David Kherdian, noted Armenian poet, has accepted an invitation to read his poems in the second annual UMass poetry festival. Kherdian was born in Racine, Wisconsin and now lives in Hanover, New Hampshire.

He didn't start writing poetry until he was 35 years old, and living in San Francisco. Before then he had compiled and published: A Bibliography of William Soroyan, 1934-1961, (Roger Beacham, 1965) and Six San Francisco Poets.

He has published 3 books of his poetry: Eight Poems and On the Death of My Father and other Poems. And with James Baloian, another Armenian poet, he edited a collection of poems entitled: Down at the Sante Fe Depot-20 Fresno Poets. Fresno, California has a large Armenian population community with which Kherdian was closely associated when he lived in the San Francisco area.

He says of poetry, "I gain the future by reclaiming and making whole the past. I can achieve (only through poetry) a working relationship with my unconscious, which gives shape and form to periods lived in chaos and ignorance.

In a sense all of my writing is autobiographical, because my own story, when truly told, becomes everyone's."

As an Armenian, Kherdian has a great deal of past to draw from. The Armenian nation has one of the longest histories known. The original country at the cross roads of the world in the Middle East has been subject to the tyranny of 14 conquering Armies and yet remains a strong culture although scattered in diaspora from Fresno to Beirut.

The time of David Kherdian's reading has not yet been announced by the English Dept.

Pakistan Questions Answered Tonight

What's going on in East Pakistan? A group representing various points of view will try to come up with some answers in an Orchard Hill forum tonight at the University of Massachusetts.

"The Crisis in East Pakistan" will be discussed by a panel beginning at 7:30 p.m. in Noah Webster Lounge, with Webster House Faculty Resident Luther Allen as moderator. The public is invited.

Panelists will be Anwar Syed of the UMass government faculty; UMass graduate student Sajjid Naseer; David Yaukey, a UMass sociologist who lived and worked for two years in East Pakistan; and Mohammed H. Khan of the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Planning Commission. He is former head of the political science department at the University of Lahore in West Pakistan.

Lead Controversy Discussed Tomorrow

Mr. Joel Warren, Research Associate, Ethyl Corporation, Detroit, Michigan, will be on campus tomorrow to give two seminars.

Ethyl Corporation is one of the two U.S. corporations (the other is Dupont) that produce tetraethyl lead, an antiknock ingredient used in most automotive gasoline. Tetraethyl lead is the subject of much controversy because of the recent announcement by the automobile industry to the effect that they plan to produce future automobiles that can run on low lead or unleaded gasoline.

Most of the controversy is on the public health aspects of lead released by automobiles and the possible side effects of the new lead-replacement additives. Mr. Warren will discuss this and related topics in two seminars he will be giving on Thursday, April 15th. The seminars are open to the general public.

"Automotive Emissions and Tetraethyl Lead, will be held in S.B.A. 110, 4:00-5:00 P.M. and "Ethyl's Lean Mixture Exhaust Reaction System" will be in the Campus Center 163-164, 7:30-8:30 P.M.

Shaw Play Opens Tonight

What Do The Simple Folk Do?

A meeting of two worlds in this scene from MAJOR BARBARA, the UT production opening tonight. Here Barbara listens to the problems of an unemployed bloke. (MDC Photo by Bob Nesti.)

MAJOR BARBARA, a comedy by George Bernard Shaw, attacking the problem of organized charity will open tonight at 8:30

MAJOR BARBARA is the story of Barbara Undershaft, a young woman of the upper class in Victorian England, who joins the Salvation Army and becomes anti-capitalistic. Her father, a munitions king and armament manufacturer, opposes her and encourages the development of a capitalistic society indifferent to spiritual values.

Barbara advocates refusing money offered to the Salvation Army by her father and Bodger, a liquor magnate. Later in the play she is forced to reconsider her decision.

Along with having high praise for the kind of ensemble acting which has developed during rehearsals, Director Doris Abramson called MAJOR BARBARA "my favorite of all Shaw plays. It is a lively, a times maddening debate about money, power, ideals, and public and private values," she said.

A revolving set has been designed by Jeff Fiala; costumes are by Liz Weiss; lighting by Paul Wonsek; and technical direction by Nicholas Scott.

Tickets can be purchased at the Bartlett Auditorium Box office, or by calling the box office, 545-2579. Admission is $1.75.

Quartet Gives Concert Tonight

An in-rehearsal shot of the Borodin Quartet. This outstanding Soviet group will appear in a single concert tonight in Bowker Auditorium at 8. They will perform works of Prokofiev and Beethoven.

The Borodin String Quartet from the Soviet Union will appear in concert in Bowker Auditorium this evening, Wednesday, April 14th at 8:00 p.m. under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council. This will mark the first occasion a Russian ensemble has visited the University and brings to this campus the Soviet Union's leading string quartet.

The program for tonight's concert will include Sergi Prokofiev's String Quartet No. 2 in F Major, opus 92 and Beethoven's String Quartet in B Flat Major, Opus 130 with Grosse Fuge, Opus 133. The Beethoven work, in its complete form including the Grosse Fugue, is encountered rarely in concert halls these days, therefore, the Borodin's inclusion of this work is highly awaited by discerning music lovers. Members of The Borodin String Quartet are Rostislav Dubinsky, First Violin; Yaroslav Alexandrov, Second Violin; Dimitri Shebalin, Viola and Valentin Berlinsky, Cello.

Reserved tickets for tonight's concert by the Borodin String Quartet are priced at $1 for UMass undergraduates; $1.50 for other students; $2.50 for UMass faculty/staff and $3.00 for the general public and may be purchased at the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall until 4:00 p.m. from 7:00 p.m. tonight, a box office will operate at Bowker Auditorium for remaining tickets. Both box offices may be reached by telephone by dialing 345-0202. Advance reservations are advised.

Local Company Premieres Horovitz Play

World premiere of Israel Horovitz' Hero, formerly The World's Greatest Play, will be produced by the Stone Theater Group under the direction of David Rimmer, who brought to the Pioneer Valley a new version of Peter Pan last fall. Hero will begin its four day run April 23, in the Stone Basement Theater, Amherst College.

Originally Mr. Horovitz sought New York production for his new play but has become disenchanted with New York theater business. Now he has agreed to close friend David Rimmer at Amherst College to discover the possibility of play production unhindered by the commercial pressures of professional theater.

Among Israel Horovitz' repertoire is Obie (Off-Broadway's equivalent to Tony) winning The Indian Wants the Bronx. Mr. Horovitz also writes screenplays, teaches at City College of New York and is a doctoral candidate at City University of New York.

Besides Peter Pan, which received enthusiastic reviews in the Daily Hampshire Gazette and in New York's Village Voice, Mr. Rimmer directed and acted in Horovitz' Rats last spring; then during the Student Strike he traveled with Rats on a tour of several Western Massachusetts secondary schools.

Experienced members of the Stone Theater Group will star in Hero. Tom McKitterick, as Hero, appeared in a recent production of Threepenny Opera, Dream Engine, and McNally's Bottiecelli, which accompanied Rats on area tour last spring. Meri Golden has performed in undergraduate theater at Smith, Dartmouth and Amherst, most recently in the plays The Homecoming and The Rose Tatoo. Very active in Amherst theater, Peter Trencher has acted in two Horovitz plays, Morning and Rats and last fall appeared in Woyzeck.

Also in Hero will be Pat Cassidy, Alison Cox, Ted Smith, Mary Stevens and Chris Torch.

Two preview performances of Hero will be presented Wednesday and Thursday, April 21-1, at 9 p.m. No tickets are required for these performances.

Tickets for performances on April 23, 24, 25 and 26 at 8:30 p.m. and at 2:30 p.m. Sunday (April 25) afternoon can be obtained at NO CHARGE by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Box 1466, Amherst College, 01002. Tickets may also be picked up beginning April 14 during lunch and dinner at Valentine Hall, Amherst College.

Adding To The Compost

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

It seems that the "letters to the editor" section of the MDC has become something of a battleground for those on either side of the organic-vs. chemical-farming issue. I'd like to add a few more words to the compost heap. I will also review a few books on survival, for those of you who care.

My own ideas on food consumption are changing, so much of what I will say is nothing more than speculation. Take it with a grain of sea-salt.

It seems to me that most of those who claim that we are unable to produce sufficient quantities of food by organic methods are making some serious false assumptions. One is that this country is currently producing a "surplus" of food. (The quotes are due to the fact that people are starving in this country and in much of the rest of the world. This makes any treatment of "surplus" food other than distribution to the hungry criminal. Anyway.) Our surplus is dumped in the ocean, plowed under, left to rot in silos, burned, or otherwise wasted. In addition, many of our farmers are paid to not grow crops. Thus, the fact is that, as we are currently utilizing our food, we are producing far more than we are able to use.

The argument that we need chemicals to force crops out of the land in order to provide enough of our food, in light of this analysis, at least bears closer examination.

There are other factors to consider as well. In this country, over 50% of our agricultural land is devoted to feeding livestock. Nearly 75% of our grain production is fed to livestock. As the bulk of this feed is used by the animal for its growth, or passed off, the return value of this food is very low. Put simply, meat is very inefficient food source. There are many other sources of protein. If we are concerned about our ability to produce food so that nobody needs to starve, we should probably all become vegetarians so that our food production can be for ourselves rather than for animals.

Another factor is what pesticides do to natural lifecycles. Consider DDT. For decades, the Food and Drug Administration and the other control agencies permitted its widespread use. Only recently have they discovered its harmful side effects. Birds eat insects contaminated with DDT. It remains in their bodies, accumulating as the bird eats more insects. One certain effect of this accumulation is that it weakens the shells of the birds' eggs, in some cases to the point that the egg will be crushed under the weight of the nesting bird. Pelicans and other birds are now considered endangered species due to this phenomenon.

As the birds lose their ability to reproduce, a few other disasters will take place. Some birds help pollinate plants. This will lessen their chance of survival. Drastic reductions of bird and plant life will destroy food sources for other animals, perhaps wiping them out as well. Since birds provide one of the most important checks on the proliferation of insects, in all likelihood we are using chemical insecticides to kill off natural insect control so that in the future we will have no choice but to use chemicals which will have to be even stronger than the ones we now use which will possibly poison us. It's not science fiction, baby. Enough scientists are concerned about the possibility to make me say we've got to take a serious look at it.

I'd rather not do it and find out that I could have than do it and find out that I shouldn't have because my baby died of DDT in its mother's milk.

The case has been made that some newly developed varieties of crops have been genetically produced to take advantage of massive applications of chemical fertilizers. It's great that science has been able to do this. The next step should be to develop varieties which are able to thrive on organic fertilizers. To adapt plants to pollution and use that as a justification for continuing to pollute makes about as much sense as giving everybody gas masks so they can breathe sulfur dioxide and using the masks as a rationale for not cleaning up noxious emmisions from smokestacks and exhaust pipes.

Obviously, none of this can be done overnight. But a start has to be made. Nature does provide sufficient soil nutrients and natural pest controls to allow us to stop poisoning the earth. We, as individuals, should start trying to change our eating habits so that we consume the most efficient foods, and make every attempt to procure organic foods whenever possible. The world you save may be your own.

PEACE.

BOOK REVIEWS.

The Book of Survival by Anthony Greenback ($.95-New American Library, NYC.) comes out of a bag that most people have no idea how to take care of themselves when they are actually in a crisis situation. Greenback feels that if people read the book, the information will be collected in his subconscious where it can be called upon if an emergency arises. It just might work. The book covers almost any imaginable emergency situation, and usually proposes several ways to cope with it. Unlike many such books, it does not assume that you are equipped with Batman's utility belt, a tool kit, and an Indian's knowledge of woodsmanship. Whether dealing with being lost in the woods, trapped in a collapsed building, or in the middle of a panic-stricken crowd, the book describes how to make do with the things you most likely will have with you--your head, hands, feet, clothes. It looks like a good book for anyone living who wishes to continue in that state.

Drownproofing by Fred Lanoue ($4.95-Prentice-Hall, Inc., Englewood Cliffs, N.J.) teaches you how to float indefinitely--in water, that is. According to tests of the method cited in the book, it works. If you spend much time in or around the water, this might be a good book to read. There should be a less expensive paperback edition, though.

Skills for Taming the Wilds by Bradford Angier ($6.95--Stackpole Books, Harrisburg, Pa.) is a good guide for the outdoorsman. In addition to basic camping and other outdoor skills, the book provides some excellent suggestions for dealing with survival situations. Angier has written a number of books, and is considered an authority on woodsmanship. This book is primarily useful as a field manual, however, and should be printed in a softcover field edition to reduce pack weight as well as cost. It's a good friend to have along.

Outdoor Survival Skills by Larry D. Olsen ($3.50-Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah) is an excellent book on how to go into the woods with nothing but the clothes on your back and a smile--and survive. On second thought, maybe you had better cheat and bring the book with you for the first couple of trips. There's so much material that you won't remember it all. If you want to get away for a couple of days or a couple of decades, take this book with you. It shows you how to build a shelter of snow or branches, how to find or catch food, how to make tools, how to depend only on yourself and your own skills for survival. Dig it.

In the coming weeks, CULTURNATIVES will deal with many different aspects of cultural alternatives. If you're into it and want to rap, or if you want Mother Earth News, stop by the Draft Counseling Office in 418D SU 2nd floor. You'll have to take your chances because draft counseling comes first, but if we're free we'd enjoy sharing ideas.

DO YOU SUPPORT THE PEOPLE'S PEACE TREATY?

A JOINT TREATY OF PEACE
Between the people of the United States,
South Vietnam & North Vietnam

Be it known that the American and Vietnamese people are not enemies. The war is carried out in the names of the people of the United States and South Vietnam but without our consent. It destroys the land and people of Vietnam. It drains America of its resources, its youth and its honor.

We hereby agree to end the war on the following terms, so that both peoples can live under the joy of independence and can devote themselves to building a society based on human equality and respect for the earth. In rejecting the war we also reject all forms of racism and discrimination against people based on color, class, sex, national origin and ethnic grouping which forms the basis of the war policies, present and past, of the United States.

1. The Americans agree to immediate and total withdrawal from Vietnam, and publicly to set the date by which all U.S. military forces will be removed.

2. The Vietnamese pledge that as soon as the U.S. government publicly sets a date for total withdrawal, they will enter discussions to secure the release of all American prisoners, including pilots captured while bombing North Vietnam.

3. There will be an immediate cease-fire between U.S. forces and those led by the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam.

4. They will enter discussions on the procedures to guarantee the safety of all withdrawing troops.

5. The Americans pledge to end the imposition of Thieu, Ky and Khiem on the people of South Vietnam in order to insure their right to self-determination, and so that all political prisoners can be released.

6. The Vietnamese pledge to form a provisional coalition government to organize democratic elections. All parties agree to respect the results of elecions in which all Souh Vietnamese can participate freely without the presence of any foreign troops.

7. The South Vietnamese pledge to enter discussion of procedures to guarantee the safety and political freedom of hose South Vietnamese who have collaborated with the U.S. or with the U.S.-supported regime.

8. The Americans and Vietnamese agree to respect the independence, peace and neutrality of Laos and Cambodia in accord with the 1954 and 1962 Geneva conventions, and not to interfere in the internal affairs of these two countries.

9. Upon these points of agreement, we pledge to end the war and resolve all other questions in the spirit of self-determination and mutual respect priate to implement the terms of this Joint Treaty of Peace, and to insure its acceptance by the government of the United States.

By ratifying this agreement, we pledge to take whatever actions are appropriate to implement the erms of this Joint Treaty of Peace, and to insure its acceptance by the government of the United States.

BARE FACES BEAR FACTS. Male nudes created by art faculty at Northern Illinois U. are getting another look, according to a streamer story in The Northern Star.

Seems that when the art work went on display at a gallery in Peoria, city officials warned that the painting might be in violation of the city's recently-passed obscenity ordinance.

Their solution was to order the gallery's director to station a guard near the painting to restrict persons under 18 years old from looking at the painting. The alternative was that the gallery could face an obscenity suit.

Since the gallery did not have the personnel to post such a guard, it settled for posting a sign telling persons under 18 not to look at the painting. ****

OTHER HUMOR from the campi results from this headline accompanying a film review in The Daily Texan: " 'Doctors Wives' displays MDority."

THE APRIL FOOL ISSUE of the Vermont Tech Pioneer warned that "If you believe anything you read here (except this item) then you're crazier than the guys who put it together."

Stories included one about "Mother-In-Residence Program Approved"; "Contraceptives Stocked As Service to Campus"; "Pot Party Planned" and "Juicy Offers Made by Job Recruiters."

And in what they titled "Who says farming is a boar?" the Pioneer editors pictured 9 piglets busily feeding from a sow. Their caption: "A Modern Nippleodeon."

MORE HUMOR came out of Texas, where one Legislator offered a resolution passed by the State House of Representatives praising one Albert DeSalvo for being "officially recognized by the State of Massachusetts for his noted activities and unconventional techniques involving population control and applied psychology."

The fun-loving Rep. Tom Moore who offered the resolution didn't mention that DeSalvo was described in psychiatric testimony in a Massachusetts court four years ago as the self-proclaimed Boston Strangler who killed 13 women.

MEANWHILE, AT QUEENS COLLEGE, the Phoenix reports the passage by the Academic Senate there of a new Individualized College Bachelor's Degree which permits selected students to take up to one-fourth of their credit loads in non-classroom work and does not entail any required courses.

Enrollment will be limited to 200 students.

COMMERCIAL TERM PAPERS is the "in-thing" on the UMaine campus, as well as the Boston area, according to a page one blurb in The Maine Campus.

Page rates range from $2 to $6 for custom-tailored work. Four organizations are supplying the area market, according to the story. One is Termpapers Unlimited of Brookline, Mass., operated by a 22-year-old part-time student at Babson Institute, Boston; Universal Termpapers is operated by a PhD Candidate who calls himself "Mr. Papers"; International Termpapers Unlimited of Boston, owned by a Northeastern grad; and a writing agency calling itself Quality Bullshit," source unknown.

The reactions range from "plagiarism" by faculty; "unethical" by administrators; to "the game of academics", according to students.

Write on.

JV's At Worcester To Open Season

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

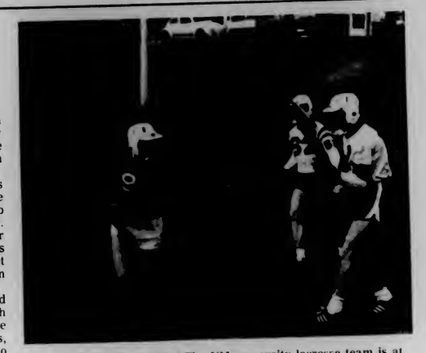
With nature being very stingy with batting practice this spring, the UMass Junior Varsity Baseball nine will but hope for the best this afternoon in Worcester as the Redmen yearlings under head coach Ray Wilson embark on a 16 game slate with a 3 p.m. tilt against Worcester Academy.

No doubt the weather has caused considerable havoc for Coach Wilson. It should be a novel afternoon for Wilson and his 21 man squad, but the Redman mentor feels the team will jell quickly. "Hitting will be our main problem. But the first few games will be important for not only our hitting but for setting our linup straight."

Coach Wilson plans to do a lot of early season juggling, but one thing definite will be today's mound cycle. Getting the starting nod on the hill will be soph righthander Ed Kerr. Kerr will be called upon to go three frames followed by frosh southpaw Steve Merrill for the middle innings. Righthander Glen Campbell, also a freshman, will finish up depending upon whether the contest will be seven or nine sanzas.

Completing the seven man staff are frosh righthanders Steve Bain, Howie Spear and soph John Welch. Frosh Eric Levine is the only other southpaw hurler on the hill besides Merrill.

The yearlings will have the most talent and depth in the backstop corps. Frosh Mike Phillips has just edged out classmate Ed Hamel for today's start behind the plate. When Hamel catches Phillips will play first. Frosh receivers Ken Stuart and Jim Lynch also can be used elsewhere with Stuart filling in at first and Lynch in the outfield.



Around the horn a freshman infield has been set with Rick Hansan at third, Tony Serino the shortstop, Ken Brewer at the keystone, and frosh hoopster Larry Heron the first sacker. Brewer, just released from the varsity will also see some service at short to help give way to frosh Bill Moan who'll log a lot of playing time at second base.

Patrolling the pastures for the Little Redmen are frosh Walt Parker, Winchester Willard, Larry Heron, and soph Fred Kielbasa, an Amherst native. Hopefully Coach Wilson can find the right outfield combination early with Lynch and Stuart not to be forgotten in the bidding. Besides hitting the outfield alignment looms as a primary weakness to date.

In noting his strengths Coach Wilson reiterated, "Defensively our infield is very sound. We have fair team speed and will run when we get the chance."

Offensively Coach Wilson looks for Rick Hansan to follow in the footsteps of immortal brother Bob Hansan as a Redman slugger. Also, Mike Phillips has good power but the ability of such key figures as Ken Brewer and Bill Moan to get on base will be plusses the Redmen need.

If the Redmen firemen can find the plate often and early enough today, coupled with an offensive production to suit victory's needs, the UMass J.V.'s should return to campus with the confidence to give crosstown rival Amherst a suitable shellacking in their home opener Saturday at 2 p.m.

Redmen Host UConn In Key YC Tilt

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

The UMass baseball team gets down to serious business today as it hosts the red hot Huskies from UConn in the opening Yankee Conference game for both teams. Game time is 3 p.m. at Varsity Field.

Due to the late scheduling of spring vacation at UConn the baseball team was unable to make a southern trip. Nevertheless they made up for lost time and have played six games in the last couple of weeks and have been victorious in each contest.

Right now head UMass baseball coach Dick Bergquist calls UConn the team to beat in the Conference and today should give a good indication as to the chances of a Redman title.

Today's contest will feature two strong, hard-throwing lefthanders, Jim Jachym from UConn and UMass' Tom King. Jachym is one of the best hurlers in New England and last year shutout the Redmen, 2-0.

During last summer he pitched in the strong Cape Cod League and was one of the best there with an 8-1 mark. His specialty is excellent control and to go with this he is cool and has a sharp mind on the mound.

King was chosen to pitch yesterday by his coach and it came as a difficult, yet a pleasant decision for coach Bergquist. Having to pick from King, Jack Bernardo and Tom White puts the coach in a good position for an effective starter.

King has been super sharp so far this season. In 15 innings of mound duty so far he has allowed no earned runs, has struck out 22 batters, issued only seven walks and has allowed only three hits.

Coach Bergquist gave assurance yesterday that his pitchers would go the full route the rest of the season depending of course, on how the opposition treated them. Using three pitchers per game for the first two northern games was an effort, and a most successful one, to get his pitchers some mound work before the Yankee Conference schedule opened.

Backing up Jachym on the field is perhaps the best defensive team that UConn has fielded in the last five years. These men have been one of the main backbones in the six straight wins, as week hitting up to Monday's 14-0 shallacking of Holy Cross put extreme pressure on them to keep the opponents off base. The results are obviously impressive.

John Slosar, whose two doubles beat Providence last week is the top gun for UConn at the plate. He'll have a strong compliment in the batting order from both Ray Brickly, a converted short stop to catcher and outfielder, Joe Jerosian, who besides getting three hits against Holy Cross, was also the winning pitcher giving up only one hit and striking out 19 Crusaders.

The only change in the UMass lineup will be behind the plate where Tom McDermott will replace Bill Sawyer who started against Tufts.

The rest of the starters will remain the same with Dan Esposito Jack Conroy, Ed McMahon and Mark Palau in the infield and Mike Sawyer, Charley Manley and Brian Martin in the outfield.

Remember, this game is a real big contest for both teams and should supply for an interesting afternoon at Varsity Field.

ONE OF MANY-Brian Martin comes across home plate with one of numerous runs scored against Tufts in Monday's 25-0 romp. The Redmen played near flawless baseball against the Jumbos and must do the same if they are to win again in today's Yankee Conference contest vs. Connecticut. UConn is considered the team to beat in the Yankee Conference and today's game is of vital importance for UMass. (MDC Photo by Gary Slickman).

Gorillas At Middlebury

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

Middlebury plays a very physical game. Which means that when Garber's Gorillas travel to Middlebury this afternoon for their 3:15 contest, they are going to be in for a rough game.

Looking to rebound from their season opening setback at the hands of the English International team, UMass will be up against a very big and extremely strong ballclub.

Last Saturday Middlebury dropped a 6-5 contest to Wesleyan but in scouting the game Coach Garber noticed several strong points that UMass will have to counteract.

In the goal for today's home club is Vaugh Gooding, a strong senior netminder who looked extremely sharp against Wesleyan over the weekend. Chris Gretjtak and Andy Staley will be Middlebury's strongest defenseman and attackman respectively, but the midfield is where they will be most impressive.

Braley Bruce, leads today's host. Coach Garber recalls the game two years ago when Bruce gave UMass all it could handle. Bruce can shoot with either hand and he has a "brutal" shot. Only one of Middlebury's "really big middies," he will be the key man to stop today, as the Redmen look forward to their first victory of 1971.

The quality of the field might well have an important effect on the outcome of this afternoon's battle. Two years ago a UMass lacrosse team journeyed up to Middlebury where they played with puddles on the field, sliding and slipping everywhere. Naturally this sort of wet field benefits a physical type of ballclub.

UMass likes to run, and their exceptional stickhandling ability will no doubt be hurt by a dampened field. Middlebury had a snow covered field as of Monday morning and things have been touch and go, with the game nearly switching to UMass' home grounds. But Middlebury will host the game, with the expectation that their field will be clear by 3 p.m. today.

"We hope we can get off on the right foot today-we sort of sputtered the other day," said Coach Garber. Although rain is expected today up in Middlebury, and the game might well become slow and physical, Garber's Gorilla's first away game should be a big success.

Trackmen At Holy Cross In Season's First Meet

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The UMass track team will travel to Holy Cross today for Holy Cross's first meet of the year. The UMass Redmen will be out to improve its record to 2-1. The throwing events will start at 3:00 with the running events getting underway at 4:00

UMass will be the favorite over a young underrated Holy Cross team. This year's Holy Cross team follows the pattern of other years. The team is strong in the running events while weak in the throwing events. Holy Cross possesses many outstanding individuals, but is weak in the area of team depth.

Rick Comeau is Holy Cross's most outstanding runner, and will be competing in the 440 and possibly the 220 and mile relay. Gary Peyton will represent Holy Cross in the 880, and should pose a threat to Dave Evans who is one of the outstanding half milers in New England.

Dick Fahey and Bob Boreet will handle the distance running chores for Holy Cross, but should find Ron Wayne, Larry Paulson, Tom Jasmin, Doug O'Connell, and Roger Tasatka too tough to handle. Wayne will be running in his first meet of the season, and should be fully recovered from the flu. If Wayne is ready, he will be the favorite in the mile and 2 mile.

Gene Hartry is the backbone for Holy Cross in the sprinting and jumping events. He will face tough competition from the UMass team of Walter Mayo, Ron Harris, Tony Pendleton, and Stokes Hall.

Holy Cross's only major threat in the throwing events will be Steve Cavanaugh. Cavanaugh carries the bulk of the throwing events, and will be competing in the discus, hammer, shotput, and the javelin. Cavanaugh will have stiff competition in Eddie Arcaro who is coming off a 12 point effort which includes a record breaking performance in the shotput last Saturday.

Bruins 7, Montreal 3

BOSTON (AP)-Veteran Johnny Bucyk wrecked Montreal's comeback hopes with a dramatic unassisted goal at 12:47 of the third period as the Boston Bruins defeated the Canadiens 7-3 Tuesday night to take a 3-2 advantage in their best-of-seven National Hockey League Playoff Series.

The Bruins took a 5-1 lead into the third period, but the Canadiens came out as if to duplicate their comeback from a similar disadvantage last Thursday, when they won the second fame of the series, 7-5.

Goals by Frank Mahovlich and John Ferguson narrowed the count to 5-3. The Canadiens appeared to have the Bruins on the ropes with more than 10 minutes remaining.

However, Bucyk came off the bench, picked up a loose puck and went into score his first goal in five playoff goals. He cut in on the right wing, his off position, and crashed into two defensemen just as he fired a shot into the far corner of the net.

That was all the Bruins needed as they reassumed command and moved to within one victory of the semifinals in defense of their Stanley Cup Championship.

Sox Win

WASHINGTON AP—Duane Josephson and Carl Yastrzemski hit home runs off Denny McLain and the Boston Red Sox survived three errors to make it two straight over Washington, 5-3 Tuesday night.

All the Senators runs were unearned off Boston starter and winner Sonny Siebert, who needed ninth-inning help from Sparky Lyle.

Josephson hit his first homer of the season following a single by George Scott in the second and Yastrzemski hit his first with two out in the third.

Administration Response Mixed

Barron Confronts Whitmore With Hill Demands

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

"I don't think that we lost the round," commented Dr. Leon Barron, Master of Orchard Hill, to a group of Orchard Hill residents yesterday afternoon following a 2 1/2 hour meeting in Whitmore concerning the Orchard Hill Residential College proposal. Dr. Barron met with Chancellor Tippo, Associate Provost Gluckstern, and Vice Chancellors Bromery and Campion in a closed door meeting while a group of students who had worked on the proposal for the past few weeks waited outside.

Dr. Barron then went on to tell the group of the Administrator's feelings on the seven proposals which Orchard Hill has been trying to pass for several years. The first issue of the proposal calling for support in developing and implementing our own education was called too broad by Chancellor Tippo who said that he couldn't understand this point of the proposal. He told Dr. Barron that he would find out what is holding up the consideration of the proposal. The Administration's top four administrators also told the Orchard Hill Head Master that they would appoint two more people to the Committee to study the plan. They added that this would be done immediately.

Concerning the proposed multi-purpose cafeteria which is listed as the second of the seven proposals, the Administration stated that because the present Dining Commons are in the red, there is no possibility of building another self liquidating Dining Commons.

Dr. Barron then told the group that Orchard Hill will play a large role in admitting people to live in the area. He said that they will hold the responsibility for bringing in a quota of people. Brochures will be sent out to people admitted this Spring with information concerning the Orchard Hill program." People sent to live on the Hill by the computers in Whitmore will be carefully screened, making the percentage of people dumped on the Hill smaller," stated Barron.

Associate Provost, Robert Gluckstern is looking into the fourth proposal concerning autonomy in the selection and compensation of faculty and teaching courses on Orchard Hill, continued Dr. Barron. He told the group that the proposal looks hopeful according to Mr Gluckstern. He said that they hope to borrow faculty members fror a period of two years to live and teach on the Hill. He also stated that they will write to the Academic Departments on campus in an attempt to get more faculty members.

The fifth proposal concerning the core curriculum looks favorable, Barron said. He continued by saying that Orchard Hill will work within the existing departments on campus. Chancellor Tippo felt that it was a good idea to have introductory courses on the Hill and he said that many departments would like the idea.

On the issue of staff positions, Dr. Bromery told Barron that he is working on that aspect of the proposal.

Summing up the 2 1/2 hour meeting, Barron said that it made the Administration aware of many things that they had not been aware of before.

The students in attendance then discussed among themselves what their future course of action would be. A proposal was brought up that they conduct a two week campaign to talk to Department Heads to see where they stand on the Orchard Hill issue. They felt that the departments wouldn't lose anything by sending faculty to teach on Orchard Hill. At the close of the half hour meeting they said that it will be up to them to keep the issue alive through the next few weeks until Dr. Barron will meet again with the Administration in Whitmore.

When asked about the rumor concerning his resignation as Master of Orchard Hill, Dr. Barron said that he would stay on as Head. In past months he had the feeling that he couldn't do anymore while working in the present Residential College set up but the last few days changed his mind.

Present Administration With 7 Demands

Students Seek Rationale Of Hill Policies

By JIM GOLDMAN
MDC Staff

The Student Affairs Reorganization Committee was met on Orchard Hill, Tuesday evening, by a hostile crowd of approximately 80 students and faculty members. The impatient audience confronted the committee with questions and requests concerning the further development of the Orchard Hill Residential College.

Both faculty and students demanded the clarification of the University's policy to the residential college and the implementation of its past commitments to Orchard Hill.

The reorganization committee, led by Vice-Chancellor Bromery, was subjected to an unanticipated barrage of criticism. In previous area meetings with the committee, discussions centered on student living and organizational problems within the area.

The Hill residents, however, came prepared to discuss the status of the Orchard Hill Residential College. Provost Gluckstern, Vice-Chancellor Bromery, Campion, and Fitzgerald along with Student Senate Vice President Pat Beharry were the main focal points.

Issues discussed included: a feasibility study for an Orchard Hill multi-purpose cafeteria, an increased Teaching Assistant allotment, the decentralization of control in housing and other administrative matters, the recognition of Orchard Hill courses for University core distribution credit, and compensation for Orchard Hill faculty, faculty fellows, and preceptors.

Orchard Hill residents this week have been attending corridor meetings and signing petitions in support of these residential college concept demands. "1. Support in developing and implementing our own education; 2. A multi-purpose cafeteria; 3. Autonomy in housing and admissions matters; 4. Autonomy in the selection and compensation of faculty teaching courses on Orchard Hill in accordance with our 1970 proposal, we will need at least the equivalent of five full time positions for Fall, 1971; 5. Orchard Hill will work with existing departments in creating core courses taught on Orchard Hill interdisciplinary courses must also be considered for core distribution credit whenever applicable; 6. Reduction of teaching loads, as originally promised, for Faculty Residents and Preceptors; 7. Autonomy in staffing Orchard Hill."

Reduction in the number of TA positions requested by the residential college, inaction of a Faculty-Seante Academic Affairs sub-committee on the OHRC Long-Range Planning Proposal, and non-disbursement of $50,000 trustee-endorsed feasibility study have been cited as the reason for the recent upsurge in activity.

The latter development was the subject of heated discussion. Student's questioned the authority of planner Jack Littlefield's "seemingly arbitrary decision" to ignore the trustee order.

Dr. Barron, Master of Orchard Hill, commented that he has a memo from former President Lederle informing him of the 1970 trustee decision. Barron first learned of a stall through student rumors. The Master stated that later in a conversation with Littlefield, the planner admitted that there was such a stall in the allocation of the $50,000 study.

The staffing of Orchard Hill courses was also a "crisis" issue. The Hill faculty is presently staffed by members of the University faculty who voluntarily carry a course overload, by faculty obtained through bartering TA positions with various departments, and by the release of faculty members by their departments.

Provost Gluckstern assured the residents that 4 TA positions will be allocated to the Hill for the fall semester. This is an increase of 3 TA positions over the present allocation. Gluckstern emphasized the increased Hill share of TA positions in view of the recent drastic cuts in the TA positions. He also suggested that the present methods of staffing be continued.

Students maintained, however, that the livelihood of the residential college should not depend on the "goodwill of the departments." One student asked the Provost, "How long must Orchard Hill beg for its faculty?"

Gluckstern agreed with the students.

Vice-Chancellor Campion was the target of criticism in relation to housing matters. Student and faculty complaints concerned the inflexibility of a centralized housing office. Requests for utilization of empty rooms and expansion in the number and quality of faculty residences were voiced. Dr. Luther Allen, a Faculty Resident, rated the quantity of faculty apartments available on Orchard Hill as "pittance." Discussing the need for housing autonomy he stated that the Hill's purposes differ from all other parts of the campus. One student suggested rent reimbursements in dormitories used for classroom space.

Concerning the application of Orchard Hill courses toward the University's core distribution requirements, Gluckstern stated that the structure of the courses will first have to be carefully studied. He also stated that the Orchard Hill courses will have to reflect the University standards already established.

Faculty members were especially concerned about compensation for their services on Orchard Hill. Cadwell Ray stated that members of the faculty did not generally believe that their participation in the residential college was considered worthwhile by the department heads and personnel committee.

Dr. Barron requested that Provost Gluckstern issue a memo to department heads and personnel committees encouraging faculty participation in Hill programs. Gluckstern responded saying he would not be bashful about stating the value of participation in the residential college.

Alluding to the nature of the problems on Orchard Hill, Gluckstern stated, "I admit this is something that should have been focused on earlier... I'm willing to have discussions on a basis now which I wasn't previously."

Near the end of the meeting, he said, "My support will be stronger after tonight."

The meeting Tuesday night resulted in tew of the commitments sought by the Orchard Hill residents.

A follow-up meeting with the Provost, Vice-Chancellors, and members of the Student Affairs Reorganization Committee will take place on Tuesday, May 4, at 10:00 p.m. in Eugene Field lounge.

Meanwhile the steering committee of Project Ten, composed of students, staff, and faculty announced support of the "movement of Orchard Hill residents to give real meaning to the title of Residential College."

"For too long, the University has publicized the promise of residential colleges without granting any significant measure of its substance," they said.

"We urge the University to adopt the principle of decentralization and to take measures to reallocate resources in such a way that campus groups wishing to create distinctive educational programs share in the support needed to make them a reality, they concluded.

Action Starts On May 5 Strike

By ED FOGARTY
MDC Staff

A Strike Organizing Committee formed last night by area students to support of a one day strike, in memorium for the students killed at Kent id Jackson State Colleges last year, to take place on May 5.

"The Moratorium is a call for action, to stop the business as usual. It is a day to educate the people," said a Committee member.

May 5 will be an open day to the student community. Educational workshops will be set up on that day by the students about strike issues. There was student representation from every dormitory area on campus. Included in the group were students from Hampshire College, Smith College, Mt. Holyoke College, and a Springfield area college.

Representatives from the dorms agreed to set up informative meetings with the residents to discuss the possibility of a one day strike. A group from the Dickinson House Counsel of Orchard Hill announced that they had already voted in support of the one day strike.

The Committee moved to set up a number of groups to promote student action towards the strike proposal.

"It is clear that we have to overcome the apathy on this campus. We must bring the realization of the Washington activities to the UMass Campus," said a Committee member.

Memorial armbands will be made and tables set up in the Student Union to inform people of the May 5 Strike movement.

It was decided to focus the May 5 Strike on the single issue of a Moratorium for Kent and Jackson State students slain last year.

"If we have a multi issue platform, then we will limit the number of people who could support the strike. I doubt very much if the Vet's for Peace would support a multi-issue platform," said Bernard Lougee, Vet's for Peace representative.

It was made clear that the single issue of the moratorium should in no way discourage students from participating in the strike.

"The idea of a Moratorium is very much bound up in the war issue, the repression issue, and many others. It should be a rallying cry for all students movements," said Claire Moriarty, Committee member.

Determines Student Tax

Senate Budget Considerations Continue

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

As Student Senate deliberation on budgets continued at its meeting last night, the projected Student Activity Tax for next year remained at around the $40 level. The Senate is still in the process of considering each group's budget requests the first of two times. Changes in any of the 26 organizations to be funded by the tax are still possible.

At last night's meeting, still in progress at this writing, a total of $43,560 had been added to the Budget Act. This was in the form of the addition of a $10,450 budget for Harambe, a new Third World campus organization; a $30,000 increase in the Senate budget to provide funding for the CCEBS program; a $3,860 increase, also in the Senate budget, to go toward a day care center. One decrease was made in the budget total--a $750 drop in Free University, reducing its funds for speakers to $1,000.

In requesting that the Senate add Harambe to the Budget Act, spokesmen of the organization explained that its general aim is to unite all students from the Third World in the sharing of their common experiences. They also stressed that it is a "blatant lie" that anyone has been discouraged from joining Harambe. There had been charges heard around campus that Black students were dominating the organization, to the exclusion of other Third Worlders such as Orientals and other foreign students.

The $10,450 Harambe budget includes categories for speakers, performers, conferences, and dues to national organizations. It was approved by a 24-15-6 vote of the Senate.

There was extensive debate over the addition of $30,000 for the CCEBS program for disadvantaged students, part of the budget of the Senate itself. This is the fourth consecutive year that the Senate has given the program this amount. The money has in the past always been spent on the CCEBS tutorial program and probably will be again next year.

In asking that the Senate continue its support, the Chairman of the Board of Directors of CCEBS, SBA Dean Lawrence Johnson informed the Senate that the program has lost the financial support of the Ford Foundation, which this year was a sum of $150,000. Ford had been giving its grant the past three years to start the program, expecting that this would lead to state financial support. Federal legislation to prevent foundations from giving anyone funds in an attempt to influence governmental legislation led to the Ford discontinuation.

Johnson said that for this reason, CCEBS is especially in need of Senate support next year. Johnson plans to raise this year's total of 491 CCEBS students to 600 next year. He also mentioned the possibility of making the tutorials mandatory for CCEBS students, and also the fact that plans call for the addition of Puerto Rican, whites, and American Indians to the now predominantly Black program.

When asked why funds from the compulsory tax should be used for the program which recruits, and then keeps in school, economically and academically deficient youngsters, Johnson said that "this activity is for the benefit of the campus as a whole. The presence of CCEBS students, who could not otherwise attend the University, benefits the entire population." He is aiming for a 4% Black enrollment on campus.

The CCEBS appropriation was added to the Senate account known as Senate Sponsored Events. Also added to this category last night was $3,860 to support a day care center now being established. Other funding in the account goes toward book loans, the Five-College program, and a contribution to the John F. Kennedy Library.

In the Index budget, unsuccessful attempts were made to make sizable cuts in its $63,000 printing category. In the end, the Senate reduced it by just $3,000, leaving its total student tax allotment at $60,000. This year's was close to $93,000. The $60,000 budget will allow the printing of around a 250 page yearbook.

Chancellor Oswald Tippo observed a brief portion of the meeting last night. When queried by a Senator, he quashed recent rumors around the Senate that he would veto any Senate request for a Student Tax of over $40 for next year. He said that he had not made any commitment of the kind.

Much of Senate debate this year had centered around the prospect of a veto. Many Senators have been trying to make cuts in budgets to assure that the total Budget Act would remain under the $40 limit. Whether the tax will now rise in light of the Chancellor's statement cannot be determined. The Senate can still make changes in any budget.

In other business, the Senate voted to strongly recommend to the Faculty Senate that it adopt a 1972-73 academic calendar which the Faculty is to consider today. The calendar would move up the date of first semester registration to the last week of August and of final examinations before Christmas. Second semester would begin in mid-January and end with the last day of finals on May 16.

This calendar would put the University's sessions more in line with the rest of the Five-College area. It was also presented to the Student Senate as a first step to a greater change in future calendars to either a "4-1-4" plan or a trimester system.

The selection of a director for the Senate Transit Services for next year was announced last night. Robert Godding, now an assistant manager, will succeed graduating manager William Perkins. He was recommended by the Senate Services Committee from among several applicants.

Announcement was also made of the scheduling of a special Senate meeting. It will be held Sunday, April 25 at 7:30. The main order of business at that time will be discussion of prospective increases in fees and room and board costs.

Commissioner Claims Welfare Costs 'Heavy'

By JEANETTE MARTINEAU
MDC Staff

Last night's 'Administration' Panel Discussion on Practical Politics focused largely on the Mass. Welfare System. Stephen A. Minter, commissioner of public welfare was among the guest panelists.

About the Welfare System, Commissioner said: "Everyone is a minor authority, everyone has his own opinion." He also explained that the legislative base is the public welfare admendment to the Social Security Act, and commented that "The State of Massachusetts has one of the finest, most comprehensive. "Everything for everybody," he continued.

Steven A. Minter

"The HEW develops the regulations. The State plan must be submitted for approval. It is predetermined by the Federal Government." Minter explained.

Minter went on to list some of the people concerned with the administration of public welfare, including the General Accounting office, HEW auditors, and the Governor himself. He concluded his comments by stating the objectives of his Department as: "To maintain and provide a sense of perspective and to retain the basic responsibility for the system of government."

Later, when asked why the present Welfare system was not geared "to get oneself off the welfare payroll, Minter explained that "if directed at the AFDC, this is not its adopted philosophy. Its philosophy is to help people." He also stated that the present system did not provide for "a strong family unit."

Commissioner Minter was also asked about the possibility of the Federal government taking over the cost of Welfare. "Fifty per cent is assumed by the Federal Government," he answered. If the Federal Government were to assume the full cost of Welfare, "it would not be a great panacea." He described the cost as "a heavy burden", and "better than revenue sharing".

The Registrar of motor vehicles, Richard E. McLaughlin described his own post as "a sensitive area" with "total contact with the citizenry." He concluded his opening comments by calling the motor vehicle a "Frankenstein". "Seventy-one years ago, the car was considered a plaything. Now it is an important source of economy."

When asked what the State was planning to do about accidents due to drunken driving, Registrar McClaughlin mentioned the Governor's "detoxification" bill. Most of the drunken drivers involved in accidents are chronic alcoholics, and the Bill would treat this matter accordingly.

The Commissioner of corporations and taxation, Cleo F. Jaillet in turn stated that he was well aware that "tomorrow is April 15." He also stated that there are 43 different kinds of taxes in Mass. His role he explained is "to work with legislature to get a suitable revenue".

Dr. Milton Greenblatt, commissioner of mental health, spoke of the "magnitude of the problem of mental health. Assume that every fourth house is full of mental problems." He placed mental problems into five categories: neurosis, psychosis, character disorders, and brain damage syndrome and addiction.

Commissioner Greenblatt described Mass as doing "one of the best jobs." "No person can say that he's lost. Each area has its own facilities." He concluded his opening remarks by saying "By no means are we able to give every citizen the care we should.

The Commissioner of the Department of Commerce and Development, Carroll P. Sheehan, elaborated on his position, to try to attract tourists and industry into Massachusetts. "We have to invite in jobs" he said. "Business begets business".

He explained that some of the problem was due to "tight money and cuts in space and defense expenditures."

Sheehan stated that "We are not just competing with 49 other states but with the free world." He also elaborated on some much needed legislation. "We need an ammendment to Act 62 to provide low cost loans to private enterprise."

"The Role of the Media" in state government will be the topic of next weeks panel discussion at the Campus Center in Room 174, at 7:30. The public is welcome to attend.

Nixon Program Eases U.S.-Chinese Relations

WASHINGTON AP—President Nixon announced Wednesday a five-point program to ease relations between the United States and Communist China, largely through relaxing of the long-term embargo on trade between the two countries.

Nixon's long-awaited decision, coupled with Premier Chou En-lai's statement to American table tennis players about "a new page" in U.S.—Chinese relations, marked a notable step in the gradual thaw replacing the prolonged freeze between Washington and Peking.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon made his decision two or three weeks ago, following a high-level administration review begun last December.

"So the substance of the action has no connection with the recent action by the Peoples Republic of China in its invitation to the U.S. table tennis team and surrounding circumstances," he said.

But White House officials acknowledged that the timing of Nixon's announcement was, as they put it, appropriate in the aura of good will stemming from Peking's hospitality in the unprecedented current visit to China by a U.S. table tennis group.

It did not get into what the United States might do in the future about officially recognizing the Peking regime, with whom it now has no diplomatic relations.

The presidential announcement issued by the White House as a one-page statement dealt with a range of travel and trade restrictions which have been in effect since the early 1950's.

In line with his state of the world message last February promising to "examine what further steps between the Chinese and American peoples," Nixon said he has decided on these actions:

—The United States is prepared to give fast handling for visas, or entry permits, for visitors or groups of visitors from Red China.

—U.S. currency controls previously barring use of American dollars in dealings with Red China will be dropped.

—American oil companies may now supply fuel to ships or planes going to and from Red China, except on Chinese-owned or Chinese-chartered vessels sailing to or from North Vietnam, North Korea or Cuba.

—U.S. ships and planes may now carry Chinese cargoes between non-Chinese ports, and U.S.-owned foreign-flag ships may call at Chinese ports.

—The U.S. government will prepare a list of nonstrategic goods which may be exported directly to Red China, without a specific license. Following a presidential review and approval of items on this list, direct imports of specified items from mainland China also will be authorized.

U.S. Newsman May Enter Red China In Future

PEKING (AP)-Premier Chou En-Lai, announcing that U.S. newsmen will be allowed to enter China "in batches," hinted Wednesday that he wants to visit North America.

He also said a "long cultural exchange" between Britain and China may be in the offing and discussed the American hippie movement.

Chou, 73, spoke at a reception for table tennis teams from the United States, Britain, Canada, Nigeria and Colombia. These were invited to visit China when the world championships ended in Japan a week ago.

Chou said many American correspondents have wished to come to China but there had to be a first group. "They will come in batches," he said, adding that newsmen from other countries also will be invited.

Resident American correspondents have been barred from China since 1949. A few writers have been admitted from time to time for brief visits. Other groups of foreign correspondents, such as British, French and Canadian, operate here regularly on a restricted basis.

The hint that Chou would like to visit North American came in a remark that he had never seen that continent. He thus did not specifically speak of a visit to the United States, which has no diplomatic relations with Peking. Canada has such relations, established recently by the Pierre Elliott Trudeau government. Ambassadors were named Tuesday.

Chou is often spoke of as China's leading moderate. He said his government wants to have contacts with all countries, even those with which it has no diplomatic relations.

Turning to the Americans, the premier said, "In the past exchanges between the peoples of China and the United States have been very numerous. They have been cut off for a long time. Now, with your acceptance of our invitation, you have opened a new page in the relations of the Chinese and the American people. I am confident that this beginning again of our friendship will certainly meet with the majority support of our two peoples."

Glenn Cowan, 19, Santa Monica, Calif., one of the 15 members of the U.S. table tennis delegation, asked Chou what he thought of the American hippie movement.

"I'm not very clear about it," the Mandarin-turned revolutionary replied. "In the second place what I have seen is only very superficial. But perhaps the youth of the world today are dissatisfied with their present situation and want to seek the truth.

"In the course of changes of ideology among young people various forms are bound to emerge," he said. "These forms cannot be said to be final because in their search youth must go through various processes. This should be allowed to them. When we were young it was the same with us. I understand the ideas of youth. They are very curious."

Chou said that "through the development of mankind universal truth is bound to be found in the end. It is the same as the laws of nature."

The young "should always try to find something in common with the great majority," the premier said. "In this way the great majority of mankind can make progress to advance and achieve happiness."

Chou added that "the spirit must be transformed into material force before the world can move forward. One must get the agreement of the majority of the people."

Advisors Leave Allied Base While ARVN And Enemy Clash

SAIGON (AP)—A South Vietnamese relief force engaged enemy units in heavy fighting a half mile from the besieged Fire Base 6 in the central highlands Wednesday. Some of the base's defenders tried to flee on the landing skids of a U.S. helicopter taking out U.S. advisers.

The battle at the base entered its third week.

The U.S. helicopter lifted out four of the five American military advisers at the frontier base close to the border juncture of Laos, Cambodia and South Vietnam.

Field reports said that three other U.S. advisers, attached to the South Vietnamese relief force that engaged the North Vietnamese near the base, were missing. These reports, however, lacked official confirmation and the U.S. Command in Saigon said it had no word of missing advisers.

At the hilltop base itself, about 40 South Vietnamese soldiers swarmed around the U.S. helicopter that evacuated the four Americans Wednesday afternoon.

Eight of them jumped aboard and were flown with the advisers to a rear headquarters. Some of the others tried to cling to the chopper's landing skids and fly out in much the same way that some South Vietnamese troops did during the recent withdrawal from Laos. But the helicopter's crew shoved and kicked them off.

No reason was announced for lifting out the four U.S. advisers. Correspondents in the fighting sector speculated that they were exhausted by the prolonged siege and were brought out for a rest.

The lone remaining adviser, an officer, volunteered to stay behind with some 500 weary South Vietnamese defenders, newly bolstered by a 4,000-man relief force that is deployed in the immediate area. A lead element of the relief force reached the base Tuesday night.

It was one of the units of the South Vietnamese relief force that locked with the North Vietnamese a half mile northwest of Fire Base 6.

It was after this engagement that the reports reached rear headquarters that three U.S. advisers were missing.

Except for the South Vietnamese troops that fought the lengthy engagement a half mile from Fire Base 6, the other reinforcing troops advanced into positions in the area without resistance.

Associated Press photographer Neal Ulevich, reporting from Pleiku where the U.S. support helicopters are based, said the latest reinforcement unit sent in was a South Vietnamese paratrooper battalion. This battalion, Ulevich reported, was lifted into a landing zone 2 1/2 miles southeast of Fire Base 6 by U.S. helicopters, and drew no fire from the North Vietnamese.

The latest reinforcements brought the number of battalions to eight that are now committed by the South Vietnamese command to the relief of the base.

The action in the central highlands dominated the war situation in South Vietnam but Saigon headquarters reported fresh enemy shellings against South Vietnamese forces in eastern Cambodia.

Editors Pick Jackson, HHH Best To Beat Nixon in 1972

WASHINGTON (AP)—Darkhorse Henry M. Jackson and 1968 loser Hubert H. Humphrey are Democrats mentioned most by editors who were asked to name the one with the best chance of beating President Nixon next year.

In a random sample of 40 members attending the American Society of Newspaper Editors convention, SVENS, Jackson of Washington and Humphrey of Minnesota emerged virtually neck and neck, and slightly ahead of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine.

Sens. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts and Harold E. Hughes of Iowa drew equal mention a few months back, while Sens. George S. McGovern of South Dakota (the only formally announced White House hopeful in the pack) and Birch Bayh of Indiana were also-rans.

The editors split on whether Nixon, if he runs, can keep his job in 1972.

Nixon Endorses Plan To Move War Prisoners

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon endorsed Wednesday a week-old Saigon proposal that sick, wounded and long-term prisoners on both sides in Vietnam be interned in a neutral country.

Although White House officials said the United States had been aware of the South Vietnamese recommendation before it was made at the Paris talks last Thursday, Nixon waited six days to make a formal statement on the subject.

Asked to explain the delay, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the timing of the statement was prompted by the fact that another Paris negotiating session is scheduled for Thursday.

Proposal Not New

Ziegler acknowledged that the Saigon proposal was not new-even last Thursday-which seemed to indicate a new and wider effort by the United States to get most American prisoners of war out of North Vietnam as soon as possible.

The press secretary said 378 Americans are known to be prisoners of the North Vietnamese and some others are held elsewhere in Indochina.

Nixon's efforts to promote broad movement on the prisoners of war issue was underscored by the fact that, in his statement, he made no reference to the fact that the Saigon plan would affect only the sick and wounded and those held prisoner for an undefined "long" period of time.

No Longer Hostages

The President said that internment of war prisoners in a third country would mean they no longer would "serve as hostages for political or military purposes."

This language seemed to suggest that an early move of American prisoners to neutral ground would supersede his public pledge to keep American troops in South Vietnam so long as Americans are held prisoner in the North.

The Chief executive said the South Vietnamese proposal fell short of total release of all prisoners, "which is our goal," but said the suggested first step "would be a reasonable and responsible way of alleviating the plight of prisoners of war on both sides."

Nixon said third-country internment of prisoners is covered specifically in the 1949 Geneva convention on treatment of war prisoners, signed by North and South Vietnam as well as the United States.

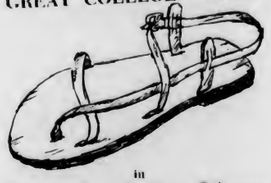
Economic Snapback Yet To Devlop

WASHINGTON (AP)—Output of the nation's industries barely inched ahead in March, providing fresh evidence that the economic snapback sought by President Nixon has yet to develop.

The Federal Reserve Board reported Wednesday that industrial production, one of the key measures of the pace of the nation's economy, moved forward by less than two-tenths of one per cent last month.

The production index indicated the economy still is suffering from considerable slack, despite recent optimistic statements by White House economic advisers that the economy is beginning to pick up steam.



The board said industrial production reached 165.2 per cent of the 1957-59 average in March, compared with 164.9 per cent a month earlier, when industrial output actually declined. The gain of three points on the scale represented an actual percentage gain of less than two-tenths of a per cent.

Production of consumer goods advanced in March, but that gain was offset by further cutbacks in output of business and defense equipment.

Only Tuesday, the Nixon administration's chief economic adviser Dr. Paul W. McCracken, had predicted that output of the nation's goods and services would register a strong gain during January, February, and March.

The slight increase in industrial production seemed to dampen that forecast, although the real evidence will not be in until Thursday or Friday, when the Commerce Department releases the quarterly report for Gross National Product.

The administration had predicted that GNP this year will grow by 9 per cent to $1.065 trillion, a figure higher than those forecast by most private economists.

Muskie Charges FBI With Earth Day Spying

WASHINGTON (P)—Sen. Edmund S. Muskie broadened congressional criticism of the FBI Wednesday by accusing it of massive spying on 40 to 60 of last April's Earth Day antipolution observances.

"If antipollution rallies are a subject of intelligence concern" the Maine Democrat said in a Senate speech, "is anything immune?"

He said "there is no justification for any part of the federal intelligence community surreptitiously observing and reporting on legitimate political events which do not affect our national security of which do not involve a potential crime."

Muskie, an unannounced candidate for the 1972 Democratic presidential nomination, accused the FBI of engaging in general political surveillance without any indication of a specific target. "It was a fishing expedition," he said.

Muskie said neither President Nixon nor Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell "will do anything to change this situation," adding that "The President, in the face of reports of investigations that should outrage the nation, remains silent."

Neither the FBI nor the Justice Department had any immediate comment on Muskie's speech.

FBI sources indicated that any surveillance of Earth Day activities might have stemmed from efforts to keep tabs on such groups as Students for a Democratic Society and Progressive Labor Party, which it describes as a pro-Communist Chinese organization.

Muskie's speech came just 10 days after House Democratic leader Hale Boggs accused the FBI of tapping congressional telephones, a charge the FBI denied.

Muskie commented that "a large percentage of congressmen believe their phones are tapped" and told reporters that while "I make no such assumptions, I do not refute them either."

In his speech, Muskie proposed creation of a new independent board to oversee the FBI and other federal intelligence agencies. He released also what he said was an FBI report describing in detail activities in Washington during last year's Earth Week, including a rally at which he spoke on April 22, 1970.

"I understand that this is but one of about 40 to 60 FBI reports of Earth Day rallies on April 22, 1970," he said.

Muskie declined to specify his sources but said "this report was not taken from the Media, Pa., FBI files, and is in no way connected with that theft of FBI material." He said also "this report contains no classified designation," and declared that it, "and evidently many others like it, has been circulated widely to the entire intelligence community, and perhaps even to local police."

From Pakistan

Refugees Pour Into India

NEW DELHI, India (AP)—Refugees from East Pakistan poured into India Wednesday, fleeing from advancing Pakistani troops seeking to crush the three-week-old rebellion in the Eastern province.

"What was a trickle has become a stream," a high Indian official said.

At the same time, one of West Pakistan's top political leaders called for an end to martial law conditions in the East and urged resumption of political activities. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, former foreign minister, contended in Karachi that only a political settlement can end the bloodshed.

While Indian officials would not disclose the number of refugees, more than 5,000 East Pakistanis were staying at a makeshift camp at Bangaon, 50 miles northeast of Calcutta, on the India-Pakistan border.

Reliable sources said at least 500 persons had crossed daily since Monday into the Bangean area.

The Statesman newspaper in Calcutta said that reports from its correspondents showed that at least 31,000 refugees had entered India this week from different parts along the 1,349-mile border with East Pakistan.

Most of the refugees-many of whom were women and children who had lost their menfolk-were coming from the Jessore region in the western part of the province, where army resistance was not reported negligible.

A witness said that East Pakistan defenders abandoned their positions along the border with East Pakistan.

Radio Pakistan reported that a column of Pakistani troops driving northwest from Dacca linked up with an army garrison at the university town of Rajshahi after clearing the area.

The broadcast quoted an official statement in Dacca as saying the column "pacified" Pabna, Ishurdi and Natore before reaching Rajshahi.

"The entire area now il free of miscreants and infiltrators," the statement said.

Bumpers Softened For 1973 Autos

WASHINGTON AP—The Department of Transportation softened its original position Wednesday in announcing requirements for improved bumpers on 1973 automobiles.

The department held to its proposal of last fall that front bumpers absorb a five-mile-an-hour crash without damage to vital car systems.

But, faced by massive resistance from automakers, it abandoned a similar standard for 1973 rear bumpers in favor of a 2 1/2 mile-an-hour requirement, which specialists say present cars can meet.

The bumper standard was described as final but still is subject to reconsideration if appeals are filed. Major auto firms have indicated that they can meet requirements similar to those in the government standards.

The Department's National Highway Traffic Safety Administration also postponed for one year, until 1974 models a requirement for uniform bumper height front and back.

Auto officials have estimated the improved, energy-absorbing front bumpers will cost consumers about $50.

The standard also requires improvement of 1974 rear bumpers to pass a four-mile-an hour crash test. Additional bumper requirements may be added later for 1974 models, the department said.

Federal safety officials said a five-mile-an-hour crash into a barrier is equivalent to a collision between a parked car and one traveling at 10 miles.

In such a collision some of the destructive force would be dissipated through movement of the stationary car, in contrast to the striking of a fixed surface such as a concrete wall.

Douglas W. Thoms, acting federal safety administrator, said he "decided to moderate the requirement for rear bumpers because to require rear-end strength comparable to the front would involve extensive structural redesign without a commensurate increase in safety."

The bumper requirement follows complaints from insurance companies and consumer advocates about the high cost of car repair after minor accidents.

Troops Pelted In Belfast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)—Protestant rioters battled British troops in Belfast Wednesday after attacking a Roman Catholic church for the second time in less than 24 hours.

Four hundred militants pelted soldiers with rocks. Troops in riot armor grabbed a youth pinning a British flag to a post just outside the main doors of the church.

Elsewhere in the Ulster capital, Roman Catholic mobs stoned police patrols in a violent finale to the Easter round of religious and political parades.

Modern Poets Featured At Poetry Festival

One of the finest arrays of contemporary posts ever assembled at one event will be included in the 2nd annual UMass Spring Poetry Festival, April 20-24. The event is being sponsored by the Fine Arts Council and the MFA Program in English, and assisted by the Program Council, EDUC, and the Dada-Surealist Festival. The schedule is printed elsewhere on the page.

The impressive array of internationally-renowned poets will be supplanted with readings by young poets from the immediate area who have been associated with the University. Each outside guest will present one major reading of from 30-40 minutes and a brief reading of about 10 minutes. New music precede each of the four evening readings.

Among the most renowned poets appearing will be Denise Levertov, who has been active in anti-war activities and appeared at UMass at the Alumni Stadium April 15 Moratorium. She is generally considered one of the finest living women poets and is along with another festival participant, Robert Creeley, most centrally identified with the Black Mountain movement.

Creeley, is a New England native and Harvard graduate, who has become known for intensely personal poems and experimentation in rythmn.

William Stafford, is presently poetry consultant for the Library of Congress. He grew up in the midwest and has suffused much of his poetry with the imagery of his prairie and farm upbringing. Stafford, served four years in confinment for being a conscientious objector and has been a longtime peace activist.

One of the most honored participants is Richard Wilbur. An Amherst graduate, Wilbur has received the Pulitzer Prize and National Book Award for "Things of this World." He has been a Guggenheim Fellow and received a Prix de Rome.

Another visitor will be Robert Bly, editor of the journal The Sixties, and one of the early anti-war organizers. A Minnesota native, he is equally renowned for his translation as for his poems. In 1968 he was awarded the National Book Award and took the awarding ceremony time to castigate the American publications industry for not opposing militarism and then gave his award to the Resistance Movement.

Also appearing is perhaps the most prominent of the New York poets, John Ashberry, a writer for Art News. Other participants will include three of the finest living Irish poets, Richard Murphy, Seamus Heaney and Thomas Kinsella. Three prominent black poets will also be participating, Sonia Sanchez, Michael Harper and Johavi Amini, editor of the Third World Press.

In addition Mary Ellen Solt, experimenter with concrete poetry, James Tate, Jackson MacLow, J.D. Reed, C.K. Williams, George Starbuck, Alan Dugan, William Pitt Root, David Khedian and Bill Root all will be reading. All the above have won awards and prizes too numerous to list.

The co-directors of the festival which was a huge success a year ago, are Joseph Langland and Paul Jenkins of the UMass English Department.

People's Peace Treaty Shows War's Solution

In August 1970 the National Student Association voted to explore the possibility of a joint treaty of peace emphasizing that the "American and Vietnamese people are not enemies". A treaty was drafted and ratified by the South Vietnamese Liberation Student Union, North Vietnamese Student Union, South Vietnamese Student Union, and the National Student Association. This spring there will be attempts to circulate it, have it signed by all Americans opposed to the war, and to celebrate it in Washington, D.C. on MAY DAY.

The Treaty is a simple nine-point document:

1. The Americans agree to immediate and total withdrawal from Vietnam and publicly to set the date by which all American forces will be removed.

This has been a fundamental demand of the NLF, as well as the American Peace Movement these last six years.

2. The Vietnamese pledge that as soon as the U.S. government publicly sets a date for total withdrawal, they will enter discussions to secure the release of all American prisoners, including pilors captured while bombing North Vietnam.

3. There will be an immediate cease-fire between U.S. forces and those lead by the provisional revolutionary government of South Vietnam.

4. They will enter discussion on the procedures to guarantee the safety of all withdrawing troops.

5. The Americans pledge to end the imposition of Thieu-Ky-Khiem on the people of South Vietnam in order to insure their right to self-determination and so that all political prisoners can be released.

6. The Vietnamese pledge to form a provisional coalition government to organize democratic elections. All parties agree to respect the results of elections in which all South Vietnamese can participate freely without the presence of foreign troops.

7. The South Vietnamese pledge to enter discussion of procedures to guarantee the safety and politcal freedom of those South Vietnamese who have collaborated with the U.S. or with the U.S. supported regime.

8. The Americans and Vietnamese agree to respect the independence, peace and neutrality of Laos and Cambodia in accord with the 1954 and 1962 Geneva conventions and not to intertere in the internal affairs of these two countries.

9. Upon these points of agreement, we pledge to end the war and resolve all other questions in the spirit of self-determination and mutual respect for the independence and freedom of the people of Vietnam and the United States.

The Student Senate voted to offer up the "People's Peace Treaty" to a campus referendum in order to give Nixon an indication of where American students stand. The referendum will take place in front of the Bookstore, Thursday April 15th (today) between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Today's Referendum

The Senate has voted to submit the following questions to the student body in referendum:

Do you support the People's Peace Treaty? Yes ☐ No ☐

Do you support the immediate and total withdrawal of the U.S. from Southeast Asia? Yes ☐ No ☐

Do you endorse the nonviolent march planned in Washington for April 24? (a legal permit has been issued) Yes ☐ No ☐

Do you endorse the nonviolent civil disobedience planned in Washington for the first week in May? Yes ☐ No ☐

Due to necessary economies in the expenditure of 03 funds (student employees), the Undergraduate Registrar's office (Registration, Records, and Transcript sections) will be closed to "drop-in" service as well as telephone inquiries on Friday of each week for the period April 9 through July 2 for purposes of restoring files and normal processing to working order.

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP)-A flotilla of rubber rafts will begin a five-day voyage down the Housatonic River Thursday morning, hoping to reach Long Island Sound.

A group of students and faculty from Berkshire Community College are staging the waterlevel look at the pollution of waterways as part of the area's Earth Week observance.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Do Something Soon!

By GILBERT J. SALK
MDC Staff

I think it's time to talk again about some of you getting off your asses and doing something about your draft status. It seems that a lot of people don't realize yet that they are going to graduate, flunk out, transfer, change graduating class, or do something which will cause them to lose their student deferment. I know that the weather is nice and it's great sitting out by the pond listening to the grass and buildings grow--I'd like to be out there myself---but if you don't move soon, you may be listening to the sounds of a DI rolling you out at five ayem.

In other words, take some time out soon to get some draft counseling. If you don't know what you're going to do about the army/draft/deferments, get some advice/information/help now.

Let me draw a picture for you. For the past week, most of our counselors have been sitting around playing cards waiting for you to come in. They could be out by the pond too. In a month, when reality catches up with you, almost all of them will be unable to counsel because they will have exams/term papers/finals to get ready for. That means there will only be one counselor on duty most of the time, and I won't be able to help all of you if you all come in at once.

Take a hint. Get your draft problems dealt with while we are able to give them the attention they deserve. Putting it off does nothing to make the problem go away; instead, it increases the likelihood that you will be wearing fatigues at this time next year.

If you know people who are freshmen this year who ligure that they have a couple of more years to go before they have to worry about the draft, shake them. The new proposed draft law will take student deferments away from anyone who was not a student before April 1970. This year's freshmen will lose their deferments if this law passes.

Please, brothers. Get on the stick.

The Draft Counseling Services has its office in Room 418E on the second floor of the Student Union. It is located behind the Cashier's area. The office is uaually open from 9:00 until 4:00. Group counseling is held on Monday and Thursday afternoons from 1:00 to 4:00 in Room 805 in the Campus Center. There is counseling Tuesday nights in the Master's Office in T-2. The Valley Peace Center is open Monday through Friday afternoons. It is located in the building behind Aubuchon Hardware in downtown Amherst, off Main St.

The best CO counselor in New England is located in Northampton. Call Frances Crowe at 584-8975 for an appointment.

Do it now. PEACE.

Questions to this column should be addressed to: Gilbert J. Salk, c/o Draft Counseling Services RSO #395, Campus Center, Univ. of Mass., Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Amherst Selectmen Decide Voting Regulations Liberal

Selectmen took a stand against liberalization of voting registration procedures yesterday.

On the matter of registering students to vote in the municipality in which they live while attending college, selectmen acted on the request of Atty. Richard Howland, who acts as legal counsel for the UMass student body. Howland asked selectmen last week to present an amicus curiae brief to state Atty. Gen. Robert Quinn in a Brookline case, in which a student Patricia Garrett, was refused the right to vote by the Town of Brookline on the grounds that she was not a bona fide resident. The decision on the Garrett case is expected to have broad cimplications lor any town which houses a large number of students.

Atty. Howland asked selectmen to take the position that legal domicile is where a student says it is. Selectmen took the opposite position yesterday, and agreed to support a statement presented to them by the town Board of Registrars. Voting in favor of the registrars statement were Merle Howes, Stephen Keedy, H. Hills Skillings and Michael Sullivan. Selectman Nancy Eddy was absent.

The registrars statement reads:

"The members of the Board of Registrars have considered the Garrett vs. Larkin case and the communication of Attorney Howland...

"With reference first to the court case, as was pointed out at the selectmen's meeting on April 6, Miss Garrett would not have had to go to court had she lived in Amherst. Proof of six months residence, plus the intent to remain here, plus a sworn statement of emancipation, would have been accepted as proof of residence and she would have been allowed to register. This type of student has what this board feels to be a valid residence in Amherst. The Board of Registrars has followed this liberal policy with students for a long time, although only recently, with the eligibility of younger students, has it been widely applicable...

"In discussing the newly arrived young people who may be eligible to vote in Amherst, Attorney Howland points out that a substantial majority of both students and teaching or administrative personnel may remain in Amherst about the same span of years. This may be true, but the Board feels that there is a substantial difference between these two groups as a whole. Students - in the main - have a room on campus, must in most cases go home tor holidays and vacations, and as a general group, have little contact with the Town of Amherst. Most students on campus who have cars register them in their home towns. This type of student, which comprises the great majority of the student population, seems to the Board to be a transient, and in many ways, artificial kind of inhabitant of the town. The town has no voice in the campus government. May the question be raised as whether students should have a voice in town government, but no responsibilities for the administration of town government?

"The teaching and administrative personnel, on the other hand, again in the main, establish homes in this or surrounding towns, live in them the year round, and normally have left the "parental roof". They would seem to have much more reason to have a voice in town government.

"In addition to these two groups, many single students find it desirable or expedient for various reasons to live in rooms or apartments off campus. Some of these students may actually establish homes here, but probably the great majority of them again are here only during the school year and still have homes to which they return for vacations and at the close of the school year. It is impossible, for example, to do street listing in apartment complexes occupied mostly by students during the intersession period in January. This type of student doesn't seem to be a bona fide resident, either. The instructions for the State Census currently under way clearly directs that only those students who have no usual place of abode other than at such educational institution should be enumerated as one of the school family. These will normally be very few in number. It may be pointed out here that there are probably more students listed in Amherst than in most towns, because of the large number of married and self-supporting students.

"A married student, on the other hand, has usually left his parents' home and established his own home. The court has said that the place where a married man's family resides is generally to be considered his domicile. If a married student feels he has established a home in Amherst, he may register to vote here. The question of support need not be a factor..."

In addition to the registrars' statement, selectmen voted to add a letter of their own to the Atty. General stating that the impact on the town could be detrimental if more liberal interpretation of "residence" were to be given in a town where students outnumber permanent, full-time residents.

Black Liberation On Forum Tonight

"Strategy lor Black Liberation" is the discussion being presented tonight by the Militant Forum. The forum, given by Norman Oliver, National Black Work Director of the Young Socialist Alliance, will discuss the dynamics of the Black Liberation struggle. It will be held at 8:00 in Room 174 of the Campus Center.

Norman Oliver, twenty years old, just recently returned from a trip to Germany, where he visited army bases and talked with Black G.I.'s about racist conditions in the army and anti-war sentiment among Black soldiers.

While in high school in Detroit, he was the managing editor of the Black Student Voice, a newspaper written by Black high school students and, at Highland Park Community College, he worked with the Association of Black Students and the Student Mobilization Committee.

Oliver, National Organization Secretary of YSA, has spoken in cities around the country on the revolutionary dynamics of the Black movement.

Car Inspection Goes On Have Yours Done Early

Registrar Richard E. McLaughlin wishes to remind drivers that we are now in the first week of Massachusetts semi-annual compulsory inspection period which runs through May 15. The types of vehicles which must be inspected include passenger, trucks, trailers, motorcycles, motorscooters and motor-bikes, school buses and vehicles with larm, dealer repair and owner-repair plates.

Motor vehicles passing the inspection will have a blue sticker placed on their windshields. Rejected vehicles will be marked with a red and white sticker. Necessary repairs should be made immediately and the vehicle resubmitted for inspection. Any motor vehicle or trailer without the blue sticker and any vehicle with a red and white rejection sticker on May 16 may not be operated on the highways of the Commonwealth. Operators in violation of this law face court prosecution and fine.

The motor vehicle adjuster will include in his examination: brakes, lights, registration plates, horn, tires, windshield, and wipers, steering system and ball joints, muffler and exhaust system, bumpers, fenders and external sheet metal, safety chains on trailers and floor panels for rust damage. Vehicles emitting excessive smoke from the exhaust system will be rejected until repairs have been made.

"This has been a long Winter--hard on motor vehicles--and an early inspection is advisable if you want to make certain you are driving a car in safe condition," McLaughlin said.

The persons answering questions on Pakistan last night represented only East Pakistan. No defenders of West Pakistan were present.

What's on Your Mind?

If you happen to be passing by the University Store sometime between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. today and see some lines in your path, it isn't because they are giving away more of those Campus Pacs. Instead, you will soon realize that an election is being held, or more specifically, a referendum. Once again, someone wants to know what you think.

In this particular referendum, the Student Senate, which voted to endorse the People's Peace Treaty and the Spring 1971 calendar of non-violent anti-war events, is submitting four questions to the student body on these particular subjects. The purpose of the referendum, according to one Student Senator anyway, is, "to give Nixon one more sign of where American students stand".

Neither the Senate nor anyone else expects that any of the questions will fail. Yet the importance of these issues lies not in their mere passage but in the unilateral support that will hopefully be given to them. It is long past the time when a division of opinion is warranted on the war issue. Solidarity, as cliched as it may sound, must be the ultimate end of the anti-war movement.

In this regard, today's vote is significant in at least two respects. The Senate's endorsement of the People's Peace Treaty and the demonstrations represents the views of the representatives of the student body and thus is important. However, it has been charged in the past and indeed seems to be the constant enigma of legislative bodies, that the Student Senate is unrepresentative. If nothing else, this feeling somewhat detracts from the Senate's actions on the matter under discussion. Therefore, the significance of its vote is debatable.

What is not debatable, however, is the importance of 1.) a large turnout in today's referendub and 2.) an equally large positive vote on all four questions. The vote can, in these respects, demonstrate the unusual unanimity of opinion on these issues and at the same time aid in causing some positive policy changes on the national level.

It has come to the point where an all-out, full scale effort is necessary to try to stop the insanity of Southeast Asia. The People's Peace Treaty may not be the way, nor may this Spring's demonstrations. Taken on the whole, however, they help to represent the mass support which the anti-war position has attained.

Although you may disagree with one or another part of the People's Peace Treaty or even on this spring's proposed activities: It still seems important that you overlook small variations in method in order to achieve the final end. We urge you to vote "yes" on all four questions in today's referendum.

Pre-Washington Paranoia

Ed Janusz: Pre-Washington Paranoia (or, Rennie Night in Washington)

Near the end of his speech on Tuesday night, Rennie Davis commented on our inability to "get our shit together." He was right, of course, and his speech told me why.

I wasn't one of the five hundred or so who saw Mr. Davis. By chance, I heard most of his speech on the radio. I'm glad I did, because he has to be the most articulate revolutionary going, not only did he stay fairly free from the most decrepit New Left cliches and scatology, but he rang with an impassioned sincerity that I've ever heard.

The first half of his speech, absolutely the most devastating picture of American abominations I could have imagined, left me practically in tears--I felt as if I had been listening to a voice from hell. In a sense I had, because Davis expressed his rage far better than I ever could at this war that has already created a generation of mutants and a desert of chemical disaster. Sure, I've always--you know--been against war and against violence, but I was suddenly useless, as if I was just waking up from some kind of flower-power dream, and had been cheating the rest of the world because I had managed to avoid being crippled by something I can't even pretend to understand.

It didn't last. I wasn't going to march against this lump in Asia--I was suddenly listening to myself march for Bobby and Ericka, against racism and sexism, for the Soledad Brothers and the psychedelic revolution. "Smoke a little dope before you go...get into each other's heads." Somebody who had come in while I was still marching against the war handed me a bag of Fritos.

What happens if I'm against the war--but I don't want the Soledad Brothers deciding who can get away with murder any more than I want Nixon deciding who can get away with murder? What happens if I'm against the war--but I don't feel like hauling my ass to Washington to protest sexism, which is 10,000 years old and can't be handled by screaming through loudspeakers to 500,000 stoned and tired marchers, and which I don't feel like protesting anyway?

What happens if I'm against violence of any kind--but I had to laugh when Rennie Davis, sounding like a traffic-report helicopter, organized us street by street, tried to handle half a million freaks, and mentioned the term "non-violence" once, in between promises to "shut the motherfucker down?"

I would like to go to Washington, because the peace movement is something I believe in more strongly now than ever. But I don't like the thought of my presence being used by Pantherites, Millettettes, NLFsters, and Rubinoids. I don't like the near-certainty that out of the massive number of people of all types that will be there, there won't be enough to start a fight of proportions that can't be predicted--and I'm not talking about cops. I've already heard one story that says Dylan will be playing for free on May Day weekend; I wonder how many minds will be made up by that.

Anyone For Ping-Pong?

WASHINGTON — It's very rare that the CIA gets caught flat-footed, but the other day when Red China invited the United States to send a table tennis team to Peking, the Central Intelligence Agency discovered it had no champion Ping-Pong players in the organization whom it could send along on the trip.

CIA officials were going crazy trying to find someone before the U.S. team left for Peking last Saturday.

In panic, the CIA officials decided to hold a crash program in Ping-Pong. Neighbors who live around Langley, Va., where the top secret agency is located, reported seeing truckloads of Ping-Pong tables going through the gates.

They have reported that they can't sleep at night because of the noise of thousands of balls being hit back and forth across the tables set up in the CIA gymnasium.

Any agent who ever played Ping-Pong in boys' camp or at the beach had been given leave from his regular duties and brought to Langley in hopes he might be developed into a champion Ping-Pong player before the U.S. team took off for Peking.

The CIA also held an employees' Ping-Pong tournament during lunch hour with cash prizes of up to $100,000 of unaccountable funds to encourage more people to take up the sport.

Yet, despite these desperate measures, officials of the agency are pessimistic that they'll be able to develop anybody worthy of playing Red China at table tennis.

"What difference does it make if he isn't a champion?" I asked a CIA official.

"We have a serious problem," he said. "This is the first time we're playing Red China at any sport. Table tennis is the most important game in China.

"The USIA and the State Department want the United States to field the best team it can find because they believe that if we can defeat the Chinese at Ping-Pong it would be the greatest propaganda victory of the cold war.

"On the other hand, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the CIA feel it would be better to send a mediocre team and risk defeat in exchange for finding out what Mao Tse-tung is really thinking.

"The ideal, of course, would be to send a champion Ping-Pong player who also can figure out what is going on in Peking. But so far we can't find anybody."

"Why is that?" I asked. "Surely in this vast organization you must have some excellent table tennis players."

"Unfortunately, most of our agents are golfers," he said sadly. "We also have some tennis players and a few people who play croquet. But no one here ever thought to recruit Ping-Pong players."

"Couldn't you borrow a champion player from another agency of the government?"

"The only one who would have qualified was a man who worked for the FBI and had won the intercollegiate Ping-Pong championship of 1956. But unfortunately, he was fired a month ago for telling a friend that he didn't like J. Edgar Hoover's barber."

"Then it looks like the United States table tennis team may have to go to Peking without CIA representation?" I said.

"Unless we can come up with a sleeper," the official said. "Our recruiters are out on the college campuses right now and their orders are to find someone, anyone. It doesn't make any difference if he can pass a security clearance as long as he has a vicious backhand."

"Will anyone be punished because the CIA was unprepared to provide an agent for the Red China table tennis tournament?" I asked.

"Our personnel director was demoted and transferred to Iceland the other day, but at the last minute President Nixon commuted his sentence."

Crisis In Education

The contradictions of the technocratic philosophy are blantly and rapidly becoming apparent. The dooming philosophy of modern insitutions, including school, manifests itself in the open ended nature of the promise of progress. There can be no open-ended progress, for technology is already killing by poisoning the environment, by modern warfare, and by over-population.

The promise of open-ended progress is a promise of science unrestrained by reason. The school is the essential propagator of this type of technological madness; by freeing education from the school people may then learn the truth about the society in which they live.

No country in the world can afford the education its people want in the form of schools. Recent estimates for the United States suggest that it would cost eighty billion additional dollars to fully meet present educational demands in terms of more and better schooling. The continued attempts to supply the demand for college study will result in the condemnation of black and rural minorities to an indefinite wait for an adequate education.

Like all institutions schools are merely a framework for the behavior of human beings, a haven for utopian-minded Skinnerians. Schools have also a monopoly on educational resources, thus, a partial monopoly of certain kinds of educated men and women. The ideology of school is also contained within itself. Thus, the school has become what the church once was, a total institution, the sole sponsor of independent thought, creativity, and individuality--or so they preach--we all damn well realize they practice conformity and perpetuate mediocracy.

Until I was able to leave the campus, I was confused about the problem of school. It was impossible for me to develop a real perspective while I was actually surrounded by the problem. It becomes apparent to me now that radical university students and faculty can in part be explained as unwilling captives of the school, partly as people more influenced by ideology than by practice, and in part as those who have become aware of the discrepancy between what schools are and what they claim to be.

The first amendment of the Constitution of the United States tells us that, "There shall be no establishment of religion." Well my brothers and sisters only the terms of the problem are different today--the major threat today being the domination of men's mind's by the omniscent, SCHOOL SYSTEM. We desperately need to do-school, to develop alternatives to schools not only so that all men can share in true education, but even more importantly, so that all men can freely learn what they need to know to save themselves from technologies' damnation. The blatant error of the philosophy of progress can be exposed only by truth. In order for man to perceive this truth he must first become aware that he has come to obtain the role of prisoner, in a prison where he is even blind to the bars.

Thomas Hodgkins put it down rather concisely in 1823, "Men had better be without education than be educated by their rulers; for this education is but the mere breaking in of the steer to the yoke; the mere disipline of the hunting dog, which by dint of severity is made to forego the strongest impulse of his nature, and instead of devouring his prey, to hasten with it to the feet of his master."

For more information concerning de-schooling and alternatives to education write for CIDOC Cuadero #1005, which is Everrett Reimer's book, An Essay On Alternatives In Education, CIDOC, Cuernavaca, Mexico. It cost about one half of a dime bag but its worth it.

Letters To The Editor

Compliments Are Flying

To the Editor:

Perhaps Matt Tackeff might be better able to understand why we in YSA get uptight at red-baiting if I compare it to Hew-baiting. The Jew-baiter accuses the Jew of the "crime" of being what she or he is, namely a Jew. In exactly analogous fashion the Red-baiter accuses the Red of the "crime" of being what she or he is, namely a revolutionary socialist. In both cases the accusation is not of criminal activity but of criminal being.

Consider Mr. Tackeff's column in yesterday's Collegian. If we simply change the references to YSA to references to Jews, the baiting nature of the column becomes clear. The column would then read "Sid Finehirsh calls it 'Jew baiting' for people like (Mr. X and Mr. Y) to call attention to the ubiquity of (Jews) in the leadership of other organizations. I don't think so. Why should (Jews) get uptight at charges of their ubiquity. Unless perhaps they are trying to hide that fact in order to maintain effective front groups."

Of course I have tried so hard to hide the fact that I am a revolutionary socialist that I gave a talk at a Militant Forum last semester on a Marxist interpretation of the May Student Strike which was reported on the front page of the Collegian. Obviously the reason I have written numerous articles and letters in the Collegian expressing a revolutionary socialist viewpoint and often signed as the chairman of the Young Socialist Alliance is that I am "trying to hide the fact in order to maintain effective front groups." Claire Moriarty has tried so hard to cover up her political beliefs that she also spoke at the Militant Forum at the beginning of this semester on why as an "anti-War activist she was also a socialist. Her speech was also reported in the Collegian. Bernie Lougee has tried to keep from being exposed as a socialist by usually wearing his YSA button pin on his sweater. Could someone tell me what the hell Tackeff is talking about when he changes we in YSA try to hide the fact?

The truth is that we in YSA are extremely proud of the leadership our members have given the anti-War movement. It was YSAers who originally argued the need for the anti-War movement to raise the demand for immediate withdrawal. That was 5 years ago when the majority of the movement supported only the demand for "negotiations" and "Stop the Bombing." The madequacy of the movement supports what was originally the YSA position.

It was YSAers who have always argued against the anti-War to "peace" politicians like Lyndon Johnson and Eugene McCarthy who only use the movement up until election day. This perspective for independent mass action is now gaining a majority in the movement.

Through our ideas and our work we have become leaders in the anti-War movement elected democratically to those positions because non-YSAers have come to agree with our anti-War perspective even if they dissagree with our overall socialist perspective and they respect the energy we put in fighting for the same goal as they: an end to the War in S.E. Asia.

We think that ward like the one in S.E. Asia are products of the capitalist social system under which we live; that wars like the present one will go on until this social system is removed from the face of the globe. We think that this idea will like many of our other ideas will win the support of a majority of Americans. If you agree and want to help build that majority for socialism--join us.

Interpretations

To the Editor:

There is a great deal of mis-understanding and mis-information pertaining to the nature of "HARAMBE" and its general purpose. There are many different interpretations of the term Third World. I don't think any one national group can claim a monopoly on its meaning.

There is no doubt that different national groups tend to apply their own interpretations to it and sometimes tries to nationalize it like Mr. Boatin did in his article. He says: "Being of the Third World does necessarily inply beign foreign" and "those countries of the globe which belong neither to the 'free world' nor the 'Communist bloc'. Applying Mr. Boatin's interpretation of the term, we concluded that the Third World does not exist and is nothing but a figment of our imagination. We interpreted Mr. Boatin as saying that the Japanese, Indians, Pakistanis, Arabs, Africans, and the people of the Caribean and Latin America are essentially not members of the world Third World Community. We are sorry but we have to disagree with Mr. Boatin's interpretation.

Mr. Boatin also pointed out the fact that he was unable to recognize the names of any of "Harambe's" members. We would like to point out the fact that two of the members of "Harambe" are foreigners and they identify themselves with the international Third World struggle.

Our interpretation of the term Third World is applicable to people whose ancestors or even themselves have been victims of United States and European Imperialism at one time or the other. Mr. Boatin tends to nationalize the term and make it applicable only to foreigners; "Being of the Third World implies being foreign"; if this is the case, does Mr. Boatin exclude the Native American Indians, Mexican Americans, Chinese Americans, Japanese Americans and Black Americans? The mere presence of these people is the greatest manifestation of United States racist, imperialistic policies towards non-white peoples. These people are still being exploited by the dominant majority of the United States. Mr. Boatin refused to state the names of the countries that he recognized as Third World countries.

We would like to inform Mr. Boatin that the two foreigners who are officers of "Harambe" have been busily working towards getting more Third World student involved. Already there are two foreigners and there are still two vacancies that need to be filled. We cannot help but conclude that Mr. Boatin is completely ignorant to the intentions of "Harambe" and we would strongly suggest that he make an effort to meet with the people involved. We can be reached at 527-5123. We would be more than happy to meet with him.

More About Matt

To the Editor:

Matt Tackeff's contempt for the students at this University is unparallelled. According to him, every student-- save himself, of course, and a couple of his friends--is putty in the hands of red "manipulators." Not only that, he contends that despite the fact that we "manipulators" openly set up revolutionary socialist literature tables, openly write letters to the COLLEGIAN, and openly discuss our socialist program--he contends that somehow we have managed to conceal our identities as socialists from the students here. He not only thinks you're dumb, he thinks you're deaf and dumb.

Matt is not himself in the antiwar movement. He supports Nixon's policy of escalation in Southeast Asia. And, by supporting the U.S. presence there, he opposes self-determination for the Vietnamese. For these reasons and others he attacks the antiwar movement in this country. We should not mistake his red-baiting of the movement: he is not attacking one or two individuals, but everyone who is seriously committed to ending the War. He will call you "dupes" and your organization "fronts" because he hopes to discredit and undermine the majority here and across the U.S. who oppose the War.

But Matt is not only calling names. He is serious about putting an end to the antiwar movement here. He and several others are bringing suits against the Student Senate for funding the Student Mobilization Committee on this campus. His objective is to cut off funds to the group, to effectively cripple it. If this personal vendetta against a few of us in the Mobe is allowed to continue in this way, everyone else in the SMC who has worked to keep the antiwar movement alive, everyone on this campus who opposes the War will be affected.

Claire Moriarty
Co-Chairwoman SMC

If You Must

To the Editor:

Sometime soon go to Warsaw, or better yet, Prague, or Budapest. See the freedom of these great "peoples" republics. See their sorry state as they strive for a taste for freedom, and watch them get blown to bits, mutilated by tanks and see their leaders get thrown into jails to rot, never even getting the chance for a trial quite often, or if they do, then take a look at their "trial".

Then tell me again about your demands:

1. End the war now--those of you who have the insights, the knowledge, necessary to accomplish this. YOU elected a President-Richard Nixon, who said he would do this. At this time there are not half as many troops in Vietnam as there were when I was there. And now, reports say he's even established a timetable for withdrawal.

2. Guarantee a family of four an annual $6500 income--then attempt to stem inflation, and motivate people to work.

3. Free your "political prisoners"--then kill more living, breathing men who wear robes and blue uniforms--and do it in the name of humanity.

Now tell me that the enemy is capitalism. Show me a Black in the Kremlin, or a practicing Catholic in China.

Think first.

Then go to Washington, if you must.

"One Question, Chief — What Do I Say When They Ask Me How Would I Know?"

Spring Foliage

Lo! the conqueror worm
squirms concerned yearning for the real turn
'twas tooled by a false alarm spring.

and the old mole is cold shiveringly bold hankering to get hot once the cyclic death of the hideous frost takes effect.

The hideous frost' which escap'd to fool April out of winter's lost grave
Has aborted earlybird hopes of the earth's impatient seedlings

The frost' grey breath of old age phlegm
will be buried for two seasons like a hibernating zombie eyes deep in the sockets, a putrescent film upon the lips that kiss the hollow cheek of a faroff future.

Spring Day soon, I dreamt so! tied to a stake on the rifle range before a firing squad of snowmen.

Drawing A Parallel

To the Editor:

It's interesting to compare the treatment that convicted mass murderer William Calley is receiving from Nixon, with the treatment Angela Davis is getting. Nixon ordered Calley released from confinement after he was convicted of murdering 22 innocent men, women and children; he denounced Angela as guilty not only before trial, but even before indictment. He who ordered Calley released from the stockade is responsible for Angela's solitary confinement in Marin County Jail. Six secretaries have been assigned by the military to help Calley open his fan mail; Professor Davis is barred from receiving letters of solidarity from all over the world. Calley can go to Columbus, Georgia under a light guard for relaxation and dining; Angela eats alone, takes her recreation alone, and lives under the heavy guard of the prison warders. The Commander-in-Chief obviously prefers the slaughterers of the Asian people to a fighter for the liberation of black people. Is this a racist war?

The reaction against Calley's sentencing underscores again the thoroughly racist character of this war; from Calley's comment that the murder of the yellow people was "no big deal", to Lester Maddox's cheer, "Thank God for Lt. Calley", to Spiro Agnew's comparison of Calley's case with Muhammed Ali's indictment for draft resistance.

While it's true that Calley's conviction is being used to get the big shots off the hook, while it's true that he is one of the smaller war criminals, he is nonetheless responsible for his actions against the people of Vietnam To make another comparison: compare Calley with the only U.S casualty of the Mylai massacre, a black G.I. who shot himself in the foot so he wouldn't have to participate in the slaughter. What is this man if Calley is a hero?

Beginning April 24th, there will be a prolonged series of mass actions in Washington to end the war, racism, and repression. Every person who is revolted by this war should try to get there; the Mobe has busses and the People's Peace Treaty has a caravan.

All out for April 24th!

We wish to announce that the Commuter Assembly Executive Council has endorsed Lee Sandwen for President of the Student Senate. This endorsement was voted at our last meeting.

Turkey To Be "Link" Says Professor Vali

Turkey, a country which the 20th Century has seen come from the ruins of an empire to become an important link between the East and West, receives a thorough analysis in a new book by Ferenc A. Vali, professor of government at UMass.

Bridge across the Bosporus is the only book which outlines in detail the historical background which has shaped Turkey's contemporary foreign policy attitudes, and provides a thorough, up-to-date analysis of current foreign policy thinking," according to the publisher, The Johns Hopkins Press.

To gather information for his latest book, Prof. Vali interviewed Turkish political leaders and acquired information from the U.S. Department of State, the British Foreign Office, and foreign policy experts and scholars in many countries. During World War II he had been in Turkey on a "confidential wartime diplomatic mission" and revisited the country in 1965 and 1968.

Prof. Vail believes, "The transformation of Turkey from a traditional Islamic country into a modern nation-state is one of the most impressive developments of our epoch." He traces this transformation from the founding of the Ottoman Empire to the present through the aspects of foreign policy, political parties, NATO, and Turkey's relationship with the East and West.

Last year Prof. Vail was invited to conduct a research project on the Turkish Straits and NATO at Stanford University's Hoover Institution on War, Revolution, and Peace.

The government professor, who has been at UMass since 1961, was born in Budapest in 1905 and educated at the University of Budapest and the University of London. He taught at the University of Budapest until 1949 when the Communist regime banished him from the faculty. From 1951 until 1956 he was imprisoned by the Communists and when the Hungarian Revolution was suppressed by the Soviet Union, Prof. Vail and his wife escaped into Austria. They came to the United States in 1957.

Change Needed
Married Priest Is Excommunicated

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—A prominent Roman Catholic pastor, the Rev. Robert F. Duryea, has been excommunicated and removed from his post after Church authorities discovered he has been married for nearly seven years, it was learned Wednesday.

He and his wife have a 5-year-old son, Paul, named for the present Pope.

Father Duryea, 49, was vice president of the Priests' Synod of the San Francisco archdiocesan, an elected member of the Archdiocesan Council of Pastors, and pastor of the thriving 4,000-member St. Peter's Catholic church of suburban Pacifica.

Parish lay leaders and other clergy staff members voiced dismay at his removal, and said he has been a higly effective pastor. Some of them were said to have known of his marital status for more than a year but kept it in confidence.

His "leadership of our community as a married priest has been excellent," said the 15-member elected parish council, and added:

"Because of our experience with Father Duryea, we feel that the Church's rule of celibacy which deprives our community of a minister such as Father Duryea sould be changed as soon as possible."

San Francisco Archbishop Joseph T. McGucken expressed regret that the action was necessary, but said in a statement:

"By the law of the Church, his action involves automatic excommunication, and, of course, prohibits the exercise of his priesthood. We will keep him in our prayers, as well as the welfare of the people of the parish, which is uppermost in our minds."

Father Duryea, a tall, handsome, and gentle clergyman, said he was leaving his ministry "very much against my will." He readily acknowledged that his marriage breaks a Church law, but he said:

"My conviction is that the law is detremental to the life and growth of the Church, and must be changed. I have proved to myself and to anyone with an open mind that the traditional objection to a married priest is nonsense..."

Canon Law 2388 provides for excommunication of any priest that contracts marriage, without a dispensation from their clerical orders.

His marriage, on June 16, 1964, was by a fellow Catholic priest, associates said, but declined to identify him. Father Duryea also declined to further identify his wife at this time.

Senator Dole Supports Voting At 18

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Senator Bob Dole, Chairman of the Republican National Committee, urged state legislatures to give speedy approval of the Constitutional Amendment giving 18 to 20-year-olds the right to vote.

In a letter to all Republican Governors, state chairman and legislative leaders he said that 18 to 20-year-olds should have the opportunity "to take part in the full range of electoral activities next year and hereafter. We believe that eleven million new voters can make a significant contribution to the dialogue of democracy which we pursue daily."

Speaking for his Party, Dole said, "We supported the Fifteenth Amendment to allow Black Americans full voting rights of all citizens. We supported the Nineteenth Amendment to extend the franchise to women. It is now time for our Party at all levels to welcome America's youth into the rolls of our nation's voters."

Three UMass Professors Named Guggenheim Fellows

A scientist, a historian and a writer from UMass-Amherst faculty are among those honored this year as Guggenheim Fellows.

Associate Professor of Physics Norman C. Ford, Jr., History Professor Stephen B. Oates and School of Education Visiting Lecturer Peter Schrag were among 354 outstanding scholars, scientists and artists named Monday as 1971 Guggenheim Fellows. They were chosen from among 2363 applicants from the U.S. and Canada.

The John Simon Guggenheim Memoiral Foundation awards the fellowships "on the basis of demonstrated accomplishments in the past and strong promise for the future." The award carries a stipend for a year of continuous work.

Professor Ford's research area is biophysics; he has been studying the characteristics of large molecules such as those that make up living tissue. "We've been working mostly with liquids, looking at light s attered from these large molecules. From this we can tell something about the size, shape and how they change," he explained.

Such research has ultimate bearing on how various biological processes work, he added. He will continue these studies next year at Oxford University with the aid of the Guggenheim Fellowship.

Professor Oates' two latest books are To Purge This Land With Blood: A Biography of John Brown and Visions of Glory: Texans on the Southwestern Frontier. The latter book takes a revisionist look at the American frontier character. As a Guggenheim Fellow, Dr. Oates will work on a biography of Abraham Lincoln.

Peter Schrag is a writer, author and social critic, editor of Change magazine and editor-at-large of the Saturday Review. He is the author of Voices in the Classroom and Village School Downtown, two books on the crisis in American education. As a Guggenheim Fellow, his studies will concern the politics of social disintigration.

Nat'l Science Grant Given To Biology Prof

Dr. Lincoln P. Brower of the Biology Department at Amherst College has received a grant of $18,000 from the National Science Foundation to make a study of "Climatic Control of Tree Growth, Range, and Adaptation in Forest Communities." Professor Brower will work with Stephen Kessell, of South Paris, Maine, an Amherst junior, in the project.

Dr. Brower and Kessell, who is undertaking independent study in biology, submitted a joint paper to the magazine Ecology in September, 1970, outling their project. They will use the grant to continue building computer models of the interactions among trees and between trees and the environment.

"We can already predict, with a small percentage of error," says Kessell, "what kinds of trees will grow and which will grow best in a certain location. We simply feed into the computer such factors as cloud cover, humidity, temperature, rainfall, slope of the land, and elevation. Our project has real practical advantages--we can tell someone what kind of tree he should plant on his land in order to achieve the best results."

Dr. Brower and Kessell will be working with the Eastern hemlock, a tree whose environmental behavior other investigators have not been able to understand. They have already discovered that what was thought to be one kind of hemlock is actually two strains, one of which grows slowly in severe climates and the other of which has a high growth rate in a favorable climate with considerable rainfall.

Brower and Kessell will study how the two types of hemlock interact with each other and with the environment. This year will be spent studying the range of Eastern hemlock which extends from south of the Hudson Bay to Alabama. Next year the two investigators will study a second range of hemlock which stretches from the Rocky Mountains northward to Alaska. The project will require considerable travel to remote, backwoods areas to collect data.

ALL ARE CORDIALLY INVITED

Sponsored by the University and State Communications Council

If you're waiting for the government to sign a peace treaty with Vietnam, stop waiting. The people must make the peace.

And this is the treaty.

Be it known that the American and Vietnamese people are not enemies. The war is carried out in the names of the people of the United States and South Vietnam but without our consent. It destroys the land and people of Vietnam. It drains America of its resources, its youth and its honor.

We hereby agree to end the war on the following terms, so that both peoples can live under the joy of independence and can devote themselves to building a society based on human equality and respect for the earth. In rejecting the war we also reject all forms of racism and discrimination against people based on color, class, sex, national origin and ethnic grouping which forms the basis of the war policies, present and past, of the United States.

1. The Americans agree to immediate and total withdrawal from Vietnam, and publicly to set the date by which all U.S. military forces will be removed.

2. The Vietnamese pledge that as soon as the U.S. government publicly sets a date for total withdrawal, they will enter discussions to secure the release of all American prisoners, including pilots captured while bombing North Vietnam.

3. There will be an immediate cease-fire between U.S. forces and those led by the Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam.

4. They will enter discussions on the procedures to guarantee the safety of all withdrawing troops.

5. The Americans pledge to end the imposition of Thieu, Ky and Khiem on the people of South Vietnam in order to insure their right to self-determination, and so that all political prisoners can be released.

6. The Vietnamese pledge to form a provisional coalition government to organize democratic elections. All parties agree to respect the results of elections in which all South Vietnamese can participate freely without the presence of any foreign troops.

7. The South Vietnamese pledge to enter discussion of procedures to guarantee the safety and political freedom of those South Vietnamese who have collaborated with the U.S. or with the U.S.-supported regime.

8. The Americans and Vietnamese agree to respect the independence, peace and neutrality of Laos and Cambodia in accord with the 1954 and 1962 Geneva conventions, and not to interfere in the internal affairs of these two countries.

9. Upon these points of agreement, we pledge to end the war and resolve all other questions in the spirit of self-determination and mutual respect for the independence and political freedom of the people of Vietnam and the United States.

By ratifying this agreement, we pledge to take whatever actions are appropriate to implement the terms of this Joint Treaty of Peace, and to insure its acceptance by the government of the United States.

Saigon, Hanoi and Paris, December 1970

This is not a petition. It is a Treaty of Peace, worked out in meetings between ordinary Vietnamese and American people, the people who have the most to lose by war, and the most gain by peace. A recent Gallup poll shows that 73% of the American people want the United States government out of Vietnam by the end of 1971. If you want to tell other people about the hope that the treaty holds we can help you to bring it to your community, to your union, church, temple or school, to your home. Because if enough people want peace, it must come.

Soaring With Shaw

By ED JANUSZ
MDC Staff

Bernard Shaw takes on religion, capitalism, idealism, and England in his Major Barbara, the current UMT production being shown in Bartlett Theatre.

The problem with Major Barbara is that it is primarily an intellectual play, with a minimum of movement and an abundance of mental sword-play. It is up to the players to keep an audience, and the University cast plays admirably on what's there.

Shaw, an incredible misanthrope, had a fondness for manipulating silly people across his stage. With the exception of the satanic millionaire Andrew Undershaft, his characters in Major Barbara are idealistic fluffheads. The minor roles are therefore oftentimes easier; Arthur Rikley as the near-imbecilic Cholly and Sheila McMahon as a saintly Salvation Army girl were especially impressive.

The lead roles were more of a problem. Mary Robb Carr, playing Barbara, the Salvation Army major, was excellent as long as she was Major Barbara, a model of winsome idealism; but her conversion to the devil at the end was so written that I doubt anybody could make it convincing. Barbara turns into a mindless syncophant too quickly to believe, and the credibility can't be saved.

Andrew Undershaft, played by Steven Brass, was much stronger; a conglomerate of melodramatic tycoon and Nietzschean Sociologist who could leave any politician gasping in the dust for wit and originality, whatever he may lack in appeal to our consciences (or in coherence, perhaps).

Major Barbara is not for everyone, just as Shaw is not for everyone. It's an excellent performance on a set that is striking in its stark contrasts between the mansion, welfare center, and munitions factory; and if you do go, prepare yourself for a distinct mind-experience, as much as for a night at the theater.

Tickets can be bought at the Bartlett Box Office; Major Barbara is playing through Saturday.

Happenings Originator To Visit Campus Today

Al Hansen, an artist and one of the originators of Happenings, will be on campus today to help organize the 5-College Festival of Dada and Surrealism (April 20th to May 8th). At noon in the Colonial Lounge, Student Union, he'll rap on his ideas for carrying out the Festival in a true spirit of Dada then at 4 p.m. in the Council Chambers upstairs he'll show some slides of his own work.

In between times he'll go everywhere and anywhere, sizing up the campus for the Happening that he'll return in a couple of weeks to direct.

According to one explanation, Happenings grew out of Dada via the collages and environments of Kurt Schwitters, a Hanover artist who kept constantly adding pieces to a huge and intricate pillar in his house. When there was no more room in the house, he cut a hole in the ceiling and expanded the pillar up instead.

Al Hansen is the author of A Primer of Happenings & Time/Space Art and Incomplete Requiem for W.C. Fields. He is currently at work on a day-by-day collage history of the last ten years. With one collage for each day, he will when finished have a total of 3,653 collages.

A dynamic visual poem by artist Al Hansen, who will be on campus today to help organize the Dada-Surrealist Festival. This is one of a series of such poems made from the words, numbers and lines on Hershey Bar wrappers.

Boston March, Rally Set For Women's Liberation Day

Women's Liberation Day is Saturday, April 17 according to a release from the New England Women's Coalition.

Women from all over New England are scheduled to meet at Copley Square in Boston at noon, and march to the Boston Common for a rally with speakers and entertainment, it said:

"The rally is focusing around issues central to all women: women demanding control over their lives and control over their bodies; this involves free abortion on demand--no forced sterilization; free 24-hour community-controlled child care; equal pay, equal work and equal educational opportunities; and the repeal of all laws regulating private sexual behavior," the release said.

"Booths will be set up on the Common explaining these issues and other aspects of the women's movement, it went on.

"This rally can be seen as a sequel to the massive demonstrations held last August 26, on the 50th anniversary of the enfranchisement of half the adult population of this nation--The Nineteenth Amendment, which guaranteed the right to vote to women. On that day last summer, 40,000 women in New York City alone demonstrated around issues central to women's liberation; thousands more marched in cities all across the country," they said.

"Women's Liberation Day has been called by the New England Women's Coalition, a coalition of women's groups throughout New England. Different groups within NEWCO include Northshore Feminists; Massachusetts Organization for the Repeal of Abortion Laws (MORAL); Boston Female Liberation; Radcliffe Women to Unite Mind and Body; Young Women Committed to Action (YWCA); Third World Women's Alliance; Gay Women's Liberation; and several different women's collectives and women's liberation groups at Clark, UMass (Amherst), and other schools," the release added.

"April 17 will be the first major demonstration called by NEWCO, which was formed several months ago. On March 23, NEWCO was one of the organizers of demonstrations during the abortion hearings in the Massachusetts legislature. And, on the weekend of March 26, NEWCO sponsored the Congress to United Women, which attracted over 700 women for two days of workshops, speakers, films, and getting to know each other."

"One spokeswoman, explaining a few of the demands of the demonstration, said 10,000 women die every year from illegal abortions--so we must demand the end to abortion restriction laws. Women earn two-thirds of what men earn--Black women earn even less--so we must demand equal pay and equal employment opportunities."

"All women's groups in New England that agree with the basic demands of the coalition are welcome to become part of it.

And all women are welcome to join the demonstration on April 17."

Power Plant Towers To Protect River From Thermal Pollution

VERNON, Vt. (AP)—Water cooling towers that cost $7 million are being used to cool Vermont's angry conservationists.

The first atomic power plant in the Green Mountain state, a $145 million, 540,000-kilowatt facility, is nearing completion in this tiny village near the Massachusetts Border.

After repeated outeries from conservationists, the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corporation built one of the most extensive arrays of cooling towers in the world to curb thermal (heat) pollution of the Connecticut River.

The towers, 22 in all and surmounted by fans with helicopter-size blades, are designed to recool the river water used to condense the stream generated by the nuclear reactor.

The coolers are mounted in two structures 460 feet long that look like huge cargo ships aground in a onetime cow pasture.

A public hearing was called by the Atomic Energy Commission for April 20 in nearby Brattleboro to enable concerned citizens to challenge whether everything possible has been done to guard against nuclear and heat pollution.

Vermont Yankee needs a provisional operating license from the AEC before beginning test tueling of the reactor with several million dollars worth of uranium pellets stored at the site.

A half dozen Vermont conservation and environmental groups have campaigned for nearly five years to make sure Vermont Yankee meets rigid safety standards.

On the state level Vermont Atty. Gen. James M. Jeffords has fought for strict controls. He put it simply at a hearing in Washington: "We are willing to pay extra for regulations to insure that our Green Mountain boys do not turn purple. That is our right."

Harvey D. Carter of Pownal, attorney for the Southern Vermont Conservation Society, is leading the battle at the citizen level. A former state representative, he did not seek re-election so he could devote full time to the conservation campaign.

The society is headed by John Stevens of Bondsville, executive director, who says the public cannot rely upon the AEC to force the big power utilities to meet rigid safety and pollution standards. The AEC has no yardstick for thermal pollution, he said, and "I find it hard to understand why the AEC does not show more concern for citizens. Thermal pollution speeds the death of a river."

The long battle has been expensive for the conservation society which is $25,000 in debt and has appealed for funds.

Vermont Yankee is owned by two major utility firms in Vermont and light in the rest of New England. Intervention by U.S. Sen. George D. Aiken, (R-Vt.) a resident of nearby Putney, also gave three small rural electric cooperatives a piece of the action.

Albert A. Cree of Rutland, president of Vermont Yankee, admits "we started about five years too late." He said there was no similar outcry years ago when Connecticut Yankee built its atomic plant at Haddam with negligible thermal controls.

Some of Cree's opponents credit him with making a sincere effort to protect the environment, others claim only citizen pressure has forced the utility to show concern.

Cree warns "if Vermont Yankee Atomic doesn't go on the line by the end of the year as planned the state will be hit by power shortages greater than ever before."

State agencies in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, as well as Vermont, have notified the AEC that they plan to send representatives to the April 20 hearing. Under the terms of the law when Vermont was organized as the 14th state in 1791 New Hampshire was given jurisdiction over the river that forms their common boundry.

Dr. Gaylin To Lecture On 'Peace Prisoners'

NORTHAMPTON-Dr. Willard Gaylin, author of "In the Service of Their Country," a study of war resistors in prison, will speak on "The Peace Prisoners" at Smith College.

The lecture will be given at 8 tonight in Sage Hall on the Smith campus. It is open to the public.

Dr. Gaylin is adjunct professor of psychiatry at Columbia University Law School and at Union Theological Seminary, and associate professor of psychiatry at the Columbia Psychoanalytic School. His book is the first study by a psychoanalyst of selective service violators in prison. In his research, he interviewed 26 such men, black and white, at two Federal penitentiaries and a work camp. What he learned convinced him of the need for extensive reform of American courts and prisons and the Federal Parole Board.

Dr. Gaylin has also written "The Meaning of Despair" and "Psychoanalysis and Social Research," as well as many articles on "Commonweal," "The Yale Law Journal," "Columbia University Forum" and various psychiatric publications. In addition to his institutional positions, he maintains a private psychiatric practice and is president of the Institute of Society, Ethics and the Life Sciences, a research organization of professionals in many fields.

Prof. Born To Aid Kafka Publication

Associate Prof. Jurgen Born of the Germanic Languages Department at UMass is one of four international scholars selected to prepare a critical edition of the complete works of Franz Kafka.

Prof. Born was selected because in 1967 he co-edited a German language edition of Kafka's letters.

The volume, "Briefe an Felice," which has been translated into English by James Stern of England, will soon be released by Schocken Books, Inc. of New York.

The four-man editorial board for the new complete Kafka includes members from Germany, England, and France, who met with Prof. Born in Frankfurt, Germany, recently. Creative works, letters and diaries of Kafka, one of the leading prose writers of the 20th Century, will make up the edition. Franz Kafka, who was born in Prague in 1883, lived until 1924 and is considered the most outstanding figure of the Prague Circle of writers.

Page and MacPherson Keynote Varsity M Club Luncheon

By FRED ROSENTHAL
MDC Staff

Sports information director and head golf coach, Dick Page, previewed this year's golf season; and new head football coach Dick MacPherson talked about spring football at yesterday's Varsity M Club luncheon.

The golf team is beginning its 22nd year of competition and over these years has had only three losing seasons. Last year the team won the Yankee Conference and Coach Page stated that to repeat would be the team's number one objective this season.

Page is optimistic about the coming season. About his players he says, "I have as good material as I've had." There are six seniors on the ten man squad and any of these six could be the number one man.

After Page finished Coach MacPherson spoke about Sping football and introduced his assistants who he calls the "heart of the football program." MacPherson spoke very strongly about team discipline and feels that this is his number one concern during the spring workouts.

The head coach also talked about academic requirements for athletes. He said he and his assistants all feel that this is very important and that they would like to take as many good students as possible. But he also said that he would take athletes who were "academic risks" adding that he should have "all realms of students" just as the university does.

Coach MacPherson also announced that several fine athletes had decided to attend UMass next year.

Orioles Blank Tribe

CLEVELAND (AP)-Boog Powell's two-run homer and Mike Cuellar's four-hit pitching carried the Baltimore Orioles to a 3-0 victory over the Cleveland Indians yesterday.

Powell's homer, his second, came with two out in the third and also scored Merv Rettenmund, who was walked by Cleveland starter Sam McDowell.

Paul Blair boosted the lead to 3-0 in the sixth with a ground rule double that scored Frank Robinson Robinson had singled and taken second on a wild pitch.

Roy Foster got two of the four hits off Cuellar. He singled in the second, and the Indians didn't get another man on base until the seventh when Foster and Vada Pinson singled.

Oakland 6, Twins 1

ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS (AP)-Reggie Jackson hit two tremendous home runs and pitcher Diego Segui smacked a three-run shot as the Oakland A's belted the Minnesota Twins 6-1 yesterday.

Jackson, batting .156 going into the game, ignited a five-run A's sixth with a 422-foot home run.

Sal Bando, doubled and Dave Duncan produced a run-scoring single. Then Dick Green walked and Segui swatted a 373-foot homer against Tom Hall, 0-1.

The next inning, Jackson exploded a 437-foot clout off reliever Sal Campisi.

Segui checked the Twins on five hits until the ninth when they scored on a single by Rich Reese and a double by Jim Holt, ending Oakland's bid for a third straight shutout.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries persons, described as natural pioneers, are leaders but usually are seeking someone who can lead them. That is, Aries needs affection, love, more so than perhaps most persons. Aries can appear arrogant, but usually is saying, "Please notice me!" Natives of this sign are drawn to Leo, often marry Libra and can lend spice to almost anyone's life. Some famous persons born under Aries include Marlon Brando, Bette Davis and Gloria Swanson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be receptive. Enlarge scope of ideas. Refuse to accept unreasonable restrictions. Sagittarious individual can now prove a valuable ally. See beyond the immediate. Plan ahead.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Versatile approach can surmount seemingly perplexing problem. Money is involved. Stick to quality. Don't waste time with one who constantly sings the blues. Maintain optimistic attitude.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You may be drawn in two directions at once. Past commitment coincides with current desire. Both are necessary, but have opposite goals. Take time to be analytical. You'll get right answer.

Veteran Littler Heads Monsanto Open Field

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP)-Gene Littler, making his first start here since 1959, ranks as one of the favorites going into today's first round in the $150,000 Monsanto Open Golf tournament.

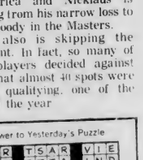
The 40-year-old veteran, winner of 22 tour events including the 1961 U.S. Open, has had his troubles most of the year but pulled his steady game together last week and finished fourth in the Masters-his best showing in a year.

"I'm still working on my action," the quiet, unassuming Californian said. "It's a fight from year to year, and there's a very fine line between being good and bad. You must make continual adjustments.

"I guess the best thing you can say about my golf is when I hit it badly, the ball stays on the course."

Littler, along with Billy Casper and Lee Trevino, ranked as the top candidates for the $30,000 first prize in the 72-hole test on the 6,679-yard, par 71 Pensacola Country Club course.

Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus, Gary Player and U.S. Open champion Tony Jacklin of England are among the major names missing. Palmer and Jacklin simply are taking time off before next week's Tournament of Champions. Player went home to South Africa and Nicklaus is recovering from his narrow loss to Charles Coody in the Masters.



Coody also is skipping the tournament. In fact, so many of the top players decided against playing that almost 40 spots were open for qualifying, one of the largest of the year.

UConn Rally Nips Redmen, 3-2

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Old man winter returned for another cameo appearance at a UMass baseball game, but this time he was an unlucky onlooker as the UConn baseball team came from behind with single runs in the ninth and tenth innings to earn a hard, uphill 3-2 victory over the Redman nine at cold, windswept Varsity Field yesterday.

This was the first of three encounters between the top two contenders for the Yankee Conference title and the win was the seventh without a loss for the streaking Huskies while the loss dropped the Redmen to 5-4 and one game behind UConn in the league standings.

Riding the strong pitching of starter Tom King and staked to an early 2-0 lead behind the bat of Brian Martin who knocked in both runs, the Redmen ran in to trouble in the last three innings as the Huskies rallied for their win.

King had pitched the first seven innings striking out ten, walking three, and giving up only four hits and his first earned run of the season. With the weather as brutal as it was he retired after the seventh and gave way to Jack Bernardo.

While King was mowing the Huskies down, UConn ace Jim Jachym, after a shaky first three frames, was likewise keeping the opposition in check and lastedeight innings striking out six, walking three, and allowing six hits and two runs.

In contrast to the effectiveness of King, Bernardo just didn't have it. He got through a shaky eighth inning stranding a runner on third who had doubled off the senior righthander.

In the ninth, he was reached for a triple with one out by John Ihlenburg and wild pitched him home to send the game into extra frames.

With one out in the tenth UConn's Harry Trohalis also tripled and scored on a sacrifice fly to give the Huskies a one run advantage which the Redmen were not able to answer in their half of the inning.

Huskie reliever August Garbatini pitched shutout ball for his two innings of work and came away as the winning pitcher upping his record to 2-0. Bernardo took the loss and now stands at 2-2.

The Redmen opened the game quickly as Charley Manley, who had an outstanding day at the plate and in the field, opened with a walk. He then stole second and scored on the first of Martin's run producing hits, this one a sharp double to right-center.

In the second UMass lost a good opportunity to score as walks to Ed McMahon and Dan Esposito put two men on with no outs only to see this threat wiped from the boards when Tom McDermott fanned after trying to sacrifice the runners up and McMahon was caught stealing on the same play.

Manley and Martin combined again in the third for another run with Manley leading off with a single, moving to second on a sacrifice by Jack Conroy, who had two hits in the game and scoring on a single by Martin to left field.

This was the final scoring for the Redmen as Jachym bore down and had to put out only a seventh inning threat, when Esposito and McDermott hit back to back singles, to complete his days work.

After being held scoreless for the first five frames by the blazing speed and variety of pitches of King, UConn scored in the sixth when Jachym sliced a triple into the right field corner and scored on a single by Brian Herosian with two out after King had come back to strike out two men after the long clout.

The next time these two teams meet will be on the 19th on May when the Huskies host the Redmen in a doubleheader. These will be the last two games for each and could well decide which one has the longer season.

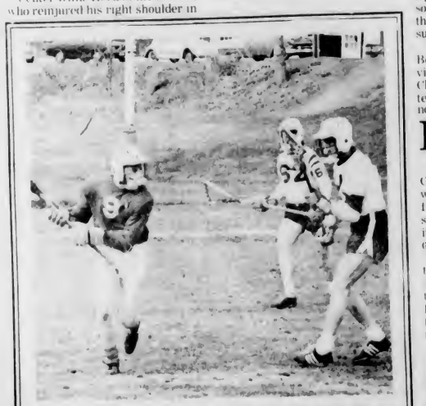
Bullets Rout Knicks Series Now Even

BALTIMORE (AP)—The Baltimore Bullets routed New York for the second consecutive game at home, beating the Knicks 101-80 last night to deadlock their National Basketball Association Eastern Conference finals at two games apiece.

The Bullets, who dropped the first two games of the best-of-seven series in New York, led 22-19 at the end of the first quarter and remained in front throughout as they controlled the boards.



Forward Jack Marin led the Bullets with 27 points while contributing 15 rebounds, an unusually high number for him, while guard Earl Monroe added 25 points and backcourt running mate Fred Carter had 23.

Center Willis Reed of the Knicks, who reinjured his right shoulder in the first quarter, was on the bench for the final 17 minutes of the game and finished with 14 points.

Led by Dick Barnett and Dave DeBusschere, the Knicks cut a 13-point Baltimore advantage to 69-63 near the end of the third quarter, but Marin, Monroe and Carter increased the lead to 76-65 as the fourth period began.

The Bullets, who won by 26 points in last Sunday's nationally televised third game, ran off a nine-point string late in the game to seal the runaway. Walt Frazier led New York with 16 points and Barnett tied Reed with 14.

The fifth game of the series will be played Friday night in New York with game No. 6 in Baltimore Sunday afternoon.

IN ACTION TODAY—Believe it or not the scheduled lacrosse game between UMass and Middlebury at Middlebury was cancelled yesterday due to an early morning blizzard. So, today these two teams will go at it again at Middlebury beginning at 3 p.m. Garber's Gorillas, currently ranked number 11 in the nation, will be gunning for their first win of the season against the big and rugged Middlebury Stickers. Netmen Return To Action At Amherst This Afternoon

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

After a 10 day layoff the UMass tennis team laces Amherst College this afternoon in their first of six matches in the next 10 days.

One week ago Sunday the netmen put B.C. away 8-1, and since then have had one match snowed out and another postponed. MIT was snowed out on April 7th, and will meet the Redmen on the 21st. Holy Cross had a date with the Redmen for the 14th, but they too were moved up on the schedule and will visit the UMass courts on Sunday the 25th, later this month.

Now comes Amherst, and barring any problems from the weatherman, UMass will be playing on Amherst's home courts at 3 p.m. today.

Amherst has traditionally had a powerful team, and this year's squad is no exception. On their southern trip they fared poorly, but the competition down south is far superior to that of New England.

Thus far Springfield and Bowdoin have been Amherst victims, both by the score of 9-0. Clearly, Amherst had hardly been tested since their return to the north. Likewise, UMass has yet to be tried as they, too, won easily in their season opener.

Nationally ranked Mike Pelliter will lead the cross-town rivals against the Redmen. TomShur will be playing one notch lower and Chris Coffin will follow him, playing in the third slot.

Lenny Bicknel and Al Ahearn are two more of their starting six, as they fill out a squad with talent and experience. Four of their top five men are seniors, and the experienced gained in one or two years of varsity play will be a big factor as this match is only the second varsity contest for three of UMass' starters.

Two of the netmen's players are experienced, as Captain Alan Goldberg and John Bloom represented the only seniors on the team, and will be playing in positions one and three respectively. In the case of Goldberg there is some doubt as to his playing status. Goldberg has been hamped by a bad hand for the past week, and whether or not he will face Amherst's nationally ranked senior this afternoon will not be known until match time.

Jim Bornheim will be playing in between the two seniors as Mark Brass, Steve Ferber and Fred Braley will be filling out the six singles slots in that order.

Doubles play will see the entrance of UMass' own Chris Coffin, as Coffin will team with Bloom, in the second doubles position, directly behind the combo of Goldberg and Ferber. Bornheim and Brass will fill out the lineup as the Redmen look for their depth to defeat Amherst.

Besides Goldberg's playing status, there is one other factor that might provide problems for the netmen. Amherst plays their home matches on a clay surface, and because UMass has been practicing on hard courts, they will certainly face problems in adjusting to the slower court.

Despite the handicap that will be offered the visiting Redmen, Coach Kosakowski feels that UMass will give Amherst all they can handle. Amherst was sited in the field of Brown and MIT as the netmen's most difficult opponents. But with good depth, and the practice they have reaped over the past week and a half, they should be in good shape to capture the town championship.

Bosox Bow; Yanks Trip Tigers

WASHINGTON (AP)—Tim Cullen drove in the tying and winning runs with a single off Bill Lee as the Washington Senators scored six runs in the seventh inning to defeat the Boston Red Sox 6-5 last night.

Mike Nagy was working on a two-hitter and had a 5-0 lead when he walked Mike Epstin leading off the seventh. Joe Foy, Frank Howard and Richie Scheinblum followed with singles, bringing in relief pitcher Bob Bolin.

Bolin missed the bag on a flip from George Scott on Jim French's grounder, leading the bases. Bolin then walked pinch-hitters Tom McCraw and Elliott Maddox without throwing a strike, forcing in two runs.

After pinch-hitter Dick Billings forced French at home, Cullen, who had hit into two double plays, singled home two runs.

The Red Sox jumped to a four-run lead off Jim Shellenback with Nagy's double driving in the first run.

The winner was Darold Knowles, the hard-luck reliever who had a 2-14 record last year, but who had won two this week.

NEW YORK (AP)—Felipe Alou, making his debut with New York, drilled a fourth inning home run yesterday that touched off a four-run uprising and started the Yankees to an 8-4 victory over the Detroit Tigers.

Alou was acquired last Friday from Oakland but was given permission to report Wednesday. After his leadoff homer the Yankees added three more runs off starter Mickey Lolich, 1-2, before the inning was over.

With one out, Roy White singled and Danny Cater doubled. White scored the go-ahead run on John Ellis' sacrifice fly and, after a walk to Bobby Murcer, singles by Gene Michael and winning pitcher Fritz PETERSON EACH DROVE IN A

With one out, Roy White singled and Danny Cater doubled. White scored the go-ahead run on John Ellis' sacrifice fly and, after a walk to Bobby Murcer, singles by Gene Michael and winning pitcher Fritz Peterson each drove in a run.

Peterson picked up his first victory, although the Tigers reached him for nine hits in the first five innings and chased him in the ninth.

Aurelo Rodriguez doubled in one Detroit run in the third and singled for another in the fifth. Dick McAuliffe homered in the eigh for the third Tiger run.

VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 125 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FRIDAY, APRIL 16, 1971

A LONG TIME AGO—Though things may have gotten better since this photo was taken in 1915, women used to have a pretty rough time getting their rights. However, some people would have you believe that women still don't have everything that's theirs rightfully. And who knows? They're probably right. (MDC photo dug out of an attic by Larry Goldberg)

Will Investigate Teaching Distribution

Fac-Sen To Study Fall Recess

—By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU—
MDC Staff

Yesterday's Faculty Senate meeting focused on next year's academic calender, a proposed investigation into the University's practices relating to faculty teaching load, a "Man and His Environment" Program, and special report from The Tenure and Grievance Committee.

The motion to revise the Fall academic calender was proposed by Prof. Allan Hoffman. He pointed out that "UMass calls for school to be in essential continuous session for 10 1/2 weeks between the beginning of school and Thanksgiving and for only 3 1/2 weeks between the end of Thanksgiving and the end of classes". He moved to "study the advisability of introducing an autumnal recess into the Fall semester, so as to provide two approximately equal 7-week class sessions."

The Senate voted to give the motion space in the Calender Committee, and to refer the report until December 1, 1971.

Prof. Cadwell Ray of the Economics Dept., and Prof. William Connolly of Government moved: "to gather information about the distribution of teaching responsibilities within academic departments". Several students voiced their opinions stating that "Students are directly involved. It's his job, but it's our education."

The Senate voted in favor of the investigation.

The "Institution for Man and His Environment" issue left much to be decided. As proposed this Institution would report to the Provost's Office.

"The Institution in its first two years shall (a) Concentrate on the planning, development, and implementation of interdisciplinary education at both the undergraduate and the graduate level, and (b) develop a programmatic approach to interdisciplinary research and public service."

The motion met with opposition, especially concerning its proposed "outside funding". Senator Nitsky commented to this: "I am appauled that we should have to vote for clean air and clean water." The vote on the motion was postponed until next week.

Senator Leverne Thelen proposed a seriesof motions: "In grievance case before the University Tenure and Grievance Committee two faculty members maintain that (1) the faculty in the School of Education was being illegally denied their right to make exclusively faculty recommendations on matters of personnel and curriculum. (2) the graduate faculty in the School of Education was being illegally denied their right to make exclusively graduate curricular matters, and (3) the definition of who was faculty and who was not faculty in the School of Education was not in accord with the University regulations."

The subsequent allegations of the University Tenure and Grievance Committee were dismissed as "department matters, not matters for the Senate" by the Senate.

Also passed by the Faculty Senate yesterday was a motion from Prof. Lee Edwards: "That a Committee on the Status of Women at the University be added to the standing committees of the Senate."

Environment Groups Sponsor Folk Concert

By ED JANUSZ
MDC Staff

The CEQ in conjunction with the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution is sponsoring a benefit folk performance on Sunday, April 18 at 2:30 PM, to be held outdoors at the School of Education.

The fight over the safety of the nuclear plant at Vernon, Vt., is beginning with preliminary hearings this month. The New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, along with three states and other organizations, are building intervention cases. The Coalition has a very thorough and effective case and feels it is necessary to hold exhaustive hearings on the safety of the plant.

The plant is within a mile of two elementary schools and a high school. Quabbin Reservoir is 14 miles downstream from the plant, and the water there will undoubtedly catch radioactive particles released daily from the plant.

There is still a agreat deal of research and legal hassling to be taken care of, and the Coalition needs money to pay for it all. The folk performance on Sunday will be free, but there will be hat-passing to help cover the expenses.

There will be a large lineup of talent; definitely set are Michael Gremlich of Bernardston, Margaret MacArthur of Marlboro, Vt., Rollins and Stevenson of Putney, and Texas-born Charlie Jones.

Jones has been studying flamenco guitar for over ten years. While living in Texas, he got interested in Mexican music; he has studied in Mexico City, in Spain with flamenco masters, and has traveled across North Africa learning the endless variations of Spanish folk music from gypsies.

He looks upon flamenco as having the intensity of "Total music, a crossroads between East and West," in its unlimited room for both the classical form and for spontaneity.

A few days ago, he was working for the Vernon plant as an engineer, checking concrete specifications. "It's not necessary to shut down the power plant," he says. "I just want to see the right controls, like on the auto."

Help yourself to a fine afternoon of spring and music, and bring what you can to make this area safer to live in; the Coalition needs money desperately to put holds on the uncontrolled growth of this potentially dangerous situation.

DA Charges UMass Area Drug Center

BOSTON — Franklin-Hampshire Dist. Atty. John Callahan says that "between 25 to 50 youths in the Amherst area are making $1,000 a week each selling drugs to high school students in Northampton, Holyoke, Chicopee and Ludlow."

Callahan's disclosure came after the Legislative Committee on Counties Wednesday cut some $2,500 from his budget request for funds for a programto curtail drug traffic.

Callahan, who was elected to his first term in Novermber, said that the 22,000-student University of Massachusetts campus in Amherst is the "marketplace for the area in the sale of LSD, pills and heroin."

He said that recent incidents have been reported at high schools in cities and towns near UMass where students suffering from drug overdoses have reported the drugs were obtained from suppliers in the university area

Planned Drive

The district attorney said the money cut by the legislative committee would have been used to start a program where state officials would buy drugs from suppliers, thereby securing evidence for arrest and conviction.

In outlining the drug problem in the Franklin-Hampshire area, Callahan said arrest statistics indicate that 25 per cent of all drug abuse involves heroin

Callahan said student use of drugs at UMass is on the rise and that drug usage increases during examination period when students take large quantities of pills to stay awake.

As to drug usage in high schools in the region surrounding the university, Callahan said school officials and police are "extremely aware that the colleges, especially the university, are a source of supply for the high schools."

"In these cases, drugs know no bounds," Callahan said. "A drug user is as likely come from a stable home as he is to come from a poverty home."

"If we don't get some funds to launch a program to buy drugs and trap these pushers, then all we'll be able to do is pinch kids at pot parties," Callahan said.

State Rep. Charles Flaherty, D—Cambridge, House chairman of the committee, following the budget hearing, said that he would restore $1,700 of the sum cut from the Hampshire County budget, but claimed that the district attorney could use other funds to institute drug purchasing problems.

Raises Question

At the same time, Flaherty said he would like to know "what is wrong with cities and towns appropriating their own funds to buy drugs."

"People are yelling about the increased costs of county government, but they still come in and look for more money," Flaherty said.

As for the likelihood of state appropriations for drug purchases, Flaherty said they will not be forthcoming this year.

To Be A Foreign Student In The United States

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

Alan Lana is from Nigeria. As such he is one of 600 foreign students who have come to the United States and in particular UMass to gain knowledge and experience to take back to their native countries.

In the course of the five years he has spent in American universities first as an undergraduate at the University of Wisconsin and now as a research assistant in the department of Plant Pathology, Lana has experienced many of the problems which confront a foreign student in this country.

Among the major problems which the undergraduate foreign student faces is the undergraduate requirements which are standard in American colleges and universities. The need to fulfill liberal arts requirements before entering a major field often hinders the foreign student's desire for specific knowledge. "A foreign student who comes to America to study has only one thing in mind-to get an education in the field of his interest. He is not really interested in courses which are meant to broaden the mind; he has come to gain specialized knowledge in a field which will be of benefit to the people of his country and to the country as a whole." It is his feeling that the American graduate system, by virtue of its specialization and increased facilities provides the education which the foreign student desires.

Aside from that the other major problems which Lana sees as confronting the foreign student on campus is his inability to really get to know people. He explained that a foreign student, particularly on the graduate level is so seriously concerned with his academic work, that he does not have any real opportunities to socialize or mix with other members of the student body. He therefore sees the need for American and particularly UMass students to make attempts to come to know about foreign students through the means of simple conversation if it is at all possible. In this way an exchange of views and understandings can come about which will help to make the foreign student feel that he is a true equal part of the campus community.

Such interaction would also give foreign students the opportunity to fulfill what he considers as a responsibility of the foreign student in the course of his interaction with American students. "I feel that foreign students have a responsibility to educate Americans about their home country and customs and to dispel any prejudices or misinformation which may have been spread about the country. In that way understanding among individuals can be established which will help to ease world tensions."

While not willing to speak for all foreign students Lana expressed an admiration for the American student for their "solidarity and willingness to stick behind issues".

In speaking generally about the foreign student on the UMass campus Lana had high praise for the Foreign Student Office which he said has proven extremely helpful in informing and reminding foreign students of many rules and regulations as well as informing them of opportunities. He did express concern over the fact that an International Club does not exist on campus and stated that efforts could be made to institute an organization which would help the foreign students to become better acquainted with each other as well as to better inform the campus community about the foreign students and their respective countries.

Commenting on the United States and its various problems and policies, Lana said that in his own view President Nixon seemed to be concerned about ending the war in Vietnam but that he doubted if he would succeed. He also commented that while he felt the American Negro had a cause that he was going about it the wrong way. "Violence is not going to do anything to help the cause." Regarding Lt. Calley he stated that "if he is going to be punished the punishment should be shared by those who gave him the orders."

'Focus' Examines Anti-War Plans

This Monday at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" program will examine preparations by UMass activists for participation in the massive anti-war demonstration scheduled to take place in Washington, D.C., on April 24th. The demonstration, expected to be one of the largest ever held in Washington, will be followed by a series of organized, non-violent acts of civil disobedience in the nation's capital, should President Nixon refuse to order an immediate withdrawal of all United States military forces from Indochina.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests for Monday's live, 60-minute forum will be spokesmen from the UMass Student Mobilization Committee and the UMass Veterans for Peace, as well as a representative of the local support group for the "People's Peace Treaty," a document being circulated across the nation resolving an end to the war in Indochina.

The treaty, which will be read on Monday night's program, has been ratified by the South Vietnam National Union of Students, the North Vietnam National Union of Students, the South Vietnam Liberation Student Union, and the United States National Student Association. The UMass Student Senate recently voted to endorse the "People's Peace Treaty" and yesterday held a campus-wide referendum affording students the opportunity of ratifying or disapproving the document.

U. Mass. Area Drug Center

BOSTON—Franklin Hampshire Dist. Atty. John M. Callahan says that between "25 and 50 youths in the Amherst area are making $1,000 a week selling drugs to high school students in Northampton, Holyoke, Chicopee and Ludlow."

Callahan's disclosure came Wednesday after the legislature's Committee on Counties had cut about $2,500 from Callahan's budget request for funds which would go toward a program to cut back the drug traffic.

Callahan, who was elected to his first term last November, said that the 20,000-student University of Massachusetts campus at Amherst is the "market place in the sale of LSD, pills and heroin."

Callahan said that recent incidents have been reported in high schools in cities and towns near the university where students suffering from drug overdoses have reported the drugs were secured from suppliers in the university area.

The district attorney said the money cut by the legislative committee would have been used for state officials to purchase drugs from the suppliers, thereby procuring evidence for arrest and prosecution.

Rep. Charles Flaherty, D-Cambridge, House Chairman of the committee, said after the hearing that he would restore $1,700 of the funds cut from the Hampshire County budget but claimed that the district attorney could use other funds to institute a drug-purchasing program.

At the same time, Flaherty said he would like to know, "What is wrong with cities and towns appropriating their own money to fight drugs? People are yelling about the increased cost of county government but still they come in and ask for money, Flaherty said.

The Northwestern District received another setback Wednesday when the House rejected two bills to increase the district attorney's staff in Franklin County.

R.M. Starting Project To Help Runaways

By JEFF THOMPSON
MDC Staff

To adequately meet the needs of the runaway problem in the Franklin, Hampshire county area, the leaders of Room to Move are forming an independent project called Our House, revealed Frank Sacco, a spokesman for the group yesterday. This will be a "therapeutical community and referral service for runaways in the 14-18 age group," he said.

The idea originated since Room to Move (the drug help center) had been receiving so many runaways that come to the university for some action like drugs Sacco said.

Planning to start this Sept. 1, Our House will have approximately one half of its staff from UMass, and the project plans to have a counseling relationship with the university administration.

"Even though this is not a university program," said Bob Ross, another spokesman for the group, "Whitmore does recognize the need for this type of project, and verbally we have been well endorsed."

Our House will be a non-profit organization. A Board of Trustees will supervise the program through the project co-directors. An additional staff of four will work with the directors to facilitate groups and participate extensively with the runaways.

There is a need for six full time staff positions. Staff members will be trained in group facilitation, counseling. The staff will also be acquainted with the skills of the prospective programming: arts and crafts, sports, and agriculture.

"For education the children will either be sent to a private school, a public school, or a private institution of education that could be set up by "Our House," said Ross.

In response to a question about the type of child that Our House would get, Tom Mangan, another other spokesman, said, "A lot of the kids will have warrants already out for them on stubborn child charges. We will have two lawyers working for them."

Ross expressed anticipation of approval by the parents, who will have to give their permission for their child to be enrolled in the program. "After a child runs away once, he will continue to run away until the problem at home has been corrected. The parents will be ready to give someone else a chance to work with him."

Muskie Says Nixon 'Doesn't Care'

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP)—Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D—Maine, said Thursday the Nixon administration "doesn't seem to care what happens to the worker and his family."

"For 27 months this administration has watched millions of Americans lose the right to earn a decent living," Muskie said in a speech prepared for delivery to the Louisiana AFL—CIO convention.

"For 27 months this administration has let millions more fall on hard times because of rising costs," he said.

Muskie was the third prospective Democratic presidential candidate to attack President Nixon's economic policies in the stridently partisan speeches to the labor convention.

Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota and Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, in speeches earlier this week, also said Nixon was insensitive to working people.

Muskie said Nixon claims to "have a game plan for the economy but the only ones who can do any scoring are the bankers."

"We must tell this administration in plain language-stop playing games," the former vice-presidential candidate said.

"Stop putting all the blame for inflation on the backs of construction workers. Stop making organized labor a scapegoat for the failures of this administration."

Like Humphrey, Muskie attacked Nixon for withholding appropriated funds for such programs as public service jobs, housing and mass transit.

Muskie condemned the administration for "fighting to give business the kind of tax break business doesn't need, the economy doesn't need and we don't need."

U.Mass.-Permissive Deplorable, Disturbing

WHITMAN, Mass. (AP)—A suburban school superintendent here has attacked the students and administration of the University of Massachusetts for what he called "deplorable conduct" and "moral permissiveness" on the Amherst campus.

Dr. Harry E. Boothby, superintendent-principal of the Whitman-Hanson regional high school, told members of the regional school committee Wednesday night he had spent two days at the campus last week and found the situation "very disturbing."

University dean of students William F. Field replied in a statement Thursday that "It is a pity that Dr. Boothby mistakes individual instances of misbehavior for a general pattern of conduct."

Field added: "With nearly 20,000 students on this campus we are the size of a town and have many of the problems of a town. Our undergraduates are almost all from Massachusetts. They are the sons and daughters of 15,000 fine families in the commonwealth, and they hold the values of their parents and represent a cross-section of the citizens of Massachusetts."

Questioned about his comments Thursday, Dr.Boothby said that "I don't want to point the finger specifically there at UMass" and said the state university "is not necessarily unusual."

"Any parent who is contemplating sending youngsters to any college," he said, "should invest one day and evening to observe what's going on."

He told the school committee the night before that the university administration "earns and deserves any trouble they get from students. The operation at Amherst is of the basement variety. The conduct of students is deplorable. I am disturbed. I don't want to pay, nor do I believe others in the Commonwealth want to, tax dollars for that type of operation. I can't understand why they allow this type of operation to go on."

He told the committee, "I don't want to send my children there." On Thursday however, Boothby who has six children, said he did not mean he would definitely refuse to send any of them to the school.

"I'm old-fashioned, perhaps," Boothby said. "I may be the guy who's out of step. If I am, I'm willing to be chastised for so being."

In his statement Dean Field also said it was "unfortunate" that Boothby did not talk to the administration to find out whether the things to which he objected "are violations of the university rules and regulations and whether they are encouraged by the university.

"Such cases which can then be documented and traced can be corrected. Responsible criticism seeks correction, not sensationalism."

S.Viets Launch Drive Into Central Highlands

SAIGON (AP)—South Vietnamese troops under a U.S. air umbrella launched a drive in the central highlands Thursday against North Vietnamese forces who have been on the attack there for 15 days.

In a push through the jungle-covered mountains, the South Vietnamese were trying to track down and destroy a regiment of North Vietnamese regulars on the southern sector of the higland front.

With several fresh battalions thrown in, the South Vietnamese combat force in the highlands sector rose to 6,000-7,000 men.

They were backed up by an array of U.S. fighter-bombers, fast-firing helicopter gunships, and long-range artillery.

Opposing them were elements of four North Vietnamese regiments, estimated variously from 6,000-8,000 men and probably backed up with reserves across the border in Laos and Cambodia.

The fighting sectors stretch from 200 miles north of Saigon to about 300 miles north of the capital near the Cambodian and Laotian frontiers.

The new South Vietnamese drive was launched on the southern anchor of the front near Fire Base Lonely, one of the hilltop outposts menaced by North Vietnamese forces. Lonely is 80 miles south of Fire Base 6, where the enemy launched his offensive.

Only small skirmishing was reported as the operation got under way.

Farther north, newly arrived South Vietnamese paratroop reinforcements fought a sharp engagement for an hour near Fire Base 6 against North Vietnamese troops using flame throwers.

Saigon headquarters said North Vietnamese troops also attacked a South Vietnamese infantry position a half mile northwest of Fire Base before dawn Thursday.

Headquarters said two of the attackers were taken prisoner but reported no other casualties on either side. A force of two infantry battalions searched the area for the North Vietnamese without making contact, but reported finding bodies of 47 enemy soldiers who had been killed by air strikes and artillery fire.

From Pleiku, operating base of U.S. helicopters supporting Fire Base 6, Associated Press photographer Neal Ulevich reported that six helicopters carried out a supply mission to the base without encountering North Vietnamese fire.

Egyptian Minister In Moscow for Talks

(AP)—Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad of Egypt arrived in Moscow on Thursday for talks with Soviet leaders on the next move in the Middle East crisis.

His government has said April will be a decisive month in the Middle East and that war could break out with Israel if reasonable progress toward peace is not achieved.

Riad said before he left Cairo that the trip to Moscow was "within the framework of regular consultations" between Egypt and the Soviet Union. He reiterated that Egypt insists on Israeli withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied in the 1967 war.

"A partial withdrawal is unacceptable by Cairo because it would mean a surrender to Israel's terms," the foreign minister said.

Foreign Minister Abba Eban of Israel told the Jerusalem Post the territorial demands Israeli leaders have made are a "maximal position" for negotiation.

These demands include Israeli control over the Strait of Tiran, needed as an outlet to the Red Sea, the Golan Heights of Syria, the Gaza Strip, united Jerusalem, and demilitarization of the west bank of the Jordan River.

Eban said he thought the demands "sufficiently broad to leave room for flexibility, and not so rigid as to be ultimative."

Riots End In Face-Off After Death of 12 Year-Old

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)—The shooting of a 12-year-old boy sparked riots that ended in a face-off early Wednesday between 1,000 troops and 2,000 missile-hurling Protestants.

Paratroopers split the mob with a surprise charge and an army spokesman said eight hours after the shooting incident: "The lid's fairly tightly on."

Flaming gasoline from a homemade bomb set the clothing of four British troopers afire. The flames were extinguished quickly and the men escaped injury.

A shop was set ablaze, but troops doused the fire with water cannon.

The latest violent episode in the long Catholic-Protestant feud erupted as the Protestants were returning from their last big demonstration of the Easter weekend.

Two bursts of automatic fire rang out when the parade passed Seaforde Street, the only Roman Catholic enclave in the area. A bullet struck the boy in the leg and he was hospitalized for surgery.

Army spokesmen said three adults were slightly injured by gunfire and another was hurt in the resulting panic.

Zero Population Growth

Population Growth Threatens All

A recent publication entitled "Birth Control Handbook" from McGill University stated that "the population explosion is only a threat to the supremacy of white nations." This is contrary to fact. A "Population Profile" published by the Population Reference Bureau, indicated that the difference between high and low birth rate nations, according to demographers, is whether they are economically undeveloped or advanced. In the economically depressed regions of Adia, Africa and Latin America, which have extremely high rates of population growth, illiteracy remains very high.

Pakistan is an Asian nation with a severe population problem. According to a Pakistani family planning expert, "East Pakistan is a special crisis on a crisis subcontinent. It's got 72 million people jammed into a space just a bit larger than Arkansas, which has only 2 million..." In Pakistan, population control is a politically sensitive issue, being opposed by conservative Moslem political parties which believe that the Koran opposes any form of birth control.

David Wolfer, director of the Fertility Research Unit at London University, drew an important lesson from the recent floods in Pakistan: "Although the death toll in the tragic flood in Pakistan is on an unprecedented scale...it will, I fear, all too soon come to be seen as but the curtain raiser to an era of immense disasters...as population, and with it the complexity and interdependence of human societies grow, the margin of tolerance for even minor dislocations will be less and less and their consequesces more and more."

The poor and the near poor account for half of all unwanted births in the U.S. However, according to Paul Ehrlich and John Holdren, "fewer than one-third of the babies born in the U.S. each year belong to the poor and fewer than 20% to the non-white. Evidently the backbone of population growth in the U.S. is supplied by the parents of white Middle America, many of whom assure themselves that having a third or fourth child is reasonable because they can afford it." These writers also stated that the slightly higher birth rate among U.S. poor is more than compensated for, in terms of stress on resources and the environment, by their lower per capita impact and the fact that they comprise a relatively small fraction of the population. Reproductive rates of both whites and minorities are closely correlated with income and educational level. Affluent black couples, for instance, have slightly fewer children on the average, than do comparable white couples.

"Leading Families of America", an organization requiring each member family to have at least four children, recently claimed that six million families in the U.S. are eligible for membership. These families account for 65% of American children. According to a New York Times article, members of "Leading Families," which claim a mailing list of 160,000 families, feel that the "size of the families is nobody's business." A mother of thirteen who belonged to the organization recently revealed why she felt justified in having a large family. "Frankly, I don't advocate big families for everyone...It's all-right for us because I happen to be healthy, and I think my husband's a saint, and we have no glaring discipline problems."

In a speech given at Mount Holyoke College this January, Dr. C. Tawuber, assistant director of the U.S. Bureau of the Census, minimized the problem of population growth in the U.S. To support his contention he argued that a sizeable number of counties in the U.S. actually lost population. While statistics do in fact indicate that such shifts in population were frequent, Dr. Taeuber's speech clearly had shortcomings. If the population of the U.S. increased as a whole long enough, it would become immaterial whether or not given areas of the country once lost population. It does not matter that 74% of the population or 149.3 million people live in urban areas. The point is that every person added to the population of the U.S. would further tax the nation's and world's land and resources regardless where he or the bulk of the people lives.

A recent editorial in the Daily Hampshire Gazette further undermined Taueber's reasoning and also indicated that population density is not the sole basis for judging whether an area is overpopulated. It stated: "It is widely supposed that there is no problem so long as the population density per square mile is relatively low. The notion is demonstrable nonsense...the point to be made is that most of our country's thinly populated acreage is thinly populated for good reason. It is farm land or, to an even greater degree, arid mountainous land remote from urban centers and for the most part incapable of supporting many people." Also, many areas which were acquiring the bulk of the population shift, such as Oregon, Florida and Colorado are beginning, according to the New York Times, "to put the brakes on growth." In the words of Carroll P. Sheehan, Massachusetts Development director, "The very thing that attracts people will be lost if growth continues."

Garrett Hardin, of the University of California, has implicated overpopulation in many modern political and social problems. He has argued that the greater the population, the more remote does the citizen become from important decision and democracy becomes meaningless. Harden also believes that per capita services become costlier — not cheaper, as many believe — with greater concentration of population. Crime and disorder can also be expected to increase as the population grows.

It bocomes increasingly obvious that organizations like "Leading Families of America" perform no worthwhile service to the U.S. and the world, and in fact may be creating a life untenable for the many offspring they insist on bearing.

The next article in this series will consider the possibilities of providing food for future populations.

Ceylon Government In Control Of Rebellion

COLOMBO, Ceylon (AP)—The government appeared confident it was in control of Ceylon's 11-day-old leftist rebellion Thursday, easing its curfew over the island-nation. Colombo, the capital, returned to a semblance of normality.

In another development, reliable sources said all North Korean diplomats had been ordered out of the country, presumably in connection with the uprising.

An armed service spokesman said "There is no room for complacency yet," but only scattered clashes between the youthful rebels and government forces have been reported in the past two days.

Political analysts say it is still too early to claim the rebellion that began April 5 has been crushed, but add the government seems to have put the insurgents on the defensive, a development they said they consider significant.

The government, however, notes that although the guerrillas are avoiding contact with government forces, armed groups are roving the countryside and there have been reports of them commandering heavy vehicles.

The curfew over the country's 13 million people was shifted from 4 p.m.-4 a.m. to 6 p.m.-6 a.m.

While the war of bullets appears to be subsiding, the government stepped up its political offensive. According to reliable sources, it has ordered the entire staff of the North Korean Embassy out of the country.

Police in Colombo cordoned off the embassy. The sources said the staff of five diplomats, including Ambassador Hwang Yong Yu, would be expelled within 24 hours for alleged involvement in the insurrection.

What connection the North Koreans might have with the rebellion, sparked by so-called Che Guevarists guerrilas with Maoist sympathies is not clear.

Does Marijuana Have Cancerous Affects?

CHICAGO (AP)—Two researchers reported Tuesday that tars from marijuana smoke produce the same destructive skin changes in mice as tars from tobacco smoke.

The researchers, Drs. Raymond D. Magus and Louis S. Harris of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, Chapel Hill, cautioned, however, that their studies have not proved that marijuana causes cancer in human beings.

Their report stated, "the current growth of marijuana use has been rationalized in part by the lack of objective toxicologi data regarding such use."

"In view of the strong evidence relating tobacco inhalation and human lung cancer it seemed logical for us to compare the properties of marijuana combustion products with those of tobacco in a test system designed to indicate carcinogenic-cancer-producing-potential in mice."

They told a press conference that condensates of marijuana tars and those of tobacco tars produced indistinguishable changes in mouse skin when painted on the skin.

The sebum, or fat, secreting glands of the skin were destroyed.

This is sometimes a precancerous condition. There also was an overgrowth of skin cells in the treated area.

The researchers used 200 mice in their experiment and studied them for one week. They obtained tar from marijuana grown in Mississippi.

To be subjected to as much tar as was used in the experiment, humans would have to smoke 40 marijuana cigarettes a day, they said. Marijuana they noted, contains half as much tar as tobacco.

Chinese Army Welcomes U.S. Team

SHANGHAI (AP)—China's army, often described as ready to throw the American aggresser into the sea, gave an enthusiastic welcome Thursday night to the 15 members of the U.S. table tennis team.

Soldiers made up about 80 per cent of the 5,000 spectators who watched an exhibition match between U.S. and Chinese teams. They clapped vigorously when the Americans appeared.

The Americans got a warm welcome when they arrived in China's largest city from Peking and a meeting with Premier Chou En-lai, who said he expected more Americans would visit China soon.

A Chinese sports official said he was "very glad you have come to Shanghai" and the visit was "a sign of friendship which we hope extends to all American people."

McIntire Charged With Misuse

COLLINGSWOOD, N.J. (AP)—Dr. Carl McIntire, a fundamentalist radio preacher who has been charged in a suit with misappropriating funds of the American Council of Christian Churches that he helped found in 1941, denied Wednesday any wrongdoing.

He said the plaintiffs engaged in an ideological dispute criticizing his politics.

The suit filed in state Superior Court in Camden Tuesday demands an accounting of any funds McIntire may have received in response to solicitations in his radio broadcasts.

"The allegation of misappropriation of funds is sad and ridiculous," he said in a statement issued by his office. "All the funds have been frozen by the bank involved."

He said he made several attempts to settle the dispute, which was initiated by the council.

"Repeated efforts on our part to obtain meetings with these brethren to resolve and settle the matter in accordance with the holy scriptures were rejected," he said. "Instead they went to law against a brother. Nothing was stolen or misused."

McIntire, who has attracted national attention with his Marches for Victory in Vietnam, staged in Washington, said:

"The real problem is the ideological difference in which their group opposes the militant confrontations which have been our practice. They released a statement repudiating the marches for victory in which most of our people participate.

"If they are unwilling to meet outside of court, as we have requested, and resolve this matter as Christians, we will file a counter action."

Room To Move

All About US

(Reprinted from Smith College paper)

In violent contrast to the flourescent glare around me, the soft light of the room in front of me spoke of relaxation and humanity. And so did the sign in the window: Room to Move. I walked in.

Almost as soon as I had told Paul Goulston ('72) that I wanted to do a story on Room to Move, a boy of about sixteen who had been sitting on a couch playing with a dog announced that Room to Move helped transients "like me, right, Paul?"

I turned to Paul. "I thought you said you were a drug drop-in center." "We deal with almost any problem you can name," he admitted. "We never turn anyone away from the door. But we work primarily with drug problems."

In its information sheet, UMass's Room to Move defines itself as "...the result of community concern felt by students to help each other in an honest and caring manner. Because student drug use is such a volatile topic.

Much of the information and counseling in the past has been of an opinionated and restrictive nature. Room to Move is an effort to provide an objective, non-threatening, completely confidential way for students to obtain aid, should they need or desire it. The purpose of the drop-in center is to serve as an information, education, referral, and service center.

I was surprised that it was possible to have such a Center right on campus, in a UMass building. "Well, the Student Government gave us this spot." Paul told me. Ironically, "this spot" is none other than the former barbershop in the student-owned Student Union. "Politically, we're a very touchy issue," he continues. "There's always the danger that we won't get refunded. Right now the Administration supports us and lets us do it our way."

"How did you get started?" I asked.

"We'll be — let's see — two years old this Spring. It'll be our first year of operation, but the idea came up two years ago. Ron LaFrance and I picked five other students in the fall of '69 and organized a training program, which we used to train more students in January. We opened in April of 1970.

Naturally, I was curious as to what the training program involved. "The students learn how to deal with bad trips and other drug problems," Paul explained. "They also learn all the medical and legal aspects of the drug culture and how to train new people to work with them. The students at Room to Move are all experienced with the drug culture. That way, people involved with drugs know they won't get a moralistic lecture if they come to us with a real problem.

"We're expanding," he continued. "We hope to become a Five-College-based operation. But we're not going to force ourselves on people. What we want to do is to use our training program to train students at other colleges so that they can set up their own centers."

Room-to-Move is open 24 hous a day, except from 5-7 p.m. on weekdays and from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Sunday. There is always an answer at the phone number 545-0400. "We have an image as a crisis center," Paul said regretfully. "But besides helping with bad trips — we're a link between all the health services on campus — we do a lot of educating, in the dorms here at UMass, in local high schools, and in church youth groups. Also we have a lot of information available right here. We really want people to wander in just for the hell of it. I mean, you don't have to be on a bummer to call.

"One thing I want to make clear," he added, "is that Room to Move makes no decisions for anybody. We present the positive and negative sides to everything."

He handed me a mimeographed sheet that defined the functions of the drop-in cent

He handed me a mimeographed sheet that defined the functions of the drop-in center and told me to take a look around before I left. I took a peek into the back room which had been intriguing me all through the interview. The doorway was hung with India print curtains and the ceiling was draped with an orange parachute. The room was full of mattresses — it was a crash pad.

As I walked out the door, a small poster caught my eye:

Be not too hard
For soon he'll die
Often no wiser
Than he began.

That's Room to Move in a nutshell.

Runaway Aid

As many of you realize, the Room To Move program has become an effective and necessary feature of this campus. Instead of denying that the situation exists, this body deals realistically with drug problems. In the same vain, the leaders of Room To Move have recently proposed another project which attempts to aid in the solution of a regional problem.

The name of the new independent project is Our House and its purpose is to deal with the large number of runaways that occur every year, not only in this area but in the nation at large. This concept is an outgrowth of the fact that Room To Move is receiving a number of these runaways right now.

The details of this proposed action can be found elsewhere in the MDC and need no further elucidation here. Considering the significant amount of runaways in this area (estimated at 225 annually for the Amherst-Northampton area), the need for such an organization appears obvious. Yet it is not that simple.

In order to make the plan workable, funds will be desperately needed. Some sort of physical structure must be purchased, preferably a farm where the runaways would be able to live and grow as well as other basic living requirements.

As of the present time, there appears to be no formal fund raising structure for Our House. It is true that Butterfield House, in a responsive and admirable gesture, is sponsoring a party with the proceeds being donated to the project. This, however, is at best a small scale effort to raise the necessary finances. Perhaps if other residence halls followed the Butterfield precedent, the monetary rewards for Our House would be substantial and we would hope that this would happen. Experience, though, teaches us to be less than optimistic in this respect.

As usual, the obvious source of funds is the University administration, a group that has "well endorsed" the project. Endorsement is fine but aids little in buying property and feeding people. The University and the Board of Trustees have recently made public their awareness of their community responsibility and Our House is an obvious segment of this obligation and must not be ignored. We urge the University to give serious consideration to financially aiding the Our House project.

What's It All About?

I sort of lost myself the other night. A friend and I were just walking around talking, and after about an hour I began to get this feeling that was very unsettling. I felt sort of removed from myself and I couldn't exactly figure out just where I was seeing things from.

This doesn't happen very often, thank God. We had been talking about things that we do and what they mean to us. It began to dawn on me that nothing means very much to me. There aren't too many things that I do right now that I'd like to be still doing say ten years from now. I've never really been known for my foresight. It's practically non-existent, though I have managed to plan ahead enough to keep myself covered. And I don't even think I'm any kind of pragmatist. That is, I find it very difficult to exercise all the options available to me at one particular moment.

All of this leads me to think that I'm just going to drift from one thing to another all my life, staying in one place for a while and then moving on to another. Sometimes I get a horrible empty feeling when I think of that happening to me. But then at other times I'm sort of glad that there aren't too many external things to tie me down. I like to think that I'm sort of an internal person. There's more to me than meets the eye. This is fine as far as I'm concerned, but I often have trouble when I have to look at another person and separate the seen from the unseen. I will very often reject out of hand the efforts of other people to find something that's real for them. But this is only because it takes a lot out of a person to get to the bottom of things and distinguish the good things in life and face it, there is a lot of bullshit in life. But where does this so-called insight of mine leave me as far as other people and myself are concerned? For one thing, it's very hard for me to see why people get involved in any one thing deeply because I sense that a lot of the things that people do are just ways to find a little meaning in life for themselves. For me, it's hard to get myself really committed to anything because I can feel something behind everything.

I don't know what it is that's there. But over the last four or five months I've been able to shake the terrible lost and drifting feelings that used to drive me so crazy. I've settled down inside as it were. This hasn't made me complacent or lazy or smug or anything like that. On the surface I think it's made me a little bit skeptical of people's motives for doing things, though I cannot condemn anyone for doing what he wants to do. Sure, I may let it bother me when people get excited about things I consider to be dumb, but I can't and won't stop them from doing it, even if it hurts me in some way. I just shrug things off and go back to what I happen to be doing at the moment.

Where does this leave me as far as Everything is concerned? I don't really know. I have been known to sit down and explain the Universe out as I see it. Yet at the same time, I feel that if I understood Everything, I wouldn't be existing in the state that I am now.

So in the long run I guess this all leaves me about as confused as everyone else about the order of things. On the other hand, I can't understand how or why I get this feeling. And the real problem is that I vacillate between the two extremes, sort of like a big blob of taffy that gets stretched and squished all day long.

Income Tax Day

WASHINGTON—Yesterday was Income Tax Day. It was probably the most important joyous holiday in the United States and observed by everyone, regardless of race, creed, religion or color. While everyone paid tribute to it, few people know how Income Tax Day came about.

The father of the income tax was born on April 15, 1842, to Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Tax of Washington, D.C. His parents named him Maxwel Tax, but to his family and friends he became known as Max Tax.

Max was a bright boy and studied very hard at school. He wanted to become a doctor but his parents thought he should be an accountant. In those days you did what your parents told you to do, and so Max, at 21, became a certified public accountant.

But Max soon discovered there wasn't enough for accountants to do, and he couldn't find any people in Washington who would let him keep their books.

Every time he approached a company or an individual, he was asked "Who needs you?"

Max became embittered and he decided that someday people would rue their words. He set out to devise a plan that would make every person in the United States dependent on accountants from the day they were born until the day they died.

But how?

One day in 1862 he attended a speech given by President Abraham Lincoln on the White House lawn.

Mr. Lincoln said sadly, in one part of his speech, "You can tax some of the people all the time, and all of the people some of the time. But you can't tax all of the people all the time."

These words stuck with Max and that night he kept mulling it over in his mind. At 3 o'clock in the morning, he sat up in his bed and shouted, "Eureka!" His wife, Tina, said, "Max, what is it?"

"Tina, I think I've got it. I believe I have a way of making us rich for the rest of our lives. Lincoln needs money desperately. If we could put a levy on everyone's salary in this country, the government would have more money than it would know what to do with."

"But how would that help us Max?" Tina asked.

"The government would make this levy so complicated that only accountants would be able to figure it out. If people didn't hire us, they would go to jail."

Max went down to see President Lincoln. At first Lincoln was appalled by the idea.

"The oil lobby would never let it through," Lincoln said.

"We'll exempt oil people," Max said.

"All right," Lincoln said, "I'll buy it. And because you came up with the idea, I'll call it the Max Income Tax Plan. (The Max was later dropped because there was no room on the form.)

As Max predicted, the demand for accountants was so great after the law was passed that he became a millionaire overnight. He also was asked to lecture all over the world on his plan. England was so grateful to him that they knighted him and he has been known in the country as Sir Tax.

But unfortunately, Max was so busy lecturing, entertaining and working on other people's income taxes that he forgot to file his own. One day the IRS confiscated everything he owned and in a few weeks he was a broken, penniless, bitter man. Because his plan caused so many people so much anguish, he died without a friend in the world.

It was only after his death that a grateful government decided to pay homage to him. By presidential decree, April 15 was declared Income Tax Day, and each year on that day the secretary of the Treasury places a wreath on Max's unmarked grave.

Max Tax is long since gone, but his name is on the lips of all of us.

Maybe It Was Just The Glue

I'm not sure — maybe its the weather, maybe its the school, or maybe its the people — but lately this place doesn't seem to be all what its racked up to be.

For instance, the other day I was making one of my infrequent visits to my room — I just don't seem to be spending much time there lately. Anyway, just as I was leaving to hit yet another class, I caught a glimpse of someone tall and red-haired falling into a room down the corridor. The lighting was bad, but it looked like my roommate, so I chased after him to say "Hi", and maybe get to know him a little better.

I entered the room cautiously, sniffing an odd fragrance — I hoped I wasn't interrupting anything. There was a crowd of about ten in there, whispering things like "Wow, heavy," and "Yeah, groovy." Something really strange was going on.

One of the kids standing in the doorway, left and I got a look at the cause of the excitement. One of the more stable kids had apparently just finished building a model car, you know, the plastic kind you can build three ways, stock, custom, and drag — and they were all standing around watching him. I felt a tap on my shoulder, and another friend of mine strode in with his accomplishment — it looked good, except that the wheels were having rouble keeping on the same level. But thenthis kid's legs were having the same problem.

Someone quietly mentioned that they had to go study for an exam, and a few of the others concurred — but nobody moved to leave this show and tell. Soon we were joined others, bearing their handiwork, and before we knew it, the fever had consumed us all. One kid got together his leather work, while another brought in the things he had carved out of balsa wood. A kid with a yo-yo challenged the kid playing with a flourescent paddle-ball set. One of the kids volunteered his car for a quick run to Zayre's to look for some more model kits. So in the excitement of the moment even I perked up to go looking for toys.

Six of us marched into Zayre's, sending the pink-jacketed help into a flurry — I suppose they feared some mass shoplifting outfit had arrived from New York to go on a spree, cleaning out the place and wrecking the store manager's day. Each and every one of us were followed; but we still had enough pride to try to lose them — would you like to be seen in the toy section wearing your blue UMass jacket? I finally ended up by choosing a '46 Ford Pick-up, an easy enough kit to start with.

We arrived back, and the lounge became as busy as Santa's workshop — and just as believable. It looked as if we'd started a movement. Other parts of the dorm had heard tales of something odd going on and before long we had an audience. The smell of paint and glue was thick in the air, and there were more smiles than frowns. It was a contest of who could do the best first — but at least it gave us something to do. I forgot about my Botany test on Friday, my history paper due the next week, and my seemingly futile search for a summer job. For the first time in a long time the corridor was laughing together, having fun, getting to know each other...we really felt as if we were accomplishing something...

Letters To The Editor

Interested In People

To the Editor:

Maybe its my own fumbling way of handling things, but sometimes I get pretty irate concerning some of the artificial "rules of the game" governing male/female relationships of various categories. Women's Lib has its point: why can't people respond to one another, favorably or not, as unique individuals, rather than demanding conformity to the standard "Do's" and "Don'ts" of cultural male/female roles. I personally feel quite constrained at times about having to passively "maintain my cool" in order not to appear aggressive, a chaser, out to "trap" someone, or as if I were angling for a date (I don't even like to relate to people in that way) when all I'm interested in is a guy as a person in his own right...or in some cases as a friend with whom to discuss the male point of view. Sometimes I'm so afraid of scaring someone away by expressing too much interest, or of hurting someone by "leading them on" when all I wanted was a friendly-type relationship, that it's really really hard to be myself for fear my motivations will be misunderstood. Is it really so wrong to be interested in people as people, and to behave accordingly?

Have It Spayed

To the Editor:

According to Chinese calendar, this is the year to honor the special virtues of the dog; his qualities of love, loyalty, and forgiveness.

The problem is that we already have at least 90,000,000 dogs in the United States but we continue to breed puppies at the rate of 10,000 an hour. At this moment there are more than 15,000,000 homeless dogs. The homeless dogs suffer the most. Many people believe that a dog turned loose in an alley or in a rural area can fend for itself, but most abandoned animals die miserable deaths. They are the surplus. The surplus animals that get killed quickly are the lucky ones. The humane societies and the better city pounds use humane methods but in many places the slaughter is done with lead pipes, clubs, agonizing poison, shotguns, or obsolete gas chambers in which temperatures rise past 200 degrees.

It is all a result of breeding too many animals.

If you own a dog, have it spayed. Tag your animal with proper identification to prevent its loss. When you leave for the summer, or graduate, and won't take him with you, see that he has a home. Think ahead before getting a puppy. Can you always keep him? Will he be able to go with you when you leave the campus? Join this campaign to stop the surplus of homeless animals.

Good Vibes

To the Editor:

On April 19th, Patriots' Day, there is going to be a boogie at the Campus Pond. Flight, Armaggedon, Dave Levine and others will provide the music. There will also be movies, organic foods and good vibes, all of which will be free.

The boogie will continue as long as the people want it to because the Mayday people plan to set up a tent community at the pond area. The Mayday group intend to live by the pond until April 22nd when our car caravan leaves for Washington D.C.

Come to the boogie at the campus pond and live with us. We want to form a community that will live the same way in Washington, so let's start getting together now. We must be organized and prepared for the May actions in the capital city. Our contribution will be the actions of a united community. Through communal living, eating and playing we shall become united. Join us at the pond. We need your support. MAYDAY!

Passing A Course

To the Editor:

As the semester comes quickly and quietly crashing in our direction, it is once again time to think of the future. Not the unknown distant future outside this four year hide-a-way, but the insanely near future. For as we all know procrastination can be fatal if something is not done about it in time for the deadline. With the robins and spring come the inevitable deluge of traditional papers and exams. Yet to me, this spring is different, this being my last spring on this campus I have met a new requirement to pass a course, yes, you guessed it...a LETTER TO THE EDITOR!!

No Decision

To the Editor:

While being extremely elated by and grateful for the Collegian's coverage of Orchard Hill's current attempts to secure more meaningful administrative support of its residential college program, I feel I must correct the statement attributed to me on page one of yesterday's issue.

My decision to stay on as Master of the College has not been made. It will depend on whether or not we can secure a commitment at our next meeting with the administration, currently set for April 28.

In Your Veins

To the Editor:

A. Michael Aroian has the best reasons to go to Washington...not on April 24th, however, but on Friday April 23rd.

He has an Armenian name and Armenian blood. The same Armenian blood that was spilled, rather sloppily, by the clumsey Turks in 1915. These clumsey Turks were rather efficient. They killed...massacred, a million and a half Armenians. One half of those living at the time. This is a more thorough extermination than Hitler managed with the Jews.

A. Michael Aroian has the best reasons to go to Washington...for a demonstration before the Turkish Embassy for a resolution of the Armenian Question.

The question has not been settled. The Turks have not paid any retribution or acknowledged that they committed those atrocities in 1915 and before, when women and children were bayonetted because they Moslems.

Turkey would like to destroy what is left of Armenians, in that part of the world, but for its games playing the U.S. and Russia for all the aid possible. The situation is delicate...here is a matter for repression...the public must be informed.

A. Michael Aroian it's in your veins.

Think now.
You must go to Washington.
You have your cause.

Ending Red Tape

To the Editor:

The School of Education has come under strong criticism from many students, including myself, in the past two years concerning counseling of individual problems and courses of study. Having just returned from what I expected to be another frustrating visit to the School of Ed for help, I have re-evaluated my criticisms. I would like to extend a word of praise to two women, Carol Leslie and Maxine Rossman, in the Undergraduate Office of the School of Education. They were most helpful and concerned with my individual problem, and went to great lengths, including phone calls and memos, to help me. If other administrators and officials were as concerned and interested in helping students, much of the frustration in dealing with bureaucratic red tape could be ended.

March To Washington

He stood on the rail to face reality
and oh to be free to be free.
They cried out below
fearing the truth
That only the "lost" one did know.
Perhaps it is a better idea
That he had
Which makes us so envious, no?
Then if you're so sure and all knowing,
Why is it he smiles as he goes?

Editorial Points

The lead story in yesterday's Springfield Daily News had the headline, "UM Called Area Drug Center", and stated that Dist. Atty. John Callahan had commented that the UMass campus in Amherst was the "marketplace for the area in the sale of LSD, pills and heroin". The story went on to say that Callahan had been denied money to use to purchase drugs at the University so that it could make arrests. State Rep. Charles Flaherty,, Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Countie argued that the cities and towns should appropriate their own money for buying drugs. So fellow students, it seems you're not the only ones having trouble getting the money up.

If "Love Story" manages to win the Oscar, won't it be a blow for old-fashioned sentimentality.

For all you patriotic Americans out there, you have a new idol or perhaps an old one. Added to the traditional threesome of mom, apple pie and the proverbial girl next door is the name of the old favorite, Kate Smith. Miss Smith recently received the Freedom Foundation's Nationai Recognition Award for, among other things, "presenting wholesome entertainment". Well, you have to admit, she is WHOLEsome.

In the English village of Twyford, a phanton stripper has been appearing at night and disrobing herself to the passing motorists. Police though don't know what to charge her with if they catch her because under the law a person has to expose himself-or herself-with intent to insult a female. Isn't anyone going to stand up for men's rights?

Test of President's Abortion Statement

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif — Following is the statement by President Nixon on Abortion:

Historically, laws regulating abortion in the United States have been the province of states, not the Federal Government. That remains the situation today, as one state after another takes up this question, debates it and decides it. That is where the decisions should be made.

Partly, for that reason, I have directed that the policy on abortions at American military bases in the United States be made to correspond with the laws of the states where those basesare located. If the laws in a particular state restrict abortions, the rule at the military base hospitals are to correspond to that law.

The effect of this directive is to reverse service regulations issued last summer, which had liberalized the rules on abortions at military hospitals. The new ruling supersedes this — and has been put into effect by the Secretary of Defense.

But while this matter is being debated in state capitals, and weighed by various courts, the country has a right to know my personal views.

From personal and religious beliefs I consider abortions an unacceptable form of population control. Further, unrestricted abortion policies, or abortion on demand, I cannot square with my personal belief in the sanctity of human life — including the life of the yet unborn. For, surely, the unborn have rights also, recognized in law, recognized even in principles expounded by the United Nations.

Ours is a nation with a Judeo-Christian heritage. It is also a nation with serious social problems — problems of malnutrition, of broken homes, of poverty and of delinquency. But none of these problems justifies such a solution.

A good and generous people will not opt, in my view, for this kind of alternative to its social dilemmas. Rather, it will open its hearts and homes to the unwanted children of its own, as it has done for the unwanted millions of other lands.

Music

Butterfields Blues Band, Clean Living, Fat
Butterfield Blues Band is one of the best around and put on quite an exciting show. Clean Living and Fat are two nice added attractions. Friday night at the Cage in Amherst College, 8:30 P.M. ($)

Folk Concert
A concert to benefit the Northeast Coalition on Nuclear Pollution. It features local folk artists from Vermont and Massachusetts; Margaret Mac Arthur, Michael Gramlich, Rollins and Stevenson, Will and Sally Roberts, Jeff Whittier, Stanley Taylor, Linda Brown, and newcoming star Charles Jones.

Films

BEN—HUR (Thursday, SU Ballroom, 7:30)
The legendary spectacle. Charleton Heston plays Ben-Hur, a Roman citizen during the reign of Octavius Caesar. A well-crafted, fondly remembered film.

BLOW—UP (Saturday, SU Ballroom, 6, 8, and 10)
An inquiry into the nature of reality. David Hemmings plays a "hip" London photographer who, while taking some pictures of a quiet afternoon in a park, witnesses a murder--or does he? His search for an answer takes him through the "Mod, swinging" London of 1966. Michaelangelo Antonioni's first-English language film is tightly-controlled and most intriguing with appropriately passive performances by Hemmings and Vannessa Redgrave.

CITIZEN KANE (Talkie, Northampton)
Considered by many leading film critics as the best film ever in American cinema. Easily one of the most legendary and sensational films ever made and a brilliant "tour de force" for its director and star Orson Welles. It's a fictional recreation of the career of newspaper magnate William Randolph Hearst with Welles playing the enigmatic Kane.

COOL HAND LUKE Friday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30 and 10)
Paul Newman in a fine comedy-drama about a chain gang member who faces unjust and sadistic authority. Very well done with excellent performances from Newman, George Kennedy, and Jo Van Fleet.

FRANKENSTEIN (Friday, Campus Cinemas, 11)
The original version of Mary Perce Shelley's romance about a doctor who creates a monster. Boris Karloff plays Frankenstein's monster.

FRANKENSTEIN MEETS THE WOLF MAN (Friday and Saturday, Hampden Dining Commons, SW, 9:30)
With the success of the original, came its many sequals. This one came from the early forties and featured Lon Chaney and Bela Lugosi. It's very typical with the only interesting thing being perhaps the ingeneous way scriptwriters kept reviving the monsters.

THE GOOD, THE BAD, AND THE UGLY (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
The best of the Sergio Leone western. An epic look at the old West that is most stunning to look at. The cinematography and music are a cut above most Westerns and make this one well worth seeing. The long and rambling plot follows the exploits of three men, Clint Eastwood, Lee Van Cleef, and Eli Wallach, before and during the American Civil War. A long and exciting film.

THE GREAT WHITE HOPE (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A fictional account of the tragic boxing career of Jack Johnson, a black man who held the world title during the early part of the century and suffered much abuse because he did. James Earl Jones and Jane Alexander give two of the best performances of last year and save this film that suffers from script and direction problems.

HOUR OF THE WOLF (Tuesday, Mahar Auditorium, 8 and 10)
A horror film by Igmar Bergman. Not his best.

HOUSE OF WAX (Friday and Saturday, Hampden Dining Commons, SW, 7:30)
One of the first three-dimensional films made by Warner Brothers in the early Fifties and as such is filled with objects, such as falling buildings and all sorts of phallic-shaped objects, projected out at the audience. Aside from that technical note, the film is a fairly well-done, horror film about a man who suffers the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune and is left most bitter because of it. Vincent Price stars with Phyllis Kirk as the leading ingenue.

IKIRU (Living)—Friday, Thompson 102
This 1952 Japanese film is perhaps Kurasawa's most poignant statement about the meaning of life.

LAST SUMMER (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith, 7:30 and 9:30)
Frank and Eleanor Perry's frightening and stunning look at adolescene. Four rich and bored youths spending the summer on Fire Island explore the nature of cruelty, finally exploding in the savage rape of the plain and introverted girl in the group. Some taut direction and an ensemble of four, excellent, young performers (including Cathy Burns and Barbara Hershey) make this one of the best films made about youth.

KING KONG (Saturday, Merrill Science Center, 8 and 10)
A great film. The story about a giant ape captured and brought to New York where he excapes and wreaks havoc. It's one of the most exciting films of the Thirties with special effects of the highest order.

LITTLE BIG MAN (Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Oscars to the contrary, the best film of the year. A lyrical and rambling allegory about the nature of man. Dustin Hoffman is a white man brought up by an Indian tribe, the Human Beings, and is named by them Little Big Man. He alternates throughout between the White and Indian society, he's caught between them, in a series of both funny and horrifying events. Arthur Penn directed this highly successful adaptation of a most difficult novel. Hoffman is excellent but is outshone by Chief Dan George, who in a supporting role gives the finest performance in an American film of recent memory.

LOVE STORY (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
How can you take it seriously?

THREESOME (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Another European sex import. "One's impossible, two is dreary, three is company, safe and cheery."

WATERLOO (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Isn't bad a spectacle, otherwise it's "Kitsch" of the highest order. Rod Steiger plays Napoleon as if his middle aged paunch was beginning to get him down. Christopher Plummer plays his rival Wellington with the kind of nonchallante boredom that will put you asleep. Sergei Bondarchuk directs the battle scenes with authority and makes them the best part of the film.

WUTHERING HEIGHTS (Amherst Cinema, Amherst; Academy of Music, Northampton)
American--International Pictures new version of the Emily Bronte novel isn't too bad at all, but may leave you wanting for the original Olivier film.

UT's production of Shaw's comedy is well-done and highly recommended. The comedy is about a young woman, Barbara Undershaft who becomes a Major in the Salvation Army. Poetry

The poetry festival that attracted such a great response last year as a unique and timely event is being repeated. From Tuesday through Saturday of next week, many of the most acclaimed of last year's guests, plus more of the greatest poets of our time and an abundance of local talent, will be reading at UMass again.

There will be three programs every day, at 12:10, 4:15, and 8:45. All are in Mahar except the last two Wednesday events which will be on the south steps of the Campus Center, weather permitting.

Tuesday starts off with C.K. Williams as featured poet, with shorter readings by Sonia Sanchez and Thomas O'Leary. The second reading features Miss Sanchez, one of the most distinguished Black poets, with William Stafford, Sydney Campbell, and Amos Moore. At night another Black poet, Michael Harper, will read with William Stafford, who like many of the guests has been a longtime peace activist and had served four years in confinement as a conscientious objector.

Wednesday afternoon presents George Starbuck with Ray Amorosi and a shorter appearance by Michael Harper. Outside at 4:15 are Alan Dugan and Irish poet Thomas Kinsella with John Ashberry and Barbara Winder. The day closes with John Ashberry and David Kherdian, outside again, plus Bill Tremblay and Thomas Kinsella.

Bill Knott 1940-66 headlines Thursday's first program, supported by Elizabeth Gross and Seamus Heaney. Mr. Heaney, another of three distinguished Irishmen at the festival, returns for a longer reading at 4:15 with J.D. Reed and Bill Hassan. At night, Robert Creeley returns to UMass; he is a New Englander who has been active in the Black Mountain Movement and who appeared in last year's series of readings. Appearing with Creeley are Mary Ellen Solt, Richard Murphy, and Joe Sheffler.

Robert Bly, one of the biggest hits of last year's festival, is also returning, giving a long reading on Friday at 12:10. Bly is another longtime head of the peace movement and was the National Book Award winner in 1968, an award which he gave to the Resistance Movement. Appearing with him are Giuliana Mutti and Bill Knott 1940-66.

At 4:15, Richard Murphy, another Irish poet, reads with short appearances by Robert Bly, William Mailler, and Richard Wilbur, who is the highlight of the night event. Mr. Wilbur is an Amherst grad and a winner of the Pulitzer Prize and the National Book Award, and will read with George Starbuck, Denise Levertov, and McKinley Moore.

Saturday, the final day of this second UMass Spring Poetry Festival, starts off with Denise Levertov, one of the most famous political activists in the world of the arts. She will read at 12:10 with Johari Amini and Stephen Herman.

Peter Trencher and Tom McKitterick, both Amherst College Students, rehearse a scene from Israel Horovitz's new play HERO, which will have it's world premiere next week by the Stone Theater Group.

Straight Shooting From Breslin

THE GANG THAT COULD'T SHOOT STRAIGHT, Bantam $1.25

Where I come from you don't worry about titles. None of this remembering who is mister and who doctor and who professor. People have titles, you just don't worry about them.

There's Leonard. He's my father and he sells cars. "A used car's a used car," he says, "and our cars are well used."

I once saw him sell a car to a blind man. Running his hand along the fenders, kicking the tire, the customer said to his wife, "I don't know, honey, it feels like a good car."

Every once in a while Marty the Meatman comes by. Sometimes he buys cars. Sometimes he brings in New York sirloin or filet mignon from his meat truck and they barter over it. "Sure feels like fifteen pounds, Leonard," he says and settles for ten.

Marty the Meatman might be one of the all time best car customers there are. He'd bought thirteen cars from Leonard last time I checked. He ought to have been a freak. He once bought a 61 Karman Ghia for $150 then didn't like the color so painted it orange. With house paing. Then drove it to California and back and sold it. Didn't say how much he got. Then got off his truck one day and told Leonard he'd sold him a bad car.

Across the street Carlo the Barber sits in his chair, waiting for business. He lives in a tiny room in the back and occasionally looks at his clarinet. Went to Italy in the Thirties to become a musician. Came back a barber and things have been going like that ever since.

In the afternoons Marty the Mailman comes around with the day's mail. Maybe, too, some tips on the stock market. He once recommended a Canadian gold mining company. He and Leonard don't talk about it anymore.

One day a customer brought his brother-in-law to the lot. We got to talking and he was the first black official to the international from his, the country's largest, local. His company had tried to get him into management now that the union wanted him. Freak them, he said. BA in business from the state university and fifteen years with the company and they call him the Rooster because he works in a Kentucky Fried Chicken shop nights.

When you're city people out in a country place like this, you feel a special affinity for other city people. I recently met some; picked up THE GANG THAT COULD'T SHOOT STRAIGHT by Jimmy Breslin.

Breslin's people have titles too. There's Kid Sally Palumbo and Big Mama, Benny the Bug and the Water Buffalo, Big Jelly and Tony the Indian. They don't sell cars. They're in the mafia.

They also don't know up from down; they don't know how to kill or even how to stay alive. And they are even funnier sometimes than Marty the Mailman when he puts his feet on the desk and pulls the dog's tail and starts to tell his stories. Because you sense that Breslin is a Marty, the kind of guy you'd want to keep buying beers for and listening to all afternoon and all night.

Breslin is city people and understands where he lives. He is in New York where everyone is antagonizing everyone else, and yet he can say that "both sides live together and apart and they hate each other in a way which only people who are the same will not admit it always hate each other."

If he hung around Leonard's he'd be Jimmy the Genius.

An Expression Of Black Spirit

Replies To Notes From Yale: 1996

By Duane Jacobs, Jr.

To the Editor:

As a resident of Crestdale and member of "the Nobility" here at Yale, I must reply to Harlan Haydens' recent article in "the Yearling"*". He has given a grossly distorted view of Crestdale, our neighboring town New Nairobi, and "the Nobility".

In the second paragraph of his treatise he said, "I think the main reason for the creation of these communities was to be in the position to say to whites, "See, we can do it too." This is a lie because the planning document issued by the Black American New Communities Organization (BANCO) states specifically on page 15:

1) For the first time in the North, we want to provide for our people an alternative to a depressing ghetto or oppressive lily-white suburb.

2) For the first time the Northern Black man will control his own schools, police and things of that ilk.

3) For the first time in the North we will be able to see if Black capitalism will work on a large scale. All of the stores and shops in the town or towns will be owned and operated by blacks.

Mr. Hayden blithely ignored the true objectives of the communities and chose to insert his own capricious reasons for the creation of the towns. This erroneous presumption was compounded with the statement that "(Crestdale and New Nairobi) are very much like the Jewish ghettoes on Long Island or outside of Boston". Why did he not continue his analogies? He deliberately neglected that well-to-do black people also have several communities of this sort. Albeit I can understand the reasons for his bitter sentiments regarding Crestdale, there is no excuse for careless accusations such as those that I have just cited. Due to my experiences, I can truthfully say that Crestdale is a wonderful community to grow up in.

I have lived on King Lane in the south-central section of town for fifteen years. King Lane, Rockledge Street, Eastmeadow Street and Rocky Hill Lane-North, South and West are dubbed CO-OPIA PARK. This is because all of the buildings on these streets are thirty to forty story cooperative apartment houses. I didn't mind. Despite the fact that it is the most densely populated section of the town, I had plenty of room to enjoy myself and play with friends. Around each apartment building there is a large play area with dozens of trees. We were even allowed to build clubhouses and had a large baseball field. There was a big swimming pool for kids over 13 (and kids over 30 occasionally) and a wading pool for those under 13. In school I worked hard and when I finished my homework I always played hard. Since the school authorities based everything on ones' test marks I must say that I, and no doubt my classmates as well felt pressured and tried to do our best. I did all of my work and got the high grades not only because of the fear of failure, but also knowledge of the life of my ancestors in this country. The knowledge that for centuries my people were forced to labor for others until exhaustion or death made me feel that the least I could do was to work as hard as I could for myself. I sincerely believe, but have no way of knowing for certain that this is the main reason for the competitiveness in the Crestdale and New Nairobi schools. After school I used to spend an additional two hours each day in the South Central Crestdale Black Cultural Center. This is where my knowledge of Black history was supplemented. It can be argued that we were "conditioned" there to work harder, but without a doubt, the purpose of it was simply to tell us about our heritage.

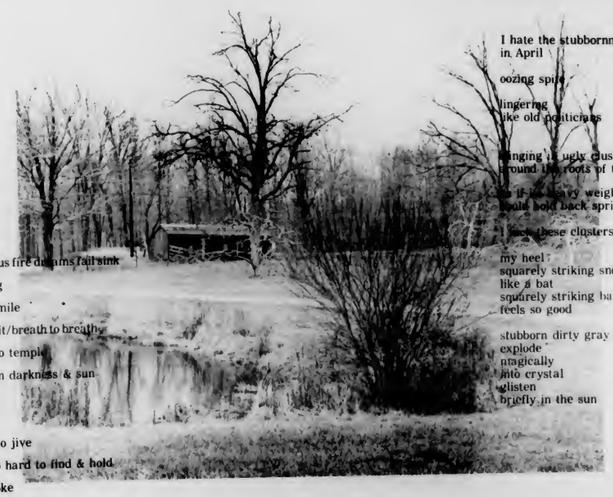
The most disturbing aspect of my background is the fact that I went to school with only well-to-do blacks, went to summer camp with only well-to-do blacks, and never had a chance to get to know:

1) what whites are like

2) how the poorer blacks live

The second peeve was really absurd. When we spoke about the condition of the Black man in America today in the cultural center, the instructor spoke as if all blacks lived like we did. She spoke as if black poverty (if poverty can be discussed in racial terms) disappeared when television series such as "Julia" (the 1960's), "The Brown Family" (the 1970's) and "The Ladies of Selfridge Park", (the 1980's) which depicted blacks as just plain folks appeared. However, there is no doubt that flaws such as these can and will be corrected. Fortunately, a sizeable number of Crestdalers and New Nairobians have attended colleges and universities are returning to their home towns to rectify the situation. I have heard that in towns such as Harlem, Bedford-Stuyvesant and other large urban black ghettoes, the youth are returning to improve the housing and schools. This is one of the aims of "the Nobility". One of its' bylaws states:

> The primary aim of members of "the Nobility" shall be to return to the place of our youth, so that we may help it grow and flourish. In order to do this, we must equip ourselves as well as possible with the tools for survival in this society.



Regrettably, the organization has become very exclusive. At first, any black college student who wanted to could join. However, it has decided that those who fall below the 50th percentile in their class (in any college or university) or who does not come from one of the "Big Five" black communities, (Crestdale, New Nairobi, New Rochelle, Shaker Heights, Bethesda-Chevy Chase) will not be qualified to enter a black community with the skill to improve it. By doing this, the leaders were saying in effect, "One who is not in the Nirvana (top half of ones' class) and is not a resident of one of the Brahmin (Big Five) communities is not and shall never be equipped to help his people".

I am cognizant of the fact that many reforms are needed in "the Nobility". The best way to bring about these reforms is to work within it, not denegrate it in public. The Nobility should not be scrapped entirely because it has done a great deal. For example: 1) Several thousand members volunteered to work in the place of migrant workers' children during their vacations one year (including summer), so the children could attend a special school program and have dental and medical checkups. The families were given all of the money the students earned. This was the impetus for the creation of hundreds of similar programs set up by college students across the country. 2) Members of the Nobility decided that there was a dire need for another black publishing house. They pooled their resources and have set up "Noble Publishers, Incorporated". As a result of this, the number of books written by black authors has increased twofold. There are many other reasons for retaining the Nobility, however, I believe the two I have just mentioned are ample proof that it is a positive force.

To sum things up. Crestdale, I must admit, is an odd place. On the surface, there is cold astringency. Beneath it there lies warmth, beauty and hope. This is why many of us love her.

The Stubborness of Snow

I hate the stubbornness of snow in April oozing spite lingering like old politicians clinging it ugly clusters around the roots of trees as if its age's weight could hold back spring
I kick these clusters when I can my heel squarely striking snow like a bat squarely striking ball feels so good stubborn dirty gray lumps explode
magically into crystal glisten briefly in the sun

April 24th

In darkness empty madness furious fire dreams fail sink
In arms empty madness craving
Where once in night's ancient smile
We lied as a fusion of spirit to spirit/breath to breath
Forehead arms cheeks temple to temple
Our bodies/temples/worshiped in darkness & sun
By eyes lips & each caress
Complete African canvas
No T.V. shadow guide no time to jive
Pure soul impression/woman/so hard to find & hold
But by inches time our love broke
Our completeness aged &
Turns as the seasons warmth cast & then storms
Whirling images/memories touch senses yr fleeting
Steps to & fro/yr body motions melts into darkness/
Space lost
Causing eyeballs to bleed
Your heart my mecca polished
& u whom I love

Stand now alone in darkness madness/sanctuary

DVP To Sponsor Dr. George Wiley

On Wednesday, April 21st the DVP is sponsoring the visit of Dr. George Wiley, Executive Director of the National Welfare Rights Organization. Dr. Wiley will be speaking at 8 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium with a coffee hour following. Rap session on the same day from 4:30-5:30 in the Coffee Shop at the Black Cultural Center. This energetic activist and his organization have been fighting all over the country for improvements for welfare recipients such as school clothing for children, legal protection, utility money, a reasonable minimum income, etc. More recently the organization has joined forces with others in the War Against Repression. Since these problems are of extreme importance to us in the black community hearing Dr. Wiley would seem to be a must.

Watch next week for information concerning the coming visit of Muhammed Ali.

Chinese Actions Puzzle Moscow Far East Experts

Under the towering spire of the massive Stalinesque Foreign Ministry building in Moscow, experts of the far east division must be biting their nails, wondering what sort of devilment is being cooked up in China. Are those Peking "revisionists" planning some sort of Great Leap Forward in foreign policy?

The Chinese are smiling at Americans and suddenly presenting an amiable image to the outside world. To Soviet experts that must surely spell some sort of bad news.

It isn't necessarily good news for the U.S. government, for that matter. The regime thus far is smiling only upon table tennis players and the few correspondents permitted to accompany them on their unexpected tour into Red China. The reason behind all this is far from clear. There has been no indication of smiles on the official level nor of any softening of Peking's attitude toward Washington.

It sounds like bad news to the Russians, however, because they are as suspicious of a Peking approach to the United States as the Chinese have been of a Russian approach in the same direction. The two one-time Communist allies, now accustomed to calling each other bad names, often accuse one another of shining up to the "American imperialists."

A China relatively isolated from much of the outside world had been troublesome for Moscow, notably in the field of ideology and in impact on the extreme left.

It remains to be seen what Peking does next.

Is China about to woo Washington actively? Is the table tennis thing just a curtain raiser? The answer for the time being is probably "no." But the Chinese probably would just as soon let the Russians stew about it.

The regime, as AP correspondent John Roderick noted, seems relaxed and confident of itself, now that the nationwide purge and upheaval called the cultural revolution has faded into the past. It can enjoy the luxury of taunting both the Russians and the U.S. administration. Its gestures can be defended ideologically as aimed at "people," rather than governments.

Peking makes a sharp distinction. It commits itself to nothing, and yet it is in a position to reach for dividends from all this, should the opportunity present itself.

Netmen Host Yellow Jackets Face Tough Road Next Week

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

Tennis is a spring sport, and spring means nice weather. Tell the tennis team that. Having their third straight match postponed in a matter of one week, the netmen are beginning to wonder if winter will leave them alone and let them get back to their business.
UMass was scheduled to face Amherst yesterday afternoon, but Amherst called it off due to cold weather and ferocious winds. The match has been moved up to next Tuesday which makes the tennis team's schedule a little bit tighter.
Starting this afternoon the netmen begin an eight day period that will include five matches. A.I.C. will visit the UMass campus this afternoon for a 3:00 match. Their team is a traditionally poor one, and they won't be showing up with too much talent today.
Last week A.I.C. was whitewashed by UConn 9-0, and Coach Kosakowski will not be playing three of his top men, resting them for the four matches next week.
On Monday afternoon, UMass will host its third consecutive match, this time the opposition will be Tufts. Tufts boasts a better squad then both B.C. and A.I.C., the two opponents that UMass will have had to practice up on. But Tufts should be little trouble for the Redmen if they are on their game.
The long week begins with Amherst, and the time of the match will still be 3 p.m. This afternoon's match and Monday's contest should give the netmen a clearer view of how they will fare against Amherst. Both of the weekend matches should spell "win" for UMass as they prepare themselves for two of their toughest contests against Amherst and MIT on Tuesday and Wednesday.
Coach Kosakowski will be going with the same lineup as he, too, is more than annoyed at how things have been going weather-wise. Last season the tennis team had four of their scheduled 12 matches rained out and if things don't clear up soon UMass could find themselves with a few more than four cancellations.
Possibly the only positive thing coming out of yesterday's postponement was the rest that will be afforded to the ailing hand of Alan Golberg, a key factor if UMass is to upend Amherst and MIT. But otherwise the players are getting impatient, putting up with the tremendous winds of UMass in preparation for the heavy schedule of matches in the weeks ahead.

Ruggers Play Strong Trio

The UMass ruggers play three games this weekend, trying to bolster the record, which, after last weekend's loses to Mystic River R.F.C., read UMass A's, 1-1, B's, 1-1, and C's, 1-0.
Tomorrow at 2:30, at Arcanum Field, Northampton, the UMass C team takes on the B team from perennially strong Providence R.F.C.
On Sunday, beginning at 1:00 on the rugby field west of Boyden, UMass first and second XV's host Holy Cross College in what should be two strong games between evenly matched teams.
Last fall UMass and Holy Cross split a pair of games. The UMass A's dropped a close one, 8-3. The UMass seconds trounced the Cross, 18-3.
Also on Sunday afternoon, a rugby clinic will be held at UMass for the benefit of the several teams in the Pioneer Valley.
Last weekend's outing against Mystic resulted in two losses for UMass, first XV, 13-3, and second XV, 11-8. In both tilts UMass played sound and strong rugby against very potent and experienced Mystic sides.
At halftime in the first game, UMass and Mystic were tied at 3-3, but early breakaway tries for Mystic iced the game, despite a strong UMass rush in the waning minutes of the game.
Mark Chenowath played his normal superb game, but generally UMass was flat, perhaps psyched out by Mystic's reputation.
In the B game, early tries left UMass down 11-0 at the half. A second half surge on scores by Jim Clapper and Dave Culver fell short as time ran out. On the basis of their play, in the B game, Clapper, Culver, Bill Kesgen and Craig Lovell will probably play on the first SV against Holy Cross.
The next two weeks will feature a great deal of rugby at UMass for all three sides. The club welcomes any and all spectators and any willing players. Practices are held on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at 4:30 p.m. at the rugby field west of Boyden.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn can work with time; where "comebacks" are concerned, natives of this sign excel. You may put a Capricorn down, but it is next to impossible to score a knockout. Capricorn can take adversity because these people keep a constant eye to the future. The potential of most natives of this sign is tremendous. Some famous persons born under Capricorn include Richard Nixon, Muhammad Ali and Marlene Dietrich.
ARIES (March 21-April 19): You gain through versatile approach. Have alternative methods at hand. One who laughs much may be crying on inside. Realize this and make intelligent concessions. Promotion is due.
TAURUS (April 20 May 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with spiritual development, greater self-understanding. You are able to more clearly define actual desires. Separate needs from wishful thinking.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): To one who is active, animated may attempt to embarrass you with questions. Maintain poise. Money situation will be resolved. Refuse to be intimidated. You have plenty on your side.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Trust facts now rather than hunches. Stick to what you know. Steer clear of legal entanglements. Seek expert advice. Don't attempt to be your own lawyer. Be open to various viewpoints.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Give attention to facts — don't neglect what might appear to be a minor matter. Check your own medical-dental appointments. One you associate with is due to ask special favor.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Children demand attention. Time for some basic changes: don't permit yourself to be trapped in emotional rut. Nothing halfway now — all the way or nothing. Message will be clear.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent on completing projects. Price may now be set on property — be aware of actual value. Family member should be taken into confidence. Avoid one who is careless with details.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Stress greater independence, originality. Key to success now is versatility, humor. Be flexible. Visiting relative will come up with pleasant surprise. Check messages.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Lunar cycle is at peak; what you want is obtainable. Key is to ask, experiment. You come alive. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Ignore one who is constantly gloomy.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): There are obstacles. Some, however, can actually prove beneficial. You can ask and receive favor from Leo individual. A setback is due to boomerang in your favor. Act accordingly.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent on how to gain what you desire. There are changes and aid from opposite sex. One who appeared indifferent does a turnabout. You are gratified by added attention.
IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, spriritual. You surprise many because what you are is generally hidden. What you appear to be, very often, is brash. In actuality, you are sensitive, knowing. You have come through an emotional pressure cooker period; now, you emerge whole. June will be the most significant month of this year for you.

Sextet Runs Marathon

Running 80-100 miles a week for the last three months, including a 20-25 miler on Sundays, a strong group of UMass runners are primed to run their best times in the 75th annual Boston Marathon on Monday.
Heading the group will be Tom Derderian, who will be competing in his fourth Hopkinton to Boston run. He placed 31st in last years record setting field of 1000 with a time of 2:29.57. Chris Chambers, the only new comer to the UMass six, will be running with Bob Sullivan and Tom Jasmin, all attempting to get under the 2:40 mark for the first time. Dave Eiben and Joel Fox, both entered in their third Boston jaunt, are both ready to break the magic three hour barrier.
The runners, training mostly together, have at times covered distances as far away as Wendell, East Dudley, and climbed across the top of the Holyoke range, leaving from the Cage. In the last few weeks the runners have been getting used to race competition by entering various road races. Derderian's sixth place finish at New York's Earth Day Marathon and Chambers 11th place at Wellesley's 10 miler were the top performances.
Derderian, speaking for this years addition of UMass marathoners said: "We all hope for an overcast, sort of misty day. Like the dawn of creation. Enough to keep the runners cool but good enough to still bring out the 325,000 spectators."
This year's field of 1000 runners leaves the Hopkinton Green at 12 noon with a reward of beef stew awaiting the finishers at the Prudential Center in Boston. Two runners from Finland and Ireland's Pat McMahon are favored to battle for individual honors.

If Wednesday's ice box weather was not enough to keep Redman fans away from the UMass-UConn baseball game, the University of Vermont has found the perfect deterrant for its fans.

Just add together below freezing temperatures, howling winds rolling in across the tundra and a couple of feet of snow surrounding the ball park and the little men in the white jackets will be waiting to apprehend Catamount baseball fans who find this to be baseball weather

Barring these "minor" distractions, the UMass baseball team will be in Burlington over this weekend for a doubleheader tomorrow and a single game on Sunday against the Vermont nine.

Assuming that his Redmen will be playing in flannel pajama country, coach Dick Bergquist was very enthused about playing three games in two days. "This is something new for us and I'm all for it. By the third game on Sunday, we'll find out which team has the pitching.

"I hope this (pitching) will be a strong point for us. I feel we have as deep a pitching staff as anyone in New England has." In series of this kind the team with the pitching has come out on top most of the time.

In Vermont the Redmen will be facing a team that emphasizes the running game. The Catamounts will steal, bunt and hit and run. Last season they stole 34 bases in 24 games which means speed in any league.

On its southern trip Vermont was 4-4 including an extra inning loss to Northwestern from the Big Ten. During the trip the Catamounts hit .35 which means trouble for any pitching staff.

The heart of the Vermont lineup features two All-Yankee Conference choices last season. George Minarsky batted .294 last year and is playing second base. He played center field in earning all-league honors.

Don Robinson, who was also chosen All-District One, led Vermont at the plate last year, hitting .303.

On the mound Vermont has one veteran, George Smith and a group of six new pitchers, making the staff rather unknown going into the weekend.

Smith won half of his team's games last year (5) and posted an excellent 2.47 earned run average. He'll probably get the most support from freshman James Endres who was a major league draft pick last spring.

Bergquist has chosen Tom White to pitch the first game tomorrow. The sophomore lefthander was very impressive in striking out eight batters in three innings at A.I.C.

Depending upon White's performance (whether he needs relief or not) the starting assignment will go to either John Olsen, Chip Baye or Jack Bernardo. In both games Lou Colabello and Tom Austin will be ready for relief stints.

On Sunday Tom King will start. He's coming off a great performance against UConn and has been one of the hottest hurlers in New England this season.

Bergquist will be going with the same lineup that started versus

UConn. From here he will make changes if needed.

Tom McDermott will be behind the plate with Dan Esposito, Jack Conroy, Ed McMahon and Mark Palau in the infield and Mike Sawyer, Charlie Manley and Brian Martin in the outfield.

DIAMOND DUST — Ron Beaurivage, a 6'2, 195 pound first baseman from Manchester, N.H. has signed a letter of intent to come to UMass in the fall. He is one of the leading prospects in New England and coach Bergquist will be waiting anxiously during the summer when the major league draft comes up to see if he goes pro or comes to UMass.

Gorillas Under Lights Play Tufts Tomorrow

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

Returning from the wintry land of Middlebury, Vermont with victory number one well in hand, the UMass lacrosse team will be up against two more physical teams in tonight's exhibition game, and tomorrow's afternoon contest at Tufts.

This evening's 7 p.m. game will feature the Boston Lacrosse Club, a squad composed of former college players in and around the Boston area. Playing under the lights across from Boyden gym, the exhibition game will feature another physically oriented team, much like that of Middlebury.

Bill DeVore, UMass' lacrosse captain of one year ago, will join Steve Connolly and Steve Anderson (both of whom were on Garber's 1969 squad) in representing the UMass alumni tonight.

The Boston Lacrosse Club will also feature a former All-American attackman, a Princeton graduate, and he will provide most of the scoring punch for the visitors.

In playing a 14 game schedule, the Boston club likes to bring down a good squad to UMass, and the 7 p.m. battle will be more than a warmup for the Tufts contest tomorrow.

Tufts University is where Garber's Gorilla's will be seeking their second victory away from home. On Wednesday Amherst hosted the Tufts team, and after observing the game Coach Garber commented, "This is the best team that I've seen come out of Tufts in quite a few years."

Despite losing to Amherst by 7-2 score, Tufts impressed Garber. While trailing by 4-1 at halftime the UMass coach viewed the game as an even one, with both clubs getting off about the same number of shots. The difference was that Amherst found the pipe a few times, and Tufts muffed a number of easy chances.

Tufts' attack looked sharp, but their defense is more likely to bother the Redmen. The team is a big one, and since this is the third physical team that UMass will be facing in as many days, undoubtably their defenseman's rough and tough style will slow down the Redmen.

Thus far MIT and Amherst have been victorious in clashes with Tufts, with the former conquering by 15-9. Tomorrow's hosts have chalked up their only win of the season against the Boston Lacrosse Club by a 9-4 mark, thus tonight's outcome should be a good gauge as to UMass' chances tomorrow afternoon.

On Sunday morning 32 varsity lacrosse players will be feeling the effects of three brawny ballclubs. Their excellent speed and fine stick-handling ability will most likely carry them through two victories this weekend, and Sunday morning aches will feel well worth the battles.

Golfers Open Today

By AL WRIGHT
MDC Staff

The sun will be shining at Hickory Ridge Country Club this afternoon as UMass' current crop of varsity linksters tee off at one o'clock against Vermont. They will be defending their Yankee Conference Crown captured one year ago.

Coach Dick Page, who doubles as Boyden's Sports Information Director, believes that the seniors will hold the key to the success of the Redmen Golf Team this spring as six players will be closing out their undergraduate careers.

"Ed Puzas, Dave Salter, Mike Minkos, Dick King and Don Langeven were all regulars a year ago. Art Cicconi, a transfer from Oklahoma is capable of making a real contribution to the team if he plays to his handicap. Juniors Rick Toule and John Kul have the ability to play in the top half of the regular lineup while sophomores Jim Methe and Dave Aitkenhead were the top players for the frosh a year ago and will be ready to step into the lineup if the upperclassmen falter.

The overall depth and experience is the best it has been in the past five years and the Redmen are out to prove that their first place finish in the Conference Championships a year ago was no fluke."

The strong winds of the past few days have proven detrimental to the team's recent practice sessions, but regardless, this year's team doesn't lack experience in varied playing conditions. On their home course in Amherst, this strong UMass golf squad should take care of Vermont and then their seasoned readiness will be tested again in another conference meet on Monday versus New Hampshire.

Tracksters Rip Holy Cross; Compete Tomorrow At B.C. Relays

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The UMass track team raised its record to 2-1 Wednesday as they dropped Holy Cross 82 1/2 to 66 1/2. The victory was paced by captains Eddie Arcaro and Gerry Spellman who each won two events. Rocco Petitto continued to excel as he shattered the school record in the javelin with a throw of 201'5".

The throwing events again provided the impetus for victory as all four events were won by Redmen. Arcaro claimed his second double victory with victories in the shotput and the hammer. Petitto's record performance in the javelin led a sweep in the event for the second meet in a row. Peter Natti coming back from a disappointing performance Saturday responded with a first place finish in the discus.

Gerry Spellman, recovering from blood poisoning and the flu, dominated the hurdle events. He took first place in the 440 yard intermediate hurdles and the 120 high hurdles. Spellman's effort in the 120 highs led the team to its second sweep of the afternoon.

Ron Wayne, recovering from the flu, made a successful return as he won the mile with a strong kick in the last quarter. Ron Harris won his second 220 race in as many meets. John Kamb was the winner in the pole vault on fewer misses. The long jump saw Rip Dyer win his first event of the short season.

The team will be traveling to Boston tomorrow for the Boston College Relays. It will be the team's first major test of the year involving New England competition. UMass will be competing with the objective of winning the meet. Northeastern and UConn are strong, but this may be the year that the resurgent Redmen come out on top. UMass could be the number one team in New England come Saturday.

The Redmen are especially strong in the throwing events, and could capture first place in the discus and the javelin. They will also be the favorites in the 480 shuttle relay which involves each man running the 120 hurdles. UMass will have a goo' shot at winning the 440 relay, and placing high in the 880 relay. They should also pick up valuable points in the jumping events and the two-mile relay and the distance medley.

Crewmen Race At Syracuse

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

UMass oarsmen better have their oars full of plenty of water tomorrow in their quest to overpower Syracuse and Georgetown in a tri-school meet to be held on Lake Onondaga in Syracuse, New York. By far the toughest contest of their schedule, the Redmen shells will be lined next to very strong Georgetown boats and perhaps even stronger ones from Syracuse.

Both UMass opponents have fame still attached from their last year's performances. Syracuse won ninth place in the National Intercollegiate Rowing Championships, and Georgetown took tenth position in the country-wide affair. The Redmen will have to prove that tomorrow till not just be a competition between two boats.

This is Syracuse's season opener. Many of the rowers that captured nothing below an eighth place in last fall's Head of the Charles Regatta, in which Redman crews finished third and ninth, have not raced or scrimmaged so far this year on Orangeman waters.

On the other hand, Georgetown came within one tenth of a second of beating Navy earlier this season. Last week they fell to St. Joseph's, the best team in Philadelphia, so the record of the defending Dad Vail overall point champion is deceiving.

Five races will be run on an international course where the IRA championships and PanAm trials are held. The 2000 meter course on Lake Onondaga is usually accompanied by winds and choppy waters.

With a little more time practicing on the water, and with experience from last week's contests, the Redmen will row two more strokes per minute. Syracuse and Georgetown are both relatively low strokers, so the events will probably be solved by the strengths of the crews.

Of the five races, UMass is entered in four; the varsity, junior varsity, and two freshman. Syracuse and Georgetown have screened their third varsities against each other.

"I anticipate a hard pulling race that any of the three could win," said coach Mike Faherty. "Especially in the varsity and jv where there is a five or six second difference to predict very close races. A good break, or a great sprint could make the difference."

On Tuesday

The UMass lacrosse team defeated Middlebury College, 13-5, yesterday. Paul Ritch with five goals and Phil Sheriden with four led the Redman attack. For complete details see Tuesday's Collegian.

In basketball coach Jack Leaman announced that one of the best prep school players in New England will be attending UMass in the fall. For the entire story see Tuesday's Collegian.

Weather: Nice weather, eh? Enjoy it, you jerks.

VOLUME XCVIII, ISSUE 126 UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS TUESDAY, APRIL 20, 1971

The rite of spring came to campus at last, yesterday afternoon as the first really decent weather this Spring happened. Nearly everyone wandered by the pond at one time or another and sat around drinking Boone's Apple Wine or took time to get wrecked. A splended time was had by all, as people basked in the sun listening to Flight, Fat, and Steel. Some took the occassion to heart (witness the couple below) and were driven into something of an orgiastic frenzy. It may have been the wine, but then again it could have been the day. WATCHING THE JET PLANES DIVE

We must go back and find a trail on the ground back of the forest and mountain on the slow land;
we must begin to circle on the intricate sod.
By such wild beginnings without help we may find the small trail on through the buffalo-bean vines.

We must go back with noses and the palms of our hands, and climb over the map in far places, everywhere,
and lie down whenever there is doubt and sleep there.
If roads are unconnected we must make a path, no matter how far it is, or how lowly we arrive.

We must find something forgotten by everyone alive, and make some fabulous gesture when the sun goes down as they do by custom in little Mexico towns where they crawl for some ritual up a rocky steep.
The jet planes dive; we must travel on our knees.

MALCOLM

Do not speak to me of martyrdom of men who die to be remembered on some parish day
I don't believe in dying
though I too shall die and violets like castanets will echo me.

Yet this man
this dreamer, thick-lipped with words will never speak again and in each winter when the cold air cracks with frost, I'll breathe his breath and mourn my gun filled nights.

He was the sun that tagged the western sky and melted tiger-scholars while they searched for stripes. He said, "Fuck you white man. we have been curled too long, nothing is sacred now. not your white face nor any land that separates until some voices squat with spasms."

Do not speak to me of living. life is obscene with crowds of white on black. death is my pulse. what might have been is not for him/or me but what could have been floods the womb until I drown.

Rep. Hatch Speaks On Current Problems

By IRWIN LEFMAN
MDC Staff

Representative Francis W. Hatch, minority leader of the Massachusetts House of Representatives spoke to a small group in the Colonial Lounge on Friday. Some of his major points discussed were the standing of the Republican party, tuition hike, and abortion reform.

Rep. Hatch feels that no adequate legislation can be passed in the House til there "is a balance between Republicans and Democrats." Out of 240 members in the house, only 62 are Republicans, he said.

Hatch explained that "he can only go so far with his members" but it is hard when you are the minority.

The Beverly Representative feels that some new, young, faces and ideas are needed in the house to institute change and progress. He felt that there is an advantage to having such few members, however. He claimed that it is much easier to control the group, and get unanimous approval for a piece of legislation.

Representative Hatch also felt that a house cut is needed. He maintained that a house cut would strengthen the Republican minority and take a burden off the taxpayers' shoulder.

When asked about the tuition hike, Rep. Hatch replied that "a tuition hike is in order as long as an adequate scholarship is set up." He felt that the scholarship should be set up to aid the needy despite class standing.

The House minority leader also felt that legal drinking age should be lowered to 18. He said that since drinking goes on anyways, it might as well be legal. He said that it all ties in with what society considers to be an adult age. He maintained that eighteen year olds ought to be able to vote in state elections, because he considers them to be of a mature age.

In alignment with the representative's liberal policies, he mentioned that he voted to modify county government as well as the abortion law. He said, "It is ludicrous to keep people ignorant about birth control, and birth control devices." In this puritanical state of Massachusetts, one can get arrested for displaying birth control information, he said.

The minority leader does not see the possibility of the legalization of abortion in this state. He felt that there are too many legislators against it.

A student questioned the Representative as to why bills take such a long time to be passed. The representative replied quite frankly, that the first obligation of the legislator is to get himself elected. Most of his political activities are centered aroundgetfinghimself well-known and popular. he said. This is where representative Hatch felt that he was not succeeding. He felt that since he is such a liberal, he encounters some problems with other legislators.

Hatch also mentioned that he was quite impressed with the University and the students. He has high respect for the students, and asked any interested students to stop by his office in the State House in Boston.

SPEAKING HIS PIECE—Representative Francis Hatch of Beverly spoke to a small group of students in the Colonial Lounge Friday and told them his office is open to them if they want to drop in. (MDC photo by Gib Fullerton.)

Marathon Week "Stimulating Experience"

By CYNTHIA SWINDELL
MDC Staff

"A stimulating learning experience," and "a great way to learn" were used to term the successful week long education marathon by those who attended the event.

Approximately 25,000 teachers, students and education administrators attended the series of lectures and specialized programs.

The first education marathon began in 1968 as a class project. The first marathon consisted of fifty events, which began at noon andended at midnight. In the next three years the marathon grew from this initial project to an all day, week long series.

The marathon began earlier this year as the education department sent out circulars concerning an upcoming marathon at UMass and inviting interested parties to present lectures at the marathon. Hundreds of educators responded, as well as CBS and IBM, which presented an audio-visual program.

As an entertainment special, Wednesday night, as part of the marathon, a talent show was presented. A general invitation was issued to all those who wanted to participate. The talent night was a complete success, as a variety of musical groups attended and presented their acts.

The marathon is meant as a learning experience outside the specific course requirements. Each hour, four to five lectures were presented to the public. These lectures covered a broad spectrum of subjects, ranging from educational data, to information to enlighten the community.

During one hour it was possible to attend a seminar on Sequential Monitoring of Counselor Repertoire Development, for those interested in new forms of educational training. And for those less interested in educational topics, during the same hour a film was presented on Natural Childbirth.

The goal of the marathon was to stimulate people to learn, yet also to enable people to discover what the education department is doing in the community.

Throughout the week it had been emphasized that no one must attend any of the lectures. Attendance at any of the lectures was not mandatory and if any seminars became uninteresting, the participants were encouraged to leave at any time.

Yet for those students in the education department, the marathon presented an opportunity for them to receive modular credit by attending thirty hours of lectures.

The education marathon is not publicly advertised and mainly receives its popularity through word of mouth. Yet inspite of this lack of publicity, students attend the marathon from the University of Kentucky, the University of Iowa and McGill University.

The students from the University of Iowa attended the marathon to obtain information, in order to set up a marathon at their own University. The students from McGill University, in filling out a survey presented by the marathon committee, wrote that it was well worth traveling 250 miles to attend.

Beside these students, bus loads of teachers and students arrived each day from the surrounding areas.

In the survey taken by the marathon committee all unanimously answered that they would attend another marathon. Other comments were that the event was "instructive and informative, a new way to enlighten people to education, and enjoyable way to learn about the education department's courses." All found the marathon an educational experience.

Agnew Has Doubts About Ping Pong Tour

WILLIAMSBURG, (AP)—Vice President Spiro T. Agnew told Republican governors Monday he has misgiving about the American table tennis team's tour of Communist China.

A Republican source also said Agnew had indicated earlier he had doubts about the current administration course in dealing with relations with China. "He seemed to be implying we shouldn't have a thaw," this source said.

The source said Agnew also discussed China policy in a private conversation with a group of newsmen early Monday and emphasized then that the United States still has commitments to the Nationalist Chinese government on Taiwan.

At the Monday luncheon of the Republican Governors' conference, Agnew was quoted as saying the table-tennis tour of China had been over-emphasized at home.

"Basically, he was saying some of the things that were praised in China were things that would be criticized here," one governor said.

Agnew was quoted also as saying that one member of the team, whom he did not name, appeared to be returning home talking the Communist line.

Agnew reportedly complained that during the tour, a 15 by 15 foot room, the home of a Chinese family, was described as an apartment. He asserted the same quarters in the United States would have been denounced as evidence of repression and poverty.

Agnew mentioned to the governors that while he had been accused of avoiding newsmen during the Williamsburg conference, he actually sat up until early morning hours Monday talking with a group of them.

The vice president saw nine reporters in his hotel room in an off-the-record conversation that began at 12:30 a.m. and went on for 2 1/4 hours.

In St. Louis, The Post-Dispatch reported in a dispatch from Williamsburg by Thomas Wottenad that Agnew told the newsmen he had not discussed his views with President Nixon. The story added that The Post-Dispatch was not represented at the off-the-record session, and said details of the meeting were learned from other sources.

The Post-Dispatch said Agnew expressed concern that the visit by the table tennis team had put the United States at a disadvantage in world opinion. He was quoted as having referred to the "courteous and enthusiastic reception" that the Chinese gave to the Americans, and to have expressed the view that the United States had been trapped into a disadvantageous position from a public relations point of view.

Agnew was reported also by the newspaper to have objected to some press accounts of the trip, particularly the use in one story of the word "esquisite" to describe Chinese sportsmanship in using some lower-ranked players against the Americans. The Post-Dispatch did not say whether Agnew named the source of the story.

The newspaper said Agnew emphasized he was only expressing his own views. It said Agnew's remarks put him in apparent conflict with Nixon, who has expressed approval of the table tennis team and hope for better relations with the Communist Chinese.

Nixon Asks Help In Welfare Reform

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. (AP)—President Nixon urged Republican governors Monday to help him reform a welfare system under which he said a man "can be rewarded for doing nothing." He said there is as much dignity in scrubbing floors or emptying bedpans as in any other work including being President.

In a speech that won praise from the two dozen GOP state and territory executives holding their spring meeting in this restored colonial capital, Nixon sought to increase pressure on the Democratic-controlled Congress to act on welfare reform. He called it "White House priority No. 1."

The President's appeal won particular favor from California Gov. Ronald Reagan, who advocates requiring work or training for welfare recipients. "It is an idea whose time has come," Reagan told reporters.

Nixon called the present welfare system a monumental failure and said he favors "a system that will encourage people to take work. And that means whatever work is available."

Noting that some welfare recipients have objected to "menial jobs," Nixon said "I have probably done quite a few in my lifetime" and added:

"If a job puts bread on the table and gives you the satisfaction of providing for your children and lets you look everyone else in the eye, I do not think that is menial."

Manson Family Formally Sentenced

LOS ANGELES (AP)-The judge in the Sharon Tate case declined Monday to spare the lives of Charles Manson and three women followers and formally sentenced them to death for what he called "seven senseless murders."

"Not only is the death penalty appropriate but it is almost compelled by this case," said Superior Judge Charles H. Older after denying defense motions for a new trial and for reduction of sentence.

Manson and three women members of his hippie-type clan were condemned to death March 29 by the same jury that convicted them of murder-conspiracy. Miss Tate, a beautiful actress, was savagely slain along with four visitors to her home in 1969. The next night a man and wife, wealthy market owners, were similarly stabbed in a "copycat killing."

Manson, 36, his once bushy locks now a stubble, asked to speak before sentence was passed. Head bowed, he said in a voice wavering with emotion: "I have always lived in the truth of your courtroom. I have always done what I was told. Sir, I invented this courtroom...I accept this court as my father... I accept the judgement of my father."

The women, Patricia Krenwinkel, 23; Susan Atkins, 22, and Leslie Van Houten, 21, who all confessed roles in the slayings, declined to make any statement. They came to court with their heads shaved.

Judge Older said he felt death sentences would "show the revulsion of the community for the kind of conduct engaged in. This is an appropriate case for the death penalty. After 9 1/2 months of trial all of the superlatives have been used...All that remains are the bare, stark facts of seven senseless murders-seven people whose lives were snuffed out by total strangers for motives that remain known only to them."

Slain with Miss Tate were hair stylist Jay Sebring, coffee heiress Abigail Folger, Polish playboy Wojieiech Frykowski and Stephen Parent,friendof the Tate estate's caretaker.

Despite the formal sentence, attorneys say any executions are at least five years away due to lengthy appeal litigation. Manson and Miss Atkins face additional murder charges.

Rocky To Challenge Court

NEW YORK (AP)—Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York says he plans to challenge the U.S. Supreme Court's decision barring welfare residency requirements, and hopes to restore the "work ethic" to welfare philosophy.

"I think we'll win this. The emergency is so serious and so great we cannot continue," Rockefeller said at the annual Associated Press luncheon held in the Waldorf-Astoria Monday.

Soaring state costs, lack of housing, health problems and crowded schools provide a compelling reason" for establishing a one-year residency requirement for welfare recipients, Rockefeller told an audience of newspaper publishers and broadcasting executives.

Earlier, the AP members heard reports by radio hookup from six AP correspondents around the world, including John Roderick, first American news service man to visit mainland China in 22 years.

Roderick said the Peking government admitted a few newsmen and the American table tennis team because, he believed, they had their "eye on the United Nations."

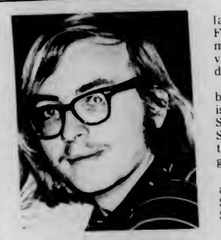
Meet Your Senate Candidates

President

Leo Clark

Leo Clark is running what he calls a two-pronged campaign on how he would make the Senate a more effective body legislatively. First of all, he would like to see that "each of the Senators themselves could feel they are making a significant contribution to the betterment of the student body."



He feels that "strengthening the Senate Committee structure is the way to do this, so that each committee would be responsible to a certain area of student affairs." More of the work of the Senate would be done in committee, before items of legislation reached the Senate as a whole. "By filtering business down through the committees, Senators would really know what's going on and be able to contribute more directly, than they do now", according to Clark.

Clark would also "try to make the Senate more visible and legitimate in the eyes of the student body" and would develop its image as "a means of change for the improvement of the lot of the average student on this campus." He would go around to dorms and other places on campus to meet with and talk to people formally and informally. He feels that he would have more time to serve as a spokesman of the Senate to the campus because of his planned strengthening of committees and their chairmen.

Clark has established academic reform as his number one priority for what he plans to be a more effective Senate. Reforms that he has in mind are an expansion of independent study, grading revisions, and the establishment of more undergraduate departmental councils such as EDUC in English and CUSP in psychology.

Another of Clark's priorities would be a reform of the Senate budgeting procedure for the allocation of the Student Activities Tax. He would like to see more funding of groups which service the entire campus, such as the NES tutoring program in Springfield, the Senate Transit Service, and publications. He would give such groups priority over smaller, special interest groups in budgeting them.

Clark is a government major in the class of '72 and is a commuter Senator. He has been in the Senate since October 1969 and is a former chairman of the Senate's Student Government Affairs Committee. This semester, he is serving as a legislative intern in Boston through a University program.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES—Leo Clark, (below) and Lee Sandwen, (top.

Lee Sandwen

Lee Sandwen is campaigning on the slogan "Next year is the year of the faculty awakening." He feels that faculty in general, and especially the Faculty Senate, "are not prepared to deal with students as legitimate members of any real academic community. Some faculty members are very much opposed to any student involvement in advisory and decisionmaking processes."

Sandwen wants to make students aware of what he calls the 'roadblocks' which the faculty puts in the way of student-change. He says there is a major confrontation building up between the Student and Faculty Senates and he intends to draw the students body together around the Senate as a force against faculty roadblocks. He wants students to learn that their Senate can offer alternatives to faculty control in campus governance.

Sandwen would attempt to make the Senate more legitimate an alternative in the eyes of students by "recruiting better people as Senators and by getting campus groups involved together through the Senate instead of competing with each other for student tax money."

Sandwen feels that students have already shown that they can play an effective role in campus governance by the student input and decision-making powers which the Administration has given them in several instances this year. As examples, Sandwen cited the real voice given undergraduates on the search committee for a Director of Security, in deciding on coed dormitories, and in reviewing projected increases in fees and room and board charges. He wants students to view this as an indication of the powers which students could have if they work closely with the Student Senate next year.

Besides pulling students together around the Senate to confront the faculty, Sandwen would strengthen the body in the services it could provide. He would like to work at setting up cooperatives in the Amherst area for services such as gas stations and food stores. He would have the student government set up groups of students which would incorporate themselves outside of the Senate. Services could thus be provided by funds other than the compulsory student tax.

Sandwen is a government major in the class of '72 and has represented Project Ten since February 1969. He is chairman of the Senate Student Matters Committee, has participated in a federally funded project in educational reform, is active in Free University, and has belonged to the Senate Academic Affairs Committee.

External Vice-President

Bill Abbott

He thinks the incumbent Vice-President should continue to do what the incumbent Vice-President has done with the Administration.

"Students should anticipate first, before the faculty, in policies dealing with housing, parking, dining commons and course requirements."

If elected, he plans to devote time to influence the Faculty Senate, with a more favorable policy towards the students.

"I'd like to get the Faculty Senate to decide more in line to what the students want," he said.

He has been Chairman of the Social Action Committee, member of the Faculty Senate Picketing Code, and a member of the University Discipline Board. He has been in the Senate since October 1970. Nursing is his academic major.

Ed Voci

He is seeking this position concerned largely with University relations with the intention of "making students more aware that they can do things to bring about change." The changes he would especially like to see are academe reform and innovation, and greater economic autonomy for students.

In academic reform, Voci would push for "putting the teacher back in the classroom and making the student-to-teacher ratio more favorable to students." For economic change, he would work for the system of incorporating students services. He says he is very excited by the concept of student owned and operated gas stations, record stores, clothing shops, etc.

Voci sees his first job in Senate relations with the University as one of getting students to work together to help themselves. He feels that "In these days of student activism, there is a very limited number of people willing to get involved in things. There seems to be only a minimum involvement by many."

"The Senate is too closed to students now", according to Voci, and he intends to open it up "to allow students to work to help themselves." He says he has already moved in this direction by sponsoring recently passed legislation which could be a first step toward wider publicity of Senate activities.

Voci represents Chadbourne and is in the class of '73. He has served in the Senate since October 1970 and is currently chairman of the Senate Services Committee. He has also participated in class government and served on other committees.

Larry Ladd

He hopes to promote academic reform working with the Faculty Senate.

"The Faculty Senate has the most power in student matters. They're not eager to change what they spend years building up. For a significant academic change we will need an incredibly strong case with strong persuasive arguments."

He plans to work with the Academics Affairs Committee, the Services Committee, and the Student Matters Committee.

"I would like to increase the student's voice on matters that concern him. I believe in organization when dealing with the issues."

Past experience includes Continental President of Liberal Religious Youth, Chairman of the Student Government Affairs Committee of the Senate, and a member of the Budget Committee. He first joined the Senate in October, 1970 and his academic major is Sociology.

Internal Vice-President

John Hogan

He feels the Internal Vice-President deals mainly with coordinating committees.

"The strength of an organization lies within the organization. In order for a strong exterior, the interior must flourish. The Internal Vice-President must personify the Senate and make the Senators fully aware of what's going on."

Past experience includes Chairman of the Senate Activities Committee, Chairman of the Student Calendar Commission, and a member of Student Government Affairs. He has been in the Senate since October, 1969. His academic major is Hotel and Restaurant Administration.

Bruce Bernstein

If elected, he plans to be his own man, going off in the direction that would do the students most good.

"The main goals I would like to accomplish is to get dorm and area autonomy, and pick up on unfulfilled promises by the Administration. I would like to get these things done as quickly as possible."

He has been a member of the Senate Budgets Committee and the SGA Subcommittee studying university governments. He first joined the Senate in October, 1970. His major is Psychology.

Election of Student Senate officers will take place in the weekly Senate meeting Wednesday night. As a public service the Collegian is presenting this forum of candidates, their views and personal qualifications. We present this in the hope that all students will consider these candidates and voice their preferences to their representative senators.

Senate officers are elected by the studentsenatorswho represent all undergraduates on campus. An officer's only prerequisite is that he be a senator.

Once elected into office the officers term is one year, effective immediately.

In the light of the possibility of paying Senate officers and the nature of the jobs, the Collegian urges careful consideration of the candidates on the parts of both the student body and their elected representatives. Remember, last year the Senate legislated control over half a million of your dollars!

These interviews were compiled by Senate Reporter Beth Goodell and Steve Feld.

Treasurer

Rick Verrochi

He has extensive experience, being on all of the committees of the Senate at one time or another. His platform consists of being financially honest with the Senate and have answers ready for them.

He would like to turn the RSO into a basic bank with a banking system. This would cut down on the lag time that one must now go through when either making a purchase or paying a bill.

In effect, what he advocates is efficiency.

"The one thing vital for the job of Treasurer is experience. One has to know what to do and what to expect in order to be able to do the job."

Past experience includes two years in both the Finance and Budget Committees, and Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He has been in the Senate for 2 1/2 years, first joining in October, 1968. His academic major is Government.

John Stevens

He hopes to promote better work ability and understanding of opinions.

"There is going to be differences of opinion, but it shouldn't cause officers of the Senate to become alienated because of it."

He believes that the Treasury Post is one that can make or break the Senate.

"The Treasury has all of the power. The way they handle matters is very important to the way the Senate is understood."

He has been on the Senate for one year, and on the Finance Committee since the first of the year. He is part of Long Range Planning. He receives 12 credits from four different departments for his work in the Senate. He is also involved in academic affairs and student matters and services. Government is his major.

Overall View Bleak

Area Newspapers Having A Rough Time

By DENISE MAGNELL
MDC Staff

On the tables of the Southwest dining commons there are folded pieces of cardboard listing the activities for "This Week in Southwest." An advertisement calling for a "reliable means of informing, coordinating, and unifying the Residential College" appeared on these table "tents" for two weeks last month. The ad was calling for a Southwest newspaper, and it went unanswered.

The organizer this time was a Washington-Middle resident, Bill Walsh, who now isn't sure "whether kids are satisfied with the Collegian or are just too busy with other things." Last semester a group of students were allotted $700 by the Southwest Assembly for three trial issues--the appropriation still lies dormant.

"I'm afraid what it would take is a Southwest emergency," Walsh continues, "maybe another dining commons 'confrontation' or if the Collegian became totally unresponsive to Southwest. If it got off the ground it could really work...a lot of potential help is waiting to see what happens...they have to have something in their hands before they commit themselves."

Orchard Hill had two area "newspapers" until this semester. After three semesters the "new" Hobbit folded because "no one wanted to take the responsibility any more...no one had the time." (The "old" Hobbit was a short-lived newletter of two years ago which evolved out of a notice sheet, Hill Happenings, still paid for and printed by the Hill's Master's Office.)

To revive the paper, a former Hobbit staffer feels "they need really ambitious people and a lot more organization."

In the case of Southwest, the Master's Office offered to take care of the technical aspects of production--the bookkeeping, the typing, the printing. "What we need are writers and an editor to organize...getting student response is the most important part," claims Master of Southwest John Hunt.

He views the area as a sizeable city and a Southwest newspaper as a "central requirement." Its main obstacle is "the wariness of getting involved."

Recalling last semester's conflict between individuals over what type of paper to have, he said, "An underground newspaper is fine, but it is not what we need. We need a community thing telling about decisions being made.....commentary rather than a day-to-day news organ by which people can react to life at the university."

"Each year we've resolved to have a newspaper and each year we haven't. Credit could make an enormous difference. I wouldn't hesitate in building colloquia around newspaper work."

The current student affairs reorganization could mean a new identity for each dorm and, as Hunt puts it, "may increase student impulse and demand for the paper."

The Sage, with a $220/year budget provided by the Orchard Hill Area Government and approximately 20 contributors and staff, remains as the Hill's only newspaper. It had its beginnings in a Webster House newsletter about 3 or 4 years ago and now comes out weekly.

The editor, Roy Perdue, does not fit the Sage into the newspaper category. "The material covered in it is completely disjointed from the campus paper. It contains community news of the Hill and its four dorms: meetings, government and curriculum."

Perdue tries to keep his reporters' jobs interesting by varying the activities they are assigned to cover. He has correspondents in every dorm collecting notices and doing features on dorm activities. Other contributions are asked for through correspondence and a meeting per semester out of which usually comes "approximately 50% who are willing to work actively."

"Expansion of the Sage will come as a function of the interest of Orchard Hill students." Two new domestic columns, one on decorating rooms, the other giving easy recipes for cooking in the dorm, have been added as regular features but the size of the Sage will remain for the present time at ten to twelve pages per issue.

C. Ross Stuart edits "The Central Voice" in the basement of Baker House. In an editorial last semester he wrote, "There is one really nice thing about being the editor of this rag. It's that I get to blow off steam, vent personal vendettas, salve my own conscious failings and see my name in print. Other than that it can be a real drag. Why you ask? Because I never get any help putting this thing out (with the exception of a few, very few, people who are willing to write articles for me) and that gets to be a real drag very quickly."

With a low-point of two-three, a high-point of ten-twelve, and an average of four-five staffers, Stuart contends that the Voice in its present state "unfortunately provides for a strong personality to control the paper for a length of time."

Ironically, it is the oldest of area publications, starting in the fall of 1967. (One of its first editors was Richard Credit could make an enormous difference. I wouldn't hesitate in building colloquia around newspaper work."

With a low-point of two-three, a high-point of ten-twelve, and an average of four-five staffers, Stuart contends that the Voice in its present state "unfortunately provides for a strong personality to control the paper for a length of time."

Three areas--Central residents, academics, and Whitmore--are the foci of the Voice.

"Central area is the ghetto of the campus. We get the least money and we have to fight for every penny. I try to let the student know what Whitmore is doing to him. People have to start being more honest and stop making false promises," says its editor.

Copies of the Central Voice are sent to department heads in order to build an interest in the area. Stuart contends that professors rarely know what is going on in the dorms, but might be interested in finding out about programs and projects taking place in residential areas.

On the subject of soliciting material, "There must be a ton of literary talent out there and none of it is being used...we're offering a vent but nobody picks it up. Our focus is on feedback, trying to find out what the residents want, speaking to the area in hopes of getting a response."

"But until people show interest, expansion is out of the question."

Whether they are still publishing or not, the overall view on area publications is bleak. Elections are not held on the Sage because its editor knows his is actually a "rather thankless job." The position is passed on to whoever will take the responsibility, as is the editorship of the Central Voice.

In the midst of this dampened outlook is the Northeast area's Mandala. The Mandala is a journal, a combination of news and literature, a "collection of writings communicating the interests of the students and staff in the area, to the area." It is a success.

Its recruitment efforts are aimed towards freshmen, capturing the enthusiasm of first-year students before it dies out. Jack Richardson, an advisor to the publication and head of residence of Thatcher believes the journal "gives these freshmen a sense of being significant right from the beginning...we try to make them feel whatever their interests are, they fit in."

The two associates editors are freshmen. In charge of the news-gathering, Mike Thompson finds as the only setback in having a younger staff "not always knowing where to look for things happenind as an upperclassman would." However, with such a staff there is more of a chance of keeping people for three or four years."

Literary Editor Susan Laidig finds soliciting material harder than her news editor colleague.

"Maybe people don't think their work is worthy of being published. They might feel it's too personal for others to see. But next year we'll be established," she adds optimistically, "People will start saying, 'Oh yeah, I remember that,' and will be more willing to submit their literature."

The difficulty in sustaining interest in the Mandala, as with the other area publications, stems from the demands made on the staff's energy and time. Jack Richardson looks forward to a time when the pragmatic experience students pick up from the Mandala will be rewarded.

"People should feel they are getting recognition (via academic credit) for being a member of the staff...it will attract more of a desire for excellence...and it will be easier to produce a varied and quality journal."

To Richardson, variety seems the key: "Each new issue should have a different quality. You could spend an issue on short stories, one on news, another on cartoons. The staff is constantly trying to do new things within the medium...trying to make a radical transformation from what it was the time before."

"Each issue is a growth issue," adds co-advisor Bob Campbell.

The major limitation in expanding is the lack of funds. Right now the Northeast are government funds the journal ($800 on a monthly publication basis). Added financial support would bring better quality paper, and photo and art equipment, for a start. Artistically-oriented students would be more inclined to bring their work to the Mandala rather than to a campus-wide publication if they thought it would reproduce "as is." (Asst. Area Coordinator Campbell said plans are now underway for a darkroom in Knowlton Basement.)

Mandala is a Buddhist term symbolizing integration. Bringing a community together begins with integrating academics with activities, learning with doing, people with people.

"We needed a new approach to a communications vehicle," concludes Campbell.

Their approach is working.

Gov't Asks Right To Strip

WASHINGTON (AP)—The government asked the Supreme Court Monday to restore the right of border guards to order travelers to disrobe on the "mere suspicion" they may be carrying hidden narcotics or other contraband.

This search power, last affirmed by Congress in 1866, was held unconstitutional last year by a federal court in San Francisco. The court acted on the complaint of a woman convicted of bringing two ounces of heroin into the country from Mexico in her underpanties.

Seeking a reversal, Samuel R. Pierce Jr., general counsel of the Treasury Department, conceded that to search a traveler's body, a customs inspector should be able to articulate his suspicions.

But, Pierce said, no more than "mere intuition based on experience" is legally sufficient to support ordering a traveler to remove his clothing so it may be searched for contraband.

The case concerns Sandra Dennise Johnson, 27, a drycleaning store clerk in Los Angeles. In 1968 she and a woman companion were stopped at the San Ysidro, Calif., customs station and told to undress in a windowless room so their clothing could be checked by a woman guard.

The heroin and some tranquilizer were found in Miss Johnson's underpanties. No contraband was found in the other woman's clothing. Miss Johnson was convicted and sentenced to five years in prison.

Last March the U.S. Circuit Court in San Francisco ruled 2 to 1 that inspectors cannot order strip searches unless they have "real suspicions"-that is reasons they could articulate.

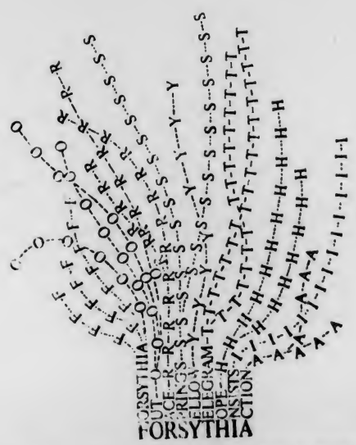
Dada Festival Deciphered

Scheduled events? Programs? "It wouldn't be Dada to have too much organization" was the cry as the great Five-College Festival of Dada and Surrealism got under way today. But as a sketch of the first of the Festival's three weeks they gave out the following:

Tonight (Tuesday): A color film, "Dreams That Money Can Buy" (1944) by Hans Richter, one of the founders of Dada. Other Dadists such as Marcel Duchamp appear in the film, 8 p.m. in 104 Thompson.

Wednesday: "Venom and Eternity", a thoroughly weird film made (1953) by Jean-Isidore Isou of the French "Lettrist" school. It includes poems "constructed for the pure beauty of their noise, and abstracts made by tearing and scratching the film. At 9 p.m. in 102 Thompson.

At Smith College, "Dreams That Money Can Buy" will be showing 8 p.m. at Wright Hall, and artist Al Hansen will conduct a Happenings workshop.



Thursday: Author of "A Primer of Happenings & Time/Space Art" will run a Happenings workshop at noon, probably in the Colonial lounge of the Student Union. At 7 or 7:30 he'll give a talk, using four slide projectors, on "What Can Dada Do for Us Now That We Need It?"

Mary Ellen Solt, noted concrete poet and anthologist, author of "Flowers in Concrete" and "Concrete Poetry, a World View," will present her own work in Mahar auditorium at 8:45 p.m.

At Amherst College, an exhibition of concrete poetry should be ready to open at Frost library. At Smith, Mrs. Solt will present slides and tapes of world wide concrete poetry at 4 p.m. in Seeleye Hall, Room 10. At 8 p.m., "Venom and Eternity" will show in Wright Hall.

Friday: Mary Ellen Solt will present concrete poetry, including her own work, at 3:30 p.m. in 231 Herter (Note: This is the presentation earlier scheduled for Wednesday afternoon). A color film, "Forty Years of Experiment: From Dada to Surrealism" (a full-length anthology of Hans Richter's work) will be shown at 8 p.m. in 227 Herter.

The Weekend: Jackson Mac Low, a simultaneous concrete poet, author of "The Marrying Maiden", "The Twin Plays" and "22 Light Poems", will read at the Spring Poetry Festival, probably Saturday afternoon. In the Theatre Courtyard at Smith at 9 p.m. he'll present a multi-media simultaneous poem (probably "Air, Earth, Fire, Water" recently performed at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts) with 10-12 students whom he'll earlier rehearse. On Sunday afternoon at the campus pond at UMass he'll direct one of his simultaneous political poems.

In his concrete poem by Mary Ellen Solt, the lines are spelled out in Morse code as well as letters.

S.C.R.E.W. Whom You Please

The UMass chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, the national service fraternity, will be sponsoring the first annual Student Committee to Reappraise our Educator's Weltanschauung (S.C.R.E.W.) awards program this week in the Campus Center. There will be two categories of voting in this mock election; one from a list of S.C.R.E.W. approved candidates for the individual award, and the other a write-in vote for the departmental award. Balloting will be a penny a vote with no limit on the number of votes per person, and all profits will be donated to the Library Fund to buy new books.

Students are urged to take advantage of this opportunity to "put the screws to" that prof or department which wrecked their ego, cum, or semester by seeing their favorites photographed with humorous and somewhat embarassing joke awards.

America's Passion Play

The demonstrations planned for this week on through the first weeks of May are carefully orchestrated to bring large numbers of people to the most vulnerable place in the Nation, at a time calculated to create the greatest emotional and psychological impact conceivable.

It is a stage, as is all the world, for the players to take on their roles, and perform well before all the kings and future kings of this nation. Who will watch from the elegant electronic balcony provided by those armies of the evening news?

The struggles of individual conscience, the frenzy of a dispersing mob, the much trumpeted declarations of war and peace will ring from the stage and all will find an audience and a critic in the halls of government and homes of America.

This week started well with a dress rehearsal yesterday by about 1500 former participants in the Vietnam and Southeast Asian theater. The scruffy Vets marched through the pleasant parks of Washington, D.C. and with the help of former Atty. General Ramsey Clark, they were blessed with victory over the functionaries who wanted to keep the old war dogs up all night.

The Vets got top billing with CBS, whose camera showed us long hair and smashed plastic M-16 rifles. A smooth looking spokesman for the Vets told CBS that the men were "getting angry.....with good reason," after being denied entrance to Arlington Memorial Cemetery, where some Gold Star mothers were to lay wreaths in "honor" of all American and Asian war dead.

Day by day the momentum will pick up. More Vets will arrive to join ranks, and the great avenues of the Capital will become swelled by those moving in early lor Act Two, this Saturday.

The tourists will be watching from the steps of the Capital building while war Crime trials are held; like short vignette flash-backs to better times before in America, as one Life magazine Senior Editor put it, "Something went wrong."

April 24 is the great compromise date. It is a week before the hard-core civil disobedience is scheduled to strangle several major sections of Washington's bureaucratic enclaves. The core planners of this whole Spring series have sought to rouse the huge crowds before there is a final confrontation. The teeming millions across the land will have already decided to go or not to go to Washington. After Saturday, they will probably find their way back to places like UMass. People will think about "just one year ago" when the President publicly sent troops into Cambodia. The volatile actions in Washington will be radiating whatever shock waves there are, across the nation.

May 5 will slip in quietly, like all demonstration days. People will be attending rallies, and if the weather is nice thousands of UMass students will bare their backs to the sun near the campus pond.

Washington, D.C. will be, as always, the theater of confrontation; this week the verbal assaults and passionate soliliqueys, the following weeks, the physical carrying of people and government, will scream its message across the T.V.'s and front pages of America.

These are the politics of confrontation, with high stakes and bloody cards. The audience will applaud the heroes and boo the bad guys, split down the middle on the question of who really is a hero and who really is a bad guy.

No one can tell what the last act of this nation's own passion play will bring to light. You see there is no playwright to our drama. No one has heard from God.

No Group Of Idiots

Buried amongst the myriad reports of the weekend's anti-war activities was a brief remark made in Washington by one of the nation's more important political figures. While the statement may have ostensibly had little or nothing to do with the peace movement, its purpose was certainly to weaken or discredit the people involved.

In a speech delivered before the Republican Governor's Association, Senator Robert J. Dole, chairman of the Republican National Committee commented that, "The McCarthyism of the '50's pales by comparison with the Muskieism of the '70's." The reasons for this remark seem twofold. First, it is a blantant attempt to discredit a possible Presidential opponent of the Republican incumbent and, at the same time, to take some of the force away from the anti-war activities about to take place.

The first of these assumptions is the most obvious. Sen. Dole, in his role as chairman of the National Committee, is calling upon the reactionary nature of many individuals in an attempt to tie the Maine Senator in with the "dreaded" McCarthy, a figure universally despised around the country.

Dole attempts to make the connection by pointing to Muskie's charges against the FBI and its Director, J. Edgar Hoover. As you recall, Muskie claimed that the FBI spied on him during an earth day rally in 1970, a charge which has not been refuted. In fact, Dole himself stated in the same speech that "the FBI report on Muskie was not of course, intended for public disclosure and basically making it public can only hurt the FBI and the job it does. I must assume, then, that this was the senator's purpose, although it is difficult to understand the reasoning." Is it really?

Muskie appears to be simply performing his role as a member of the opposition party, though his motives too are likely tinged with a bit of ambition. But classifying the Maine Senator's charges with the scandals of the early '50's is an act of the basest political order, foreshadowing one of the dirtier election campaigns of recent times.

This does not immediately seem to be of any significant importance to the antiwar movement and the activities of the next week. Yet it appears that it is more than a coincidence that on the same day Dole made these statements, Senator Muskie was speaking before a "Dump Nixon" rally in Providence, a rally which was not totally devoid of antiwar sentiments and, with Washington just days away, was clearly planned with the peace movement in mind.

Now, to someone other than a close observer, it is easy to view Muskie as one of the leader's of the antiwar movement, in Washington anyway, although this might be seriously challenged by many. To that omnipresent "silent majority", though, the relationship must seem quite clear. Dole, by trying to somewhat weaken the political opposition certain to be aimed at President Nixon in 1972, is at the same time attempting to draw a straight line from McCarthy to Muskie to the antiwar movement. There are few people who can support all of these and by a process of guilt by association, Dole is trying to eliminate support for all of them.

Though this may seem like a useless exercise, it does not appear unlikely that any or all of these things were not at one time or another taken into consideration by Dole. After all, we must remember that although it is easy to think so, we are not up against a group of idiots.

War Antidefamation League

WASHINGTON—It had to come sooner or later. A group of solid citizens has organized the War Antidefamation League. The president of the league, C. Bennett Neypalm, told me, "Everyone is bad mouthing war just because of Vietnam. There is no reason to be against all wars just because Vietnam gave war a bad name."

"Who is responsible for this?" I asked.

"The newspapers and the television networks. They only tell you the bad things that have taken place in the Vietnamese war. All they ever talk about is casualty figures, body counts, massacres, war crimes, bombing and PX scandals. No wonder most people have turned off on war."

"How does the league propose to combat this insidious campaign?"

"We're going to point out that people shouldn't blame all wars because of what they've read about Vietnam. There are good wars and bad wars. Just because this one went sour is no reason for people to say 'We don't want any more war.'"

"I imagine you will picket, too?" I said.

"We're going to go further than that. We're going to pay visits to editors' offic[illegible]twork producers, and we're going to get th[illegible] mentioning the Vietnamese war altogeth[illegible]

"What if they refuse to [illegible]

"We'll just tell them we kno[illegible]ere their kids go to school."

"You guys play rough," I said.

"That isn't all we're going to do. If any people plan to produce a movie about the Vietnamese war, we're going to make them sign a pact saying they won't mention the word 'Vietnam' in the picture.

"We also are going to have script approval to make sure that there is nothing in the film that might offend people who make their living from war. And we're going to demand that all proceeds from the premiere of the film go to the Military-Industrial Complex Ulcer Foundation."

"Do you believe the movie companies will give in to your demands?"

"They better, or we'll throw tear gas in John Wayne's dressing room."

"You people are really uptight."

"Why shouldn't we be? Everywhere you go, you hear people knocking war. They blame war for unemployment, high prices, bad housing, crime and the generation gap. Somebody's got to stand up and say 'you've gone far enough.' The next time you start knocking war, we'll put a land mine in your rose bushes."

"That should make people think twice," I said.

"All the War Antidefamation League is trying to do," said Neypalm, "is to keep people from putting all wars in the same bag. Each war should be judged on its own merits. America has had some great wars in the past. There was the War of 1812, the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, the Mexican War and World War I. Now those were wars that we could all be proud of. Just because the Vietnamese war didn't turn out the way we all dreamed it would doesn't mean war is not good."

"What does it mean?"

"It means the next time we have a war, everyone has to try harder."

A Plea For Rationality

To the Editor:

I see from the April 14 issue that the food production discussion goes on. Mr. Salk apparently disagrees with me so may I restate my case.

The statement is made that this country produces more food than it consumes. This is very true and the U.S. can easily double its present production. It can do this only because of its highly sophisticated technical approach to agriculture. This makes use of optimum levels of fertilizer, pesticides, automated equipment, new species of plants and animals, and above all, a bounteous supply of good land. This is just not true of most of the world today. We cannot base hopes for a good future on the U.S. outlook alone. We meed a much broader outlook. How long do you think the rest of the world will tolerate the U.S. with 6% of the world's population using 40% of the world's resources. Admittedly, most of these resources are not connected with food production, but some of them are. Other countries which see a fat and well-fed U.S. will not stop to consider just how much of the resource consumption goes to food production. The U.S. can afford to be benevolent in its techniques of food production, preservation and marketing.

A case is made to switch U.S. production of animal protein to plant protein to obtain more total food for humans. This fact is well known to the large U.S. food companies and many millions of dollars have been spent for research to fabricate soy protein into products which people will eat. We now have products made entirely from soy protein which are almost indistinguishable from pork, ham, chicken, beef, scallops, bacon, sandwich spreads and meat loaf. The U.S. consumed 400 million pounds in 1970. But this is for the U.S. with its sophisticated technology. The developing countries are years away from these advantages.

The statement is made in the April 14 issue that we should develop plants to use massive applications of organic fertilizer instead of chemical fertilizers. I repeat "Where does one expect to get the tremendous amount of organic fertilizers required to produce the food to feed our present population." Fertilizer is primarily nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium and the plant doesn't know whether they come from a chemical factory or a dead animal. We have an adequate supply of chemical fertilizers available. To imply that we have an adequate supply of organic fertilizer is nonsense.

May I also make a plea for rationality in the use of pesticides. No human deaths have been attributed to DDT poisoning from food. On the contrary, it has been credited with saving 25,000,000 lives primarily through malaria control. DDT is also estimated to have prevented 500,000,000 illnesses. It is one of the safest pesticides we've known and it will continue to be used around the world. Its use should be curtailed because of its persistence but absolute bans are unreasonable. The ecologists have captured the ear of the public press and it is high time that we had a counterbalance. The replacement of DDT with more toxic compounds may introduce even more hazards. Perhaps we can buy enough time to do the necessary research to develop more biodegradable compounds or possibly specific biological controls. Let us hope so!

We May Look Weird

To the Editor:

Tuesday's newspaper contained a letter from Ed McCabe about seeing formally attired grownups in the Campus Center who did not return his courtesy when he smiled at them. I am not a member of the group he referred to, but I am a grownup, more formally attired than the college students, living in the Campus Center for five weeks. I too am trying an experiment, not for two hours but now on my seventh day.

I realize at 36 I am much older than the "Establishment" here, and do appear very square and out of it, but I was here two full days before a student even spoke to me, and then it was because I used slight profanity in the lunch line and he reacted to it. Since then, in six days I have got back twelve smiles, two waves, and a conversation with two anthropology grad students during lunch. Students, some of these elderly folk hanging around the Campus Center would like to listen to you, hear what you are and where you are and where it's at. We may look weird, but we listen. Give us a chance! Talk, smile, communicate!

Thank you for the steam valve. I know you can't print it, but I don't have a typewriter. Wherever you are, thanks for listening, and I'll keep smiling.

So Wrong

To the Editor:

In the feature article on me "To Be A Foreign Student In The United States"; in the April 16, 1971 issue of the Daily Collegian, there are some misconceptions as to what I said and meant. Let me first express my profound gratitude to the author Miss Linda Balicki. Miss Balicki deserves an applause from all the foreign students for her efforts in making the voice of a foreigner heard on this campus for a change. Unfortunately due to my African accent she misinterpreted my answers to some of the questions she asked during the interview.

I was quoted as saying that a foreign student "is not interested in taking courses which are to broaden the mind." This is a misunderstanding. What I said during the interview was "I am not too happy with the undergraduate curriculum in most American universities. If the North American university is to be an effective force in assisting the less developed nations' it must be innovative in developing an international dimension that would parallel the domestic problems. It cannot be successful in its mission if it merely attempts to mold and or make the rest of the world adopt a system that has evolved in response to the needs of the United States."

I did not say there is no International Club on this campus. There is one which has been rather dormant in the last few years but which I feel can and should fulfill its responsibilities to the University community with its newly elected officers.

As a black African, I am for the American Black all the way in his fight for freedom and equality. Foreigners outside the U.S. regard the latter as a first class nation. If America is to remain a first class nation she cannot afford to have second class citizens. If American blacks and whites cannot live together as brothers they can as well perish together as fools. It is morally wrong for any man to think another man inferior because of the color of his skin or race. Every man must be regarded as a fellow human being and be respected as such. I have never and will never support violence because the killing of man has never proven to be the final solution to any problem but I hope the American blacks will keep on pushing and stick it up. Right on.

Proof Of Your Goal

To the Editor:

Spring is finally here again, and with it comes the rebirth of a neurosis that is very familiar to any resident of Southwest. It seems that some individuals are so plagued with feelings of inferiority and insecurity that they must announce these feelings to the world. I refer to the incessant blasting of stereos out windows at all hours of the day and night. People, you are not impressing me or anyone else with your musical taste or the volume of your stereo. Many of us would like to sit outside and not have to hear the noises we hear inside. If we want to hear this music, we can play our own stereos.

Then, of course, there are those few who have exams they have to study for; or those who have been singled out with one of the many spring epidemics and need some rest in the middle of the day. The fact that your speaker is against the window at full volume does not make you cool, it makes you a pain in the ass.

22Southwve

Southwest is enough of an ecological mess without noise pollution, too. Please grow up. A loud stereo playing a dynamite album is not proof of your cool.

Peace.

Rash Statements

To the Editor:

We would like to apologize for the rash statements made concerning UMass by our former principal, Dr. E. Harry Boothby, as reported in the Collegian of April 6.

Quite simply, he is a reactionary individual. For instance, at graduation last year he had leaflets distributed that can only be characterized as being of an extreme conservative bent. Similarly, in his annual report for 1970, he lamented the fact that rules (i.e. dress codes, etc.) have become increasingly difficult to enforce because the courts have declared that youths have the same rights as adults.

We believe that this is indicative of the kind of presumptions that determine his statements. Two days at the Campus Center hotel do not enable one to render a valuable criticism of the entire campus.

Editorial Points

An act of Congress designates the last Saturday in April (the 24th) as "National Collegiate Press Day".

To get into the spirit of things, why not take your favorite student journalist to a Happy Hour?

As one noted observer commented, "the only rational way to look at the whole thing is to pretend that hockey doesn't exist."

Why do guys over 6'3 always go out with girls under 5'3? Why don't they pick on somebody their own size?

During this National Library Week (April 18-24), be good to your books. And take a librarian to lunch.

Senator Edmund S. Muskie (D—Maine) is certainly getting it from all sides these days. He has been accused in the last few days of consorting with Trotskyites (for his participation in the Providence rally) and according to Senator Dole, chairman of the Republican National Committee, "The McCarthyism of the '50's pales by comparison with the Muskieism of the '70's" (because of Muskie's attacks on the FBI). And he isn't even a declared candidate yet.

There seems to be a direct correlation between spring and increases in anti-war activity. If that's true, doesn't it seem strange that the arctic blasts keep returning right before the March on Washington? Perhaps Nixon knows someone we don't know.

The Student Revolution

By NEIL COLEMAN
MDC Staff

Flash, the student has an identity crisis, if you didn't know or realize it before, please be advised that's its true. In 1964 Mario Savio said that the student was the modern equivalent of the oppressed proletariot. Dick Gregory has said that the student is today's nigger. The fact that students are geared to fit into industry, to fit into the machine, to conform, and the events of Chicago and Kent State give these ideas their validity. But the thought still persists that the student has an identity of his own. A revolutionary thought occurs, that the student, as a student, has a place in society.

Look around you, the students are major consumers, of records, clothes, cars and etc. By the act of our consumption we cause people to be employed; we cause big companies to make money. Just look at the ads, they're all youth-oriented. Even the military has gotten the message. They know where its at. If it wasn't for the young and the draft, they wouldn't be able to fight their wars. No wars would mean that there was no need for bombs or bullets and all the poeple who are employed or who make money from the M.I.C. wouldn't, if it wasn't for the student. Let's fact it, we the students are a vital factor in the economy. In fact the foundation of the economy may not be war at all, but the student. It's not a war economy; it's a student economy!

This should suggest the importance of students; it seems to suggest it to everyone else but the student. The student has an identity crisis. Perhaps its because of deferred maturation. The student is in school, he's physically and psycologically mature, he wants and needs his freedom, but yet he still relies to some extend upon his parents for financial support. In such an unnatural situation friction develops. The generation gap is bound to exist. The student is mature and wants to be an individual, but parental restraints prevent full self-expression. He is young, vibrant and idealistic and wants to remake the world in his own image, but society prevents him. The same forces which seem to allow him freedom, prevent the exercise of it. No wonder the student is frustrated and at a loss for his identity amidst a society that allows him to be a consumer and a draftee, and in fact depends upon it, but still refuses to allow him to have a voice in the world he helps maintain.

A student who can't work within the system goes outside it. So we have the sub-culture, but even it, to a large degree is economically dependent upon the outside world. Students in the sub-culture also have to work, buy clothes, food and etc. See how they've got us trapped? They are going to get you one way or the other. If the President decides to invade Thiland tomorrow and you're drafted, being a member of the sub-culture isn't going to help you. If the president pushes the button, being a member of the counter-culture isn't going to save you. If you get busted, being a member of the sub-culture is certainly not going to keep you out of jail. Nor is protesting going to help; you don't want to protest an act after it happens; you want to prevent it from happening.

I look at my Black brothers and I see that they aren't marching anymore. The Blacks have got their thing together. Stokely Carmichael signalled the beginning of the second phase of the Black Revolution when he proclaimed Black Power. Malcom X laid the ground-work for that revolution when he sought to give Blacks an identity, a seperate Black identity. That's where its at, identity, solidarity and power and that's what the students don't have. The Blacks have got their thing together; they know what they want and they don't have to wait for Hubert Humphrey and their white allies to go out and get it. Students have an identity crisis; they don't realize the power they hold. Let's draw the line, realize our identity and exert our power as students. If we vote as a community, as students, than the people will begin to see and listen to the voice of the students.

What was done in Berkeley can be done here and more. Why should we demonstrate just to have the politician tell us what he'll do, when we can tell the politician what he has to do, to get our vote. In the town of Amherst with a non-student population of only 13,000, the student, if registered, would constitute much more than a majority. In the Amherst Congressional district the five college students would at least be a strong swing vote. Across the nation the young number 24 million and could easily decide a presidential election. Thus the possibility of student power is very real and with that power comes the possibility of dictating events instead of demonstrating against them, is in our hands, if we but exercise it!

THUMB TRIPPING by Don Mitchell; Bantam Books, 95¢

It had to happen, someone had to write a so-called authentic novel about the "counter-culture". There have been a number of banal films made on the subject, beginning with the everpopular EASY RIDER, but novels have lagged behind. People who are cool don't write anymore, they make banal movies.

Still the public reads, although what they read (witness the popular novelists of the day--Suzanne, Robbins, Segal) isn't very good. Youth culture was wide open market for those tired with Hollywood and the Jet Set, and I had a feeling that Don Mitchell was a shrewd middle-aged writer who with THUMB TRIPPING had taken advantage of this subject matter by writing a bad novel about it.

I was wrong, Don Mitchell is a contemporary of mine. It's just that he writes like a fifty year old man. He's written (if you're up on your "hip" cliches, you may have guessed) the story of two college students who spend a summer together hitching up and down the California coast. Being clever Mitchell has his leading characters Gary and Chay meet while on acid and, after spending some time together, decide to take to the highway.

It's probably not intentional, but Gary and Chay are hardly likeable. He's a total paranoid with a touch of masochism. He must be to continually take rides from people whom he's so suspicious and afraid of. In some circles this is called "experiencing life as it is". Luckily for Mr. Mitchell these circles are known as publishing houses.

Chay isn't out to experience anything more than Gary. She remains in the background (or on her back) continually making mindless remarks prefaced by such expressions as "Right on", "Far out", "Oh wow", and an occasional "heavy". Her function is that of a reference point; since neither Woodstock, Altamont, Kent State, of the phases "Out Now" or "Free All Political Prisoners" are mentioned by Chay, I date the story as taking place sometime in the mid-Sixties.

The novel is comprised of stories about the people who pick this joyful couple up as they hitch. These people are obnoxious or horny (or both) and Gary and Chay must hassle with them. The person whose hassled the most though is the reader, for all this gets extremely boring, especially when they are picked up by nearly every stereotype expected to be found in Southern California culture.

First there's the aging "hippie" couple, Sol and Sandra Silverman (Mark should sue), who are trying with little success to "turn on" their nine year old son. The kid's all right, he's the only bearable character in the entire book, that is until the end. Here his parents have corrupted him by slipping him quarter tabs of acid with his Bosco and the kid becomes a mindless cretin muttering remarks like "Wow, all our belly buttons are inside out." Heavy.

From here there's the usual assortment of weird types who are out there picking up hitchhikers. Toni, the mystic homosexual who attempts to make our hero, and Diesel, the speed-addicted truck-driver who makes futile attempts to buy Chay. There are others whose motives are less explicit and must be viewed through the fog of Gary's paranoia.

If all this isn't bad enough, the novel is one of Social Significance. It's found in every chapter as the characters are forever discussing drugs and "hippies". The point being those over Thirty just don't understand. Mitchell is a clever writer, he must read Time and Newsweek every week. I think they labeled this The Generation Gap back in 1966.

Finally Mitchell offers cogent proof that this chasm isn't just an editorial writer's dream. Near the end of the book Gary and Chay get wrecked with a middle-aged business man who "freaks", so to speak, proving once and for all that stereotypes run deep and true.

Partly it's this falseness that makes THUMB TRIPPING so utterly contemptible. Take, for example, the reactions to the frequently used drugs. These resemble the kind found on a Look Magazine Drug Chart for the worried parent. With my limited knowledge on the subject, I have never known a 10 mil. dexedrine to have the cataclysmic effect they had on Gary and Chay. It's hardly often people trip on diet pills.

THUMB TRIPPING is also detestable because it's a poorly constructed, poorly executed, written novel. Gary and Chay are hardly developed as characters; the events seem contrived; everyone sounds, in description or conversation, hopelessly cliched; and the dialogue is hackneyed. Witness this revelation Gary makes, it's characteristic of what the novel's like throughout:

"'Me too,' belched Gary. This trip was already heavy, and he knew it might turn into a bummer. But he found all his bummers irresistable: freaking, he knew he's gone as far as he could with a person, a scene. To pull our sooner was a shuck, and maybe someday he'd stop freaking. Maybe he'd become like Chay. If not, he'd still be addicted to the hitching."

Trip, Heavy, Bummer, Freaking; it's positively spooky that someone could seriously be able to put all these trite expressions in a few short phrases. I could see it as a joke, or perhaps an entry to a Frank Zappaish contest in which you must see how many of these garbled expressions you can place in twenty-five words or less, but not in a serious work of fiction, about today's youth.

Then again, THUMB TRIPPING may not have been written for me. Someone obviously like it, it was published and a film is being made of it. There are some good blurbs in the front of the book (although they seem strained), which leads me to finally want to play Mitchell's game and conjure up a clinched image.

Come this summer I can see on a beach in Dennisport, a somewhat fat, middle-aged woman wearing orange sunglasses, Peace sign pierced earrings, and a tight Filene's two piece bathing suit which effectively highlights her expansive middle, blinding white in the morning sun. She's sitting alone reading THUMB TRIPPING and is loving it. After all, it was written for her.

THE CONFESSIONS OF NAT TURNER by William Styron; Signet; $1.25

The last ten years have probably seen the appearance of more literature by and about black America than in all the rest of our history combined. There have been the memoirs, the calls to revolution, the fiction and the poetry and the telling-it-like-it-is by people like Carmichael. The Civil Rights movement, which began in 1954 with the Brown decision and died a temporary death with the failure of the Civil Rights Act of '66 and the election two years later of Richard Nixon, has had its historians. There also has been a reaching back towards an understanding of the beginnings of black American experience, slavery.

James Baldwin writes that the American black man is irreversably separated in culture from his African ancestors, his feelings while they might be black, are also American. Perhaps he notes, perhaps years and years ago the journey back might have been possible, but no more.

This, then, is the contribution of THE CONFESSIONS OF NAT TURNER: a look into the kind of life which slavery was. It is a novel, an historical one to be sure, but it speaks to us as no sociological or quantitative study ever could about slavery. Nat Turner is the leader of the first and possibly only serious revolt by American slaves, planned, led and peopled by black men. The revolt took place in southeastern Virginia in the summer of 1831; when it was over 59 white men, women and children were dead. The whites who finally overpowered the revolting slaves either sold them to be used in Alabama or Mississippi or Arkansas, or hanged them. To satisfy their curiosity of the revolt's origins and leader, they granted him a short period of time to live before the gallows if he would dictate his confessions. This much is history and it is where Styron begins.

Nat Turner was no ordinary slave. He could read and write and figure; he was good with his hands as with his mind and did carpentry and mechanical work, rather than dirt work at the time of the revolt. He grasped the bible; it was through the holy words and the benevolence and curiosity of an early owner that he learned to read. It was through his preaching, which he took up later in life, through his mystical religiousness that Nat was able to reach the slaves which were to form the revolt.

Turner's rebellion failed. It failed because much less than the number of slaves than he anticipated would join him, many of those who didn't join their white masters in putting him down. It failed, too, because in the crucial moments of battle, Nat lost control of his men to liquor and revelry.

As a southerner who grew up near where the revolt took place, Styron has the feel of the characters. He has been criticized by black authors for making Nat Turner too white, but if one allows that, he must conclude that neither can a black artist successfully deal with a white man's thoughts. James Baldwin, for one, has done a pretty good job of just that in ANOTHER COUNTRY.

THE CONFESSIONS describe almost too well the emotions which flow when a man has nothing left to lose. The characters to which Nat introduces us are disturbing because the uneducated, unskilled, unemployed free black man in the 1830's bears so much resemblance to his decendents a hundred and forty years later.

THE CONFESSIONS OF NAT TURNER, perhaps like many things which are so profound, grows on one slowly. It doesn't stop.

Jazz Great Closes Series

The Dizzy Gillespie Quintet will appear in two concerts on the UMass Amherst campus, April 29 and 30. Each concert, under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council, will be at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Joining illustrious trumpet player Dizzy Gillespie will be Mike Longo on piano; Sam Jones on bass; Rudy Collins on drums; Sonny Henry on guitar, and Potato Valdez on conga drums.

As a composer, bandleader, and trumpet virtuoso, Gillespie has had great influence on the musical scene for more than three decades. A native of Laurinburg, S.C., he had a thorough musical education before migrating to New York City. As a youngster he was soloist in bands led by such stars as Earl Hines and Cab Calloway, and in his early twenties he formed his own band.

Gillespie was an important figure in the birth of "bop", which brought new time signatures and new melodic and harmonic complexities to jazz. With his goatee, dark glasses, and hip humor, he became a virtual symbol of this important musical development.

Long a popular recording artist as well as performer, Dizzy Gillespie recently opened a new vista for himself and his Quintet when they appeared at New York's famed rock ballroom, Fillmore East.

Reserved tickets for the concerts are $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2 for other students; $2.50 for UMass faculty and staff and $3 for the general public. Tickets may be obtained by contacting the Fine Arts Council office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone (413) 545-0202. Mail orders for tickets will be accepted. Please make checks payable to University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Council, and enclose a stamped, self-addressed return envelope.

Yale Slavic and Russian Choruses To Merge Thursday

The UMass Department of Slavic Languages will present a joint concert by the Yale Russian Chorus and the Yale Slavic Chorus on Thursday evening April 22, 1971 in Herter Auditorium 231 at 8:00 p.m.

The Yale Russian Chorus is directed by Daniel Godfrey and is dedicated to communication of two kinds: musical and non-musical. Since its founding fifteen years ago, the Yale-Russian Chorus has involved itself in interest in Russian culture. The Chorus has traveled to the Sovet Union on five occasions under its own initiative with funds raised from concerts and through private sources and on these occasions sang Russian music informally on street corners and in parks. The members were offered a unique opportunity to learn about Soviet life at first hand and also to exchange ideas about society, art and science in America. The Yale-Russian Chorus won first prize at the International Choral Festival at Lille, France in 1962 and in 1968 was received with enormous enthusiasm at a choral festival in Yugoslavia.

The Yale Slavic Chorus was formed under the auspices of the Russian Chorus last season. In spite of its relative youth, the Yale Slavic Chorus has achieved a certain prominence for its concerts and embraces Yugoslavian folk songs, Russian folk songs and liturgical music within its repertorie. The Yale Slavic Chorus is under the direction of William Robbins.

This joint concert by the Yale Russian Chorus and the Yale Slavic Chorus is open to the public without charge and brings to the attention of area music lovers one of the most interesting singing groups in the East.

Ruling Clears Way For Trial In Wisconsin Abortion Case

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court set aside today a ruling by a three-judge federal court in Milwaukee that Wisconsin's abortion law is unconstitutional.

The 8-1 action clears the way for prosecution of a Milwaukee gynecologist, Sidney G. Babbitz, on charges of performing an abortion on a 23-year-old woman.

The three-judge court ruled in March 1970 that the state law violates the privacy rights of women. In November it enjoined Wisconsin officials from prosecuting Dr. Babbitz or any other physician who ends a pregnancy before the fetus has "quickened." This generally does not occur until the fourth month.

In vacating the ruling the Supreme Court cited a series of its own decisions in February that prohibits federal courts from intervening in state prosecutions except in special situations. The case was returned to the U.S. District Court in Milwaukee for reconsideration.

Wisconsin had appealed the ruling to the high court. Its attorney general, Robert W. Warren, defended the law and attacked the federal court's intervention.

The Wisconsin law permits abortions only when they are performed by a physician in order to save the life of the mother. Violators are subject to up to 3 years in prison and a $5,000 fine.

The three-judge court based its ruling on the Ninth Amendment, which it said gave women a right of privacy "to decide whether she should carry or reject an embryo which has not quickened."

"The police power of the state does not...entitle it to deny the woman" this right, court said. The ruling also declared "the mother's interests are superior to that of an unquickened embryo."

Atty. Gen. Warren, in appealing, disputed that the Ninth Amendment establishes privacy rights that are superior to state laws. He also argued that "nowhere in the text of the Constitution did the Framers provide that an expectant mother has a right to destroy her unborn child."

Justice William O. Douglas dissented form the Supreme Court's refusal to hold a hearing at this point.

Opportunity Open For Senior Honors Study

All members of the class of '72 who have a cumulative average of 3.0 or above are eligible to participate in the Senior Honors Program. According to W. Brian O'Connor, Acting Director of Honors, a senior honors project replaces six or nine semester hours of course work, O'Connor said. It results in an undergraduate thesis prepared under the direction of one faculty member together with a committee of two additional faculty members, he explained.

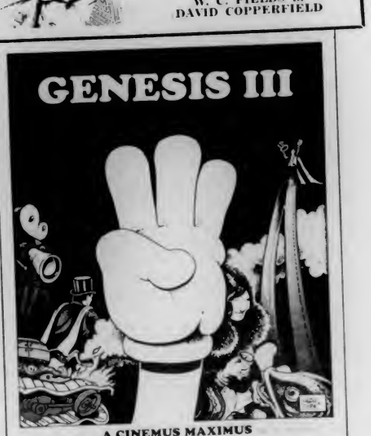
A student who successfully completes a project will be graduated with departmental honors and have an appropriate citation noted on his transcript, he added.

The project facilitates close student faculty relations, individual research and the selection of a special problem in which the student is interested, O'Connor said. The work involved in an honors project usually entails more time and effort than the courses replaced, he continued. The satisfaction of completing a major study on a topic that is personally interesting is most rewarding and a challenge, he said.

A special table in the Honors Office (Machmer E-23) contains additional information about the program plus forms to be completed by those who wish to participate. It is suggested that the interested student seek out an advisor in his department and obtain his approval before the student indicates to the Honors Office that he is interested. Also, students who have a 2.6 or above and have the approval of their department may request further information.

Announce Summer Job Openings

The Placement Office wishes to announce some summer jobs available. A camp near Albany, N.Y. needs the following counselors: general male, tennis, arts and crafts, horseback riding, water skiing, trip counselor. For more details on these leads, go to the Placement Office. Also, there are six internships available through the National Trust for Historic Preservation. This organization works to preserve American historical sites, buildings and objects. The jobs will be at the headquarters in Washington, D.C. or at the house museums. It's a ten-week program beginning in mid-June. The application in resume form is due by May 7, and should be sent to Miss Patricia E. Williams, Archivist, Nat'l Trust for His Preservation, 748 Jackson Place, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006



A sample resume may be obtained in the Placement Office for those who need help writing one.

The Career Planning Council, newly formed from the Student Senate Services Committee, is the students' contact with the Placement administrators. Its goals are set to be establishing some kind of communication link between the Placement Office, the service it has available to the students, and the uninformed studentbody. Career Planning touches every student, but unfortunately for many students they never know this service is available until it's too late. Students are urged to receive career planning information in their Sophomore or Junior years. Anyone who is interested in informing himself and his fellow students about Career Planning, please consider participating in the Career Planning Council. JV's End Slump With 6-1 Win

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

WORCESTER—For nearly seven innings it looked as though the UMass JV's would escape the frigid confines of Worcester with its first win, but an explosive six run seventh followed by a sentimental four run eighth enabled Worcester Academy to put the wood to the Little Redmen, 10-4, in near freezing opening game temperatures last Wednesday.

Over the long weekend, the JV's did manage however to chalk up their first win behind the efforts of Irosh fireballer John Olsen and the bat of Mike Phillips. After being blanked Saturday afternoon, 6-0, by cross-town rival Amherst and the slants of Chris Williams, the Redmen came back for win number one yesterday afternoon over Worcester Junior College, 6-1.

Olsen blitzed the visitors with a blazing fastball as the tall righthander, loaned from Coach Dick Bergquist's staff for some extra work, yielded only three hits and a harmless tally in eight impressive frames. Olsen fanned seven of the first nine adversaries and 15 in all enroute to a masterful performance. Steve Merrill worked the ninth flawlessly to pick up the save.

After shaky starter Bill Daily stranded 12 men in the first five frames including nine in the first three, the Redmen finally put it together for five decisive runs in the sixth and the game.

Mike Phillips split the power alley in left-center for a line drive three run triple to highlight the stanza. Fred Kielbasa chased home the other run on an infield dribbler and had the other Redman "ribby" with a bases loaded walk as UMass chalked up its first win.

But Redman hurlers Ed Kurr and Eric Levine found the offensive support lacking as UMass dropped its first two contests. The JV's will try to rebound against Amherst tomorrow in the rematch, but the capper had to be the season's opener at Worcester.

After sharp lefthander Merrill pitched near perfect one-hit ball for four frames, the hosts came alive to rack Merrill's predecessor Ed Kurr for six runs on five hits in the seventh frame. The outburst obliterated a 2-0 Redman lead.

Second baseman Bill Moan chased home Ken Brewer, who had singled, with a sharp baseknock to right for the first tally of the year in the third.

As Merrill and Kurr silenced Worcester Academy's bats on only two hits for the first six innings, the visitors herded home run number two in the sixth on Steve Newell's sacrifice fly to center plating Kurr who singled to center and advanced on Tony Serino's infield hit.

Apparently numbness set in as Kurr brought calamity in the sixth with the game winning rally. A two runch pinch triple by Pandy Andy triggered the uprising which featured run scoring singles by Fred Tan and Greg Pojani along with a wind blown RBI triple by Joe Duffey.

While starter Steve Fredette kept the visitors at bay, reliever Steve Bain watched his fastball get painted black and blue with four more runs in the eight. The crusher in the frame was provided by Duffey who ripped a prodegous three run line drive home run to right center to close out the victors scoring.

The Little Redmen tried gamely to get back into the affair in the top of the stanza with a two digit package. Consecutive doubles by Rick Hansen and Ed Hamel followed by Tony Serino's run scoring single to left only helped to augment a 10-4 final.

Give credit to starter Steve Fredette who weathered the freezing elements to win in the nine frames while allowing four runs on seven hits, walked six and struck out five.

Mejia Sprints To B.A.A. Victory

BOSTON (AP)—Unheralded Alvaro Mejia of Colombia outkicked Irish Pat McMahon after a long elbow-to-elbow duel and sprinted to a 20-yard victory yesterday in the 75th Boston A.A. Marathon.

The 30-year-old Mejia and McMahon broke out of a sixman pack after 18 miles and waged a tension-packed road battle the rest of the way.

Mejia finally got the edge in the final mile and finished the 26-mile, 385-yard Patriots Day classic in 2 hours, 18 minutes, 45 seconds.

McMahon, the third place finisher in 2:14.53 last year, was favored to win in the Hopkinton to Boston run.

However, the mild weather-and the hot competition left him little at the end and he finished five seconds behind Mejia.

A former Irish Olympic runner and a graduate of Oklahoma Baptist, the 29-year-old McMahon, now a school teacher in nearby Lowell, edged in front by a couple of strides about 1 1/2 miles to go.

Mejia, who scored a stunning victory over Australia's Ron Clark and the Russians in a pre-Olympic 10,000 meter run in Mexico City in 1966, appeared to be faltering.

However, he dug into his reserve and managed to overtake McMahon.

Mejia, an unemployed metal worker from Redwood City, Calif., is married to Terry Stickell, a former U.S. Olympic team diver.

Mejia and McMahon were locked in a duel with Finland's Seppo Nikkari and Markku Salminen, Byron Lowry of San Francisco, and John Vitale, of New Haven, Conn., at the 4th checkpoint, 17 3/4 miles from the start, in Auburndale.

Then the pack hit the first of three hills and Mejia and McMahon made their move, gradually opening a 75-yard lead.

They continued to pull away on the second hill and had the race to themselves after "Heartbreak Hill" less than five miles from the finish.

South Africa's John Halverstadt closed strongly after running off the pace most of the way and captured third place in 2:22.23.

Vitale was fourt in 2:22.45, and Lowry fifth in 2:23.20.

Rounding out the top 10 were Art Coolidge of the host BAA, 2:23.23; William Speck of Providence College, 2:23.54; Salminen, 2:24.02; Ron Wallingford of Toronto, 2:24.21 and former Marine Captain Bill Clark of Los Angeles, 2:26.19.

"This was only my second marathon and my biggest problem was blisters," Mejia said. "When we hit the last mile I thought I had it won. Before that I was just waiting.

"I figured McMahon was the man to beat and I finally took the lead I think with 200 yards to go."

Mejia interrupted his running briefly on a couple of times during the race to splash water from rain puddles on the road on his hands and body.

Sox Dropped by Tribe In Extra Innings 5-3

BOSTON (AP)—Roy Foster smashed a two-run homer in the 13th inning yesterday, giving the Cleveland Indians a 5-4 victory over Boston in the Red Sox' annual Patriots Day game.

Foster's first homer of the season, off Bill Lee, the fifth Boston pitcher, followed a leadoff walk to Graig Nettles and broke a 3-3 deadlock.

The Red Sox countered with a run in the bottom of the 13th on singles by Duane Josephson and Billy Conigliaro, a walk and Luis Aparicio's bases-loaded force-play tap before Cleveland reliever Ray Lamb got the final out.

Former Red Sox slugger Ken Harrelson put the Indians in front 3-0 with a three-run homer in the fourth, but Boston came back with two runs in the sixth and an unearned run in the eighth to tie it.

Vada Pinson led off the fourth with a single and stole second. Nettles walked and Harrelson, traded by Boston two years ago to the day, drilled Mike Nagy's first pitch into the left field screen for his first home run of the year.

The Red Sox struck back in the sixth. Reggie Smith walked and Carl Yastrzemski singled him to third. Petrocelli also singled, scoring Smith and sending Yastrzemski to third, but was thrown out by Ted Uhlaender trying for second. George Scott then singled, scoring Yastrzemski.

A walk, an error and a single by Scott tied it for Boston in the eighth.

Orange Dampers Red Over Weekend

By BRONA SIMON

SYRACUSE, N.Y.—Saturday the supermen of Syracuse University and a spunky Georgetown eight dominated the waters of Lake Onondaga, leaving the UMass oarsmen to a long, quiet, contemplatory bus ride home with no laurels of first place. Finishing at best in the two-spot of the junior varsity race, statistically the record book will not give the total story of Redman performances.

After the finish line was streaked solid orange from Syracuse rowers in the first three races UMass had entered, the final event pitted the varsity shells of UMass, Syracuse, and Georgetown in the most exciting and tense competition the good-sized home crowd and UMass contingency would get anxious over on a mild, sunbathing-type day.

With the disappointments of the first three races clinging to the hull of the varsity's shell, the senior Redmen, Dave Richard, Al Flanders, Joe Piela, Kevin O'Brien, Bob Weimar, Tom Mone, Ted Fitzpatrick, Jeff Allen, and coxswain Chris Jedrey, shook loose the burden, rowed their best so far this year and kept (the race as tight as it possibly could be: the bows of the three shells were in a straight line with no one giving away. When the crews came into respectable viewing distance of the spectators, the Redmen had a few inches lead. This was at about the 1500 meter mark of a 2000 meter course. Then Georgetown started a tremendous sprint and pulled ahead of UMass and Syracuse.

About a boat length behind, the Orangemen increased their stroking vehemently, while aspiring for one more victory to make their day perfect. But their sprint began just a little too late, and Georgetown's kryptonite did its stuff to crossss the line at 6:21.9, just four tenths of a second ahead of the supermen in orange jerseys, who were still surging at 6:22.3.

In the meantime, the Redmen had lost their endurance in the wake of the hydraulic machines, simply because physically they were not prepared to row so fast so far, but worked admirably to finish only five seconds behind the lead, at 6:27.2 which is a commendable performance and an exceptional time.

If you could forget about Syracuse who had an indisputable lead in the junior varsity contest, the race between UMass jv's and Georgetown's was quite good. Neck and neck for most of the way, the Redmen's impressive power stroking settled the decision for second place, as Paul Winchell, Mel Streim, Clay Morin, Doug Thompson, Chris Hodson, Steve Kinner, Bill Moran, Rick Jones, and cox Kenny Raymond rushed to the finish line at 6:30 and conquered Dad Vail point champions Georgetown, who lagged at 6:36.2. The Orange, of course, had already zoomed in at 6:21.5.

Positioned against freshmen whose caliber was unknown to UMass crew heads, the Little Redmen did not fare as well as their big brothers.

In the opening race, Syracuse freshmen had open water on UMass frosh combination of Mark Brown, Steve Ryan, Rich Jamara, Joseph Labenski, Jim Ulwick, Tom Rurak, John Gombar, Bob Sanderson, and cox Mike Thompson, for the whole race. The younger Orange, who had rowed in high school, showed their lengthy experience in crew with a 6:31 time, to the 6:54 by Little Redmen whose newness to the water could not expect them to overcome near-experts.

This same type of race was recreated when another set of freshmen, this time including Georgetown, resulted in Syracuse once again showing its superman abilities, at 6:32.4. Georgetown followed in at 6:52.3, and UMass frosh, Phil Kenney, John Curtis, Chris Kudla, John Lund, Rich Clair, Jim Kennedy, Russ Schott, and Kevin Kaylor, coxed by Jody Lianides, punched the clock at 7:01.

The emphasis on crew in the Syracuse area is astoundingly strong. Every high school and college have their own little boathouse and practice as if rowing were the American sport instead of baseball. It is no wonder that Syracuse has such a superior crew team. Most of their oarsmen are even scouted while rowing in high school.

On this side, however, the Redmen are making due of their water time which a wicked winter had been reluctant to give them, to improve and ready themselves even more for a meet this Saturday against Marist and St. Joseph's.

Trackmen Lag As Huskies Cop 2nd Straight BC Games

Northeastern for the second year in a row is the winner of the Boston College Relays. Northeastern finished with a total of 61 points. Dartmouth, the runner up, scored 35 points while Boston College, the host team, rounded out the top three with 27 points.

UMass finished a disappointing ninth with 19 points. UMass did score in nine relays which was second to only Northeastern who placed in eleven events. The team's poor finish was not overshadowed by the fact that only two weeks ago the Redmen lost to Northeastern by a slim three point margin. Also during the indoor season the UMass Redmen soundly defeated second place Dartmouth by a 73 to 31 margin.

Coach O'Brien said, "The team showed great potential, but needs polishing up. The team is close, but not close enough as yet to be considered a leading contender for New England honors."

The 440 relay and 880 relay are examples of the team's potential. The Redmen placed fourth in both relays, and were only .7 seconds out of first place in both races. The difference in time between first and fourth was due to poor baton passing.

The Redmen were heavy favorites in the 480 yard shuttle relay, but the second leg of the relay, Bob Landry fell on the last hurdle. UMass dropped to fifth, but did set a new school record. Freshmen Doug O'Connell and Roger Tasatka gave strong accounts of themselves as they placed eighth and tenth, respectively.

Eddie Arcaro broke the school shotput record for the second meet in a row as he led the shotput team to a third place finish. Arcaro also led the hammer team to its third place finish. Peter Natti and Arcaro teamed up in the discus relay to capture another third place finish for the Redmen cause.

The long jump team finished third behind the efforts of Rip Dyer, Ed Shaughnessy and Mark Robinson. Rocco Petitto led the javelin team to a fifth place finish while the high jump team placed fourth. The mile relay team rounded out the scoring with a fifth place finish.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer youngsters often write me about their school grades. The grades are erratic, going up and down. It is important for teachers to realize that children born under this zodiacal sign are really interested, but very restless. Some educators take birth dates into consideration when assessing the potential of a child. More educators should become familiar with astrology.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Much that occurs may be shrouded in mystery. Be wary of one who speaks only off the record. Some facts must be for the record. Otherwise, you may find yourself standing alone.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some of your fondest desires can be fulfilled. You have backing. Go ahead. Refuse to be discouraged by one of little faith. You have knockout punch. You can put across unique plan, program.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Obtain valid hint from Taurus message. Stress is on performance. What you do now will be appreciated by one in position of authority. Spotlight on potential and promotion; you make solid advance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your intuition is active. You cut through deadwood and get to source. Trust inner feelings. Ignore one who procrastinates, makes promises but does nothing. Get going on your own.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What you thought was part of past may, like legendary phoenix, rise again. Keep mind open. Some may startle with unusual requests, theories. Don't cast first stone. You'll get fair share.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lie low. Observe rather than assert. Be flexible. Sagittarius individual will aid. Key is expansion. Refuse to stand still. You must time moves. Take it easy, but go forward.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Emphasize practicality. Don't play games with security. One who tempts, promises is not for you. Know this and respond accordingly. Have fun, but don't risk capital. You will understand.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You can show off best qualities. Good lunar aspect coincides now with creativity, love, intensified relations with opposite sex. You get green light from one you admire, respect.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Home, environment, relations with family members are spotlighted. Build for security. Refuse to heed siren call of irresponsibility. You get proposal which deserves careful consideration.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be versatile. Realize that ideas can be numerous but total concept is special. You will understand. Neighbor is likely to tell tall story. Maintain sense of humor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be aware of what is of real substance. Don't fall for fast talker. Ask to see, hear and test facts. By being realistic, you gain respect and money. Know this and proceed accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Emphasize the new. Encourage one who has ideas. You benefit from fresh approach. Leave the past; concentrate on potential of future. You now begin to go places.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you appreciate music, may also have talent in this direction. You will find that a move, domestic adjustment made this year will be beneficial. You can be stubborn. But charm overcomes and most persons find you extremely attractive.

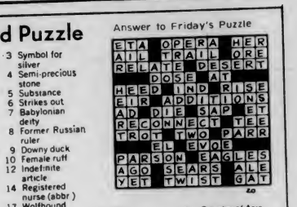
Cambridge Parker's Heaven

CAMBRIDGE (AP)—Cambridge is illegal parkers' heaven. The police have run out of parking tickets.

To make matters worse, they don't know when they'll get in a new supply.



Middlesex County prints the tickets, and until the legislature approves the country's 1971 budget, county officials say it won't have enough money to insue any new ones.

Cambridge is the county' most lucrative parking ticket market. Last year, illegal parkers in the city returned $359,121.

Redmen Sweep Three From UVM

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

Doing what it does best-pitch, run and play defense-the UMass baseball team went on the warpath over the weekend and came away with a resounding three game, three shutout sweep of the Vermont nine, 3-0, 9-0, and 7-0 at Varsity Field.

Originally scheduled as an away series at Vermont, it was moved to Amherst due to a blizzard in Burlington that left the Vermont field better suited for sledding than for baseball.

Keeping with the weather trend of the past few weeks, both teams had to put up with extreme cold and wind that left only the snow covering missing from a complete duplication of the Vermont scene.

It's been said that pitching is 75 percent of the game and anyone who braved the elements to attend all three games will testify that coach Dick Bergquist got a complete 75 percent of the game effort from his staff.

Vermont came into the weekend with a team batting average of .315 against strong pitching on its southern trip and this included some big bats down the order averaging .400 or above.

Well, all the Catamounts could muster off the Redman staff was 10 hits, all singles, including a majority on the "bleeder" side and to top this off only one Catamount was able to reach third base and this was in the last inning of the last game. In a nutshell, the Cats did zero.

While the Vermont offense was put to rest the UMass attack gained momentum throughout the series and by the end of the last game the Redman offense still winging away at the Vermont pitchers.

Clutch hits, bunts, hit and run, steaking bases, power shots. Name it and if it had anything to do with offense the Redman nine probably did it during the series.

In an effort to field a healthy nine for each game Bergquist shuttled his lineups around and in doing so didn't take any of the mustard away from the Redman attack.

On the field near-perfection was also the name of the game as the Redmen committed only one error, that coming on an attempted pickoff throw. On the other hand Vermont was fumbling its way to defeat committing a dozen errors in the three games.

Tom White got the Redman off and winging on Saturday in the first game, hurling a sparkling one-hitter-a little ground ball between first and second by the pitcher in the fifth-striking out 15 in a complete game outing by the big lefthander.

Throwing 147 pitches White opened strong and finished strong striking out the last five Catamount batters. He also contributed two hits.

Single runs in the first, eighth and ninth were the margin of victory for the Redmen. Vermont starter Dave Ertz, who turned in the strongest visiting stint, gave the Redmen only two singles, both coming in the second inning before tiring in the last two innings when the Redmen struck for two runs on five hits.

Ertz was let off the hook in the first two innings stranding five Redmen including three in the first when he walked the first three UMass batters, hit the fourth man to force in a run and then got the next three men out.

A single by freshman shortstop Ed McMahon drove in Mark Palau with the second run in the eighth and a single by Jack Conroy in the ninth drove in Charley Manley who also scored the first run, with the third run.

What came out of this first game were two trends. First Redman pitching was more than equal to the .315 Vermont average and second the Redman were ready to beat the Catamounts at their type of game, running.

On Sunday a doubleheader was played and by the end of the first game Vermont was about ready to pack it up and head back to Burlington.

Tom King got the starting nod for game one and pitched seven scoreless innings, striking out seven, walking six and allowing only four hits, three of which didn't leave the infield.

Lou Colabello finished up for King and got the save with a fine two inning performance for the senior lefthander who took another step in regaining the form that made him a standout two years back.

The Redman opened with a single in the first inning and came back in the fourth and fifth innings to bust the game open with seven runs.

The second game had freshman Chip Baye on the mound and he delivered to the tune of a six-inning one hitter to run his season's performance only two hits allowed in 16 innings on the mound.

His last ball was humming and when he threw his curve it was all over for the Catamounts.

Jack Bernardo, coming off a disappointing performance against UConn, pitched like Jack Bernardo in this game and finished out the last three innings giving up three hits, but most importantly displaying the control that has been his trademark.

For the two games the names of Charlie Manley, Brian Martin, Jack Conroy, Bill Ryan, Jim Saracino, Ed McMahon, Jim Kiley and Tom McDermott stand out as the big producers in the total Redman demolition of the Catamounts.

Manley and Conroy taught the Cats what baseball speed was all about as Manley ran his stolen base streak to 14 without being caught, and with two also had three hits while Conroy got on base seven of 11 times at bat in the two games.

Martin knocked in two runs in the first game and made a circus catch at the rightfield wall to add to his effort.

Ryan and McDermott split the chores behind the plate and for pitchers to perform as they did the catchers deserve much of the credit. To top this off Ryan hit an inside the park home run which the big cateher "legged out".

Saracino and Kiley got their first chance to play in a while and made the best of it. Saracino had a flawless day in the field at second base and also had a couple of big hits while Kiley was likewise smooth at third base while ripping a couple of shots for hits in both games.

In all it was a complete team effort for UMass. Everyone who saw action made his contribution to the Redman attack. It was undoubtedly a long ride back to wintersville for the Catamounts on Sunday night.

Bullets Take Series

NEW YORK (AP)—Fred Carter's decisive jump shot ended two years of frustration for the Baltimore Bullets as they eliminated the defending champion New York Knicks from the National Basketball Association playoffs with a dramatic 93-91 victory last night.

Carter's basket with 1:08 to play put the Bullets ahead 93-89 and they clung desperately to the edge in the final seconds to win the best-of-7 series, four games to three.

The victory put the Bullets into the championship series against the Milwaukee Bucks, the Western winner, starting Wednesday night in Milwaukee in the first game of another best-of-7 affair.

The Knicks, who had eliminated the Bullets in the playoffs the past two years, took the game to the final second after Walt Frazier's basket shortly after Carter's made the score 93-91.

After Dave DeBusschere of the Knicks and Carter traded missed shots, Gus Johnson of the Bullets was called for traveling and New York had the ball with 11 seconds to go. But Bill Bradley's desperation, off-balance shot from the corner fell short.

Earl Monroe, whose seven points in the final quarter kept the Bullets ahead, except for one brief momement, finished with 26 points. Jack Marin added 20.

It was Monroe's basket and a rebound by Marin with 1:48 to play that put the Bullets ahead for good 91-88.

This is the first time the Bullets have made the NBA championship finals since 1948.

Dick Barnett topped the Knicks with 26 points. An aching Willis Reed, troubled throughout the series with a painful shoulder and needing two pain-killer shots in his knee for this game, scored 24.

Stickmen Romp Over Weekend

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

Garber's Gorilla's are rolling now. After dominating Middlebury in 13-5 fashion last Thursday UMass felled the Boston Lacrosse Club 11-3 in a Friday night exhibition game. Saturday's fiasco was much of the same as UMass overwhelmed Tufts 24-1.

"I thought that we played progressively better with each game. In Middlebury we played well, and just missed a lot of shots, it could have really been a runaway," said Coach Garber. "Against Boston, we had all kinds of chances in the first half," Garber continued, "similar to the game against the English, but we had troubles finding the net early."

Then the Tufts romp saw the Gorilla's really put it together, shooting well, stick-handling well, just a "beautiful team effort."

In Vermont, the Middlebury affair started off slowly, much to the consternation of the Redmen. Phil Sheridan gathered in a Lou Marinacci feed at 4:28 of the opening period to start the day's scoring. Sheridan scored his second of four goals less than six minutes later as Charley Hardy assisted making the lead 2-0. Middlebury struck right back, just 10 seconds before the period's end, and when the home club scored first in quarter number two the game was tied.

Four Redmen goals snapped the 2-2 deadlock, but the 6-2 halftime score was secure for a short while. After John Nagle chalked up his first goal of the season, Middlebury answered with two scores, and at 7-4, the stickmen were wondering whether their multitude of shots would ever pay off.

Finally it did, as Paul Ritch scored the third of his game high five goals. Then the fourth quarter saw UMass dazzle the home club's goalie five more times running out the clock while scoring their first victory of the season.

Even the 13-5 margin betrays the domination that took place. "It easily could have been 23-5," said Coach Garber, as UMass had a hard time keeping their shots on net.

Friday night's exhibition game had an added attraction in that snow flurries were falling throughout. Again the Redmen had troubles getting untracked, but by hall number two things were completely in control.

A 3-1 halftime lead moved to 11-3 by game's end on the back of two goals by Paul Wickman, Kevin Bush, and John Gannon. The Boston Lacrosse Club lived up to their expectations of being a physical ballclub, but UMass' stick-handling was too much for them.

Saturday's afternoon game meant three games in three days, but UMass hardly showed the effects. With their first stringer's playing only one-half of the game, the stickmen hit the Tufts goalie exactly where he was most vulnerable, high to both sides.

Garber's Gorilla's shot well, ran well and did justabout everything right. They even started quickly. Sheridan had another big day, this time managing six goals, scoring his first three inside within the opening six minutes.

Five first quarter goals later, and Tufts had given up. The 8-0 margin after the first 15 minutes dismantled Tufts, as they fell apart rapidly, wilting to the Redmen pressure.

The second quarter saw four more scores and the third quarter saw a 15 minute barrage, with UMass collecting 12 goals in the quarter. Finally, with minute's left in the game, Tufts managed a score, as the UMass third string goalie had appeared to make the save, only to drop the ball into his own net.

Prep Star Comes to UM

The future of UMass basketball received a big boost last Thursday when it was announced by head coach Jack Leaman that Bill Endicott, a 6'2 1/2" guard-forward from Laurel Crest Prep School (Bristol, Conn.) via Somerville High would be attending UMass in the fall.

Endicott played under Walter Perry in his high school days for Somerville and led his team in his senior year to the semi-finals of the state tourney while earning all state honors.

This past season he led his prep team to the New England Prep School Championship and was also picked to the New England All-Tourney first team.

Playing for coach Duke Benz, who is also the Athletic Director of the school, Endicott averaged 16 points per game in a little over a half's action per contest, the reason for this being that his team was so good that its fast break and pressing style of play broke most of the games open by the half allowing the starters to rest.

Leaman calls Endicott "a player in the mold of former Redman great Ray Ellerbrook. He's a great lefthanded shooter and is exceptionally quick. He's an outstanding addition to the UMass basketball program."

In choosing UMass over Georgia, Endicott will be following in the footsteps of a line of fine Somerville players who have played their college ball at UMass. These include Peter Gayeska, Joe Disarcina and John Olsen from this year's freshman squad.

ONE RETIRES, TWO ASPIRE—Outgoing Student Senate President Glenn Elters (right) chairs his last Senate meeting as the Senate met last night in a special meeting to wrap up the budget for next year. Elections will be held tomorrow night for new Senate officers, and one of the gentlemen on the left will be the next Senate President. Budget Act Passed

Senate Prexy Elters Resigns

Student Senate President Glenn Elters resigned his office at last night's special Senate meeting during heated debate over the final passage of the Budget Act for next year. The resignation followed the Senate's rejection of the recommended Act, but was then followed by the Senate's reconsideration and approval of the total budget.

Elters resigned with the following words: "I'm not going to represent this body any longer. I resign as your President. I will remain as a Senator because I do want to represent the students. But I cannot represent this body. I am appalled by this body tonight and you obviously don't need me. But as a last message, I implore you to pass this Budget Act, which is the best I have seen in my years at the University."

The Act, as approved on the reconsideration, will create a probable Student Activity Tax of $36.50 for next year. Most of those Senators who debated to defeat the Budget Act cited their concern that the student body as a whole would not like the Act as it stood. They felt there were too many small, special interest groups being funded which do not provide a service to the campus as a whole. They mentioned that they doubted that many of the groups in the Act would receive student tax funds if the matter were put to a student vote.

Vice President Patricia Beharry automatically became Acting President with Elters' resignation. Officer elections are scheduled for this evening's regular meeting of the Senate. The newly elected officers will take office in one week.

Provision for salaries for Senate officers has been made in the Senate's budget for next year, pending the results of a referendum to be held the first week in May. The Senate did this by adding a category for the necessary funds at a total of $3825. This would compensate the President at $125/month, and the two Vice-Presidents and Treasurer at $100/month, for nine months. A binding clause prohibits expenditure of the funds unless the student body acts favorably in the referendum.

Plans for a University Senate have been dropped by the commission which had drawn up a proposed constitution for a unicameral body. A University Senate would replace the Faculty, Graduate and Undergraduate Senates. The Commission's proposal had been scheduled for further consideration by the three Senates and ultimately by their constituencies, but the Commission has withdrawn it, deeming further consideration pointless.

In its final report issued April 16 and read to the Senate last evening, the Commission said that it is withdrawing its plan from formal consideration because faculty sentiment has shifted decisively away from a university senate and because student sentiment seemed only lukewarm. The commission based this judgment on its observation of the reaction of the two Senates. The Commission considers itself discharged unless otherwise instructed by the senates which established it.

Variety Of Poets Read Today

A Noted Irish Writer

Thomas Kinsella, who reads at 4:30 and 8:45 at the south steps of the Campus Center, was born in Dublin, Ireland in 1928. He resigned from a civil position in 1965 to come to America. Kinsella is author of Another September, Downstream, and The Tain, published by the Oxford University Press. His most recent book, Notes from the Land of the Dead, will be published later this year.

ANOTHER SEPTEMBER

Dreams fled away, this country bedroom, raw
With the touch of the dawn, wrapped in a minor peace.
Hears through an open window the garden draw
Long pitch black breaths, lay bare its apple trees,
Ripe pear trees, brambles, windfall-sweetened soil.
Exhale rough sweetness against the starry slates.
Nearer the river sleeps St. John's, all toil
Locked fast inside a dream with iron gates.

Domestic Autumn, like an animal
Long used to handling by those countrymen,
Rubs her kind hide against the bedroom wall
Sensing a fragrant child come back again
—Not this half-tolerated consciousness
That plants its grammar in her yielding weather
But that unspeaking daughter, growing less
Familiar where we fall asleep together.

Wakeful moth-wings blunder near a chair,
Toss their light shell at the glass, and go
To inhabit the living starlight. Stranded hair
Stirs in the still linen. It is as though
The black breathing that billows her sleep, her name,
Drugged under judgment, waned and-bearing daggers
And balances-down the lampless darkness they came,
Moving like women: Justice, Truth, such figures.

THESE LACUSTRINE CITIES

These lacustrine cities grew out of loathing
Into something forgetful, although angry with history.
They are the product of an idea: that man is horrible, for instance.
Though this is only one example.

They emerged until a tower
Controlled the sky, and with artifice dipped back
Into the past for swans and tapering branches,
Burning, until all that bate was transformed into useless love.

Then you are left with an idea of yourself
And the feeling of ascending emptiness of the afternoon
Which must be charged to the embarrassment of others
Who fly by you like beacons.

The night is a sentinel.
Much of your time has been occupied by creative games
Until now, but we have all-inclusive plans for you.
We had thought, for instance, of sending you to the middle of the desert.

To a violent sea, or of having the closeness of the others be air
To you, pressing you back into a startled dream
As sea-breezes greet a child's face.
But the past is already here, and you are nursing some private project.

The worst is not over, yet I know
You will be happy here. Because of the logic
Of your situation, which is something no climate can outsmart.
Tender and insouciant by turns, you see.

You have built a mountain of something.
Thoughtfully pouring all your energy into his single monument.
Whose wind is desire starching a petal,
Whose disappointment broke into a rainbow of tears.

COOLED HEELS LAMENT AGAINST FRIVOLITY, THE MASK OF DESPAIR

Dugan's deathward, darling: you in your unseeable beauty, oh fictitious, legal person, need be only formally concerned, but there is someone to much here,
perspiring in your waiting room.
Because I did not listen when you said,
"Don't call us: we'll call you," your credulous receptionist believes I am a phoney fairy jew capitalist-communist spy for Antichrist, a deviated mal-adjusted lobbyist for the Whiskey Trust, or else accepts me as I am: a fool.
So while I sit here fouling song, wasting my substance on the air, the universe is elsewhere, out the window in the sky. You, in your inner office, Muse, smoking a given, good cigar and swapping dated stories with star-salemen of the soul, refuse to hear my novel pitch
while I sit out here getting old.

10 YEARS LATER

Standing on the leafy bank
On my first day back;
Overlooking hills & ravines
And the river I fished;
I knelt, reached back over

That tumbled a wild green apple.

One bite, and it all came back.

Will Classes Really Be Starting In August?

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

Prime among the topics for consideration at tomorrow's Faculty Senate meeting will be the Space and Calendar Committee's proposal for the 1972-73 academic calendar. Their proposal would have classes beginning in late August with first semester ending before Christmas and finals ending May 16th.

The motion was tabled at last week's meeting, while an additional motion by Prof. Allan Hoffman calling for a study of an autumnal recess was debated and subsequently defeated. Friday's Collegian erroniously stated that Prof. Hoffman's proposal had been approved.

During the course of the Faculty Senate's discussion of the Space and Calendar Committee's report a list of nine objections was given by David Booth the chairman of the committee, representing the objections of his committee towards Prof. Hoffman's proposal. The motion was made that the Hoffman proposal be referred to the Space and Calendar committee for study but it was overwhelmingly defeated. The Committee proposal was then tabled at the request of a faculty member who desired time to poll the members of his department to acquire their views on the subject.

To be discussed tomorrow will be a motion by the committee "That the Faculty Senate adopt Calendar A unanimously recommended by the Space and Calendar Committee for the year 1972-73 with the stipulation that penalties for late registration be waived and that the drop and add period be extended for those students who can demonstrate that they cannot register on Registration Day, and have so notified the Registrar, in writing by the date when tuition payments are due."

The major features and advantages of the proposed calendar are that it completes the first semester before Christmas thus eliminating the most unpopular aspect of the present calendar-that of exams after Christmas, provides three three-day weekends in the fall semester in addition to Thanksgiving, provides for a three week recess between semesters, a second semester beginning on January 15 and ending on May 16 thus allowing an extended summer break. In addition it will also allow some University students to take advantage of interim term offerings at other valley institutions, increase Five College cooperation and allow some faculty members from valley institutions to develop and offer joint courses during the first semester of each year.

Disadvantages of the calendar include eliminating one reading day in both semesters, shortening the traditional examination period of the first semester, working a hardship upon some of the students who have summer employment and limits the ability of students to take courses at non-valley colleges using the interim term.

The Student Senate at it meeting last week approved the committee's proposal by a 25-13-3 vote with those who opposed it, voting not because they opposed the proposal itself but rather feeling that it didnot go far enough-they favored institution of the 4-1-4 proposal, according to Senator John Hogan.

Senate President, Pay Issue, Mobe Funding In General Court

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

Is Glenn Elters legally President of the Under-Graduate Student Senate? This matter and three others were brought up at last Thursday's General Court Hearing. In case involving Mulligan vs UMass Under Grad Senate, the court declared that even though Glenn Elters is no longer a student (Elters graduated last February) he is still eligible to hold the President's office.

After hearing testimony from both the Registrar's Office and Elters and Hartwell, a former Vice President of the Student Senate, the Court denied Mullgan's petition. In making the decision the court cited the Constitution of the Student Government Association which states "The Constitution allows the Senate to extend the enjoyment of certain priviledges of S.G.A. membership, such as the right to hold Senate Office, to individuals who have ceased to be members of the S.G.A. provided that such privileges were originally bestowed when such individuals were members of the S.G.A.

The Student Senate Officers pay issue came up for judgement in the case of Inglis vs The Student Senate. In this case, the General Court ruled that the Coordinator of Student Activities and the Treasurer of the Student Senate were negligent in the Disbursal of retroactive pay to the Senate Officers previous to the Student referendum that rejected the Senate Officer pay resolution. The Court ordered the Treasurer to stop payment on any funds that were to be disbursed under S-137, however the Court insisted that Judicial action would not be instituted to recover funds already disbursed.

The funding of the Mobe was also heard by the Court. In the case of Pantaja vs Student Senate, Pentaja charged that because Mobe requires a person to be against the War in Viet Nam to be eligible to join and that it is a political organization it should not be eligible for Student funds. In it's decision, the court ruled that it was perfectly legal for it to be given funds as long as it is not blatantly political. It also said that the Mobe Constitution was in violation of an individual's freedom of conscience. Mobe's funds were declared frozen until the defect in their Constitution was corrected. The following day they met to revise the Constitution and the funds were immediately restored.

In a final case which was dismissed, Kevin Kulakowski petitioned the Court to declare Senate funding of Drum and Harambe illegal. After a short hearing, Kulakowski asked that the case be dismissed.

NWRO Executive Wiley Speaks on Welfare Today

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

Dr. George A. Wiley, Executive Director of the National Welfare Rights Organization, will speak tonight at 8 in the Campus Center Auditorium with a Coffee Hour to follow at 9 in the Cape Cod Room of the Student Union.

Called by the Washington Post "a flamboyant street-corner orator of high skill", Wiley will speak on the goals of his organization and the problems faced in getting governmental action and needed reform.

The National Welfare Rights Organization, the group Wiley helped form in 1966, sets as its immediate goal the passage of the bill introduced in Congress by Senator Eugene McCarthy which would abolish the present welfare system and introduce a guaranteed adequate income of $5,500. The current income for a family of four is $1600.

The NWRO has grown to become one of the biggest grassroots organizations in the country with 100,000 due paying members and affiliation with 300 local welfare groups across the country.

Dr. George A. Wiley

Wiley was initial in the groups beginning. Long an activist in the Chavez--Abernathy tradition, Wiley served as the Associate National Director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) during 1965-1966. At the time Dr. Wiley joined the staff of CORE, he was Associate Professor of Chemistry at Syracuse University.

In May 1966, Dr. Wiley founded the Poverty/Rights Action Center in Washington D.C., whose purpose was to organize poor people around problems that directly affect their daily lives. In August 1967, the 67 WRO's which had been organized across the country met in Washington to set up the National Welfare Rights Organization, the first national organization of poor people since the 1930's. NWRO designated the Poverty/Rights Action Center as its national headquarters.

Since its conception the group has been instrumental in initiating or helping any legitimate welfare reform to take place in this country.

Co-ed Dorm Proposals Must Be In By Friday

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

Any dormitories considering going co-ed this fall must submit their proposals to Dick Palomba in the Student Affairs Office in Whitmore no later than Friday April 23rd.

A co-ed review commission will review the proposals and set up guidelines, in light of the results of the residential living survey taken in dining commons last week.

The co-ed review commission met yesterday to discuss future plans on co-ed dorms in the University.

Members of the commission include four administrators and six students.

Dick Palomba, an undergraduate has been designated convienor by Vice Chancellor Randolph Bromery.

According to Palomba, it is the responsibility of the committee to review all petitions and proposals for co-ed dorms making decisions on the basis of present guidelines set up by the Board of Trustees.

Another responsibility the commission has is to review all present co-ed dorms and report what their good points and shortcomings are, Palomba continued. He said this should help the dorms improve.

Forty-five per cent of the diners in campus dining commons responded to the residential living survey distributed April 8th, Palomba reported. He said 78% of the respondents favored co-ed dorms and would move to one.

Palomba said these facts have been used to determine the need for more co-ed dorms. He emphasized, however that no dorm could "go coed unless it submits a proposal by Friday."

Got A Gripe? Tape It Up...

A tape recorder will be set-up in front of the Student Union Hatch today through Thursday for students to "gripe" about the University as part of the President's Future University Committee's attempt to increase student input to their report on the future of UMass.

The table will be manned from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. between the old University Store and the Hatch to give students a chance to offer advice and criticism about the present state of the University and what can be done in the future.

The Daily Collegian will be helping in the task by accepting written "gripes" and thoughts C/O "Gripe Letter", Daily Collegian Student Union. All of the letters and tapes will be presented to the Future University Committee.

Vietnam War Lulls

Cambodian Crisis Critical

SAIGON (AP)—Cambodia wrestled with a government crisis Tuesday while its forces battled to hold the nation's only highway to the sea and U.S. B52 bombers hammered enemy troops threatening another important highway to the north.

The focus of the Indochina war switched to Cambodia while action in South Vietnam and Laos hit a momentary lull.

Cambodia's political crisis developed with the resignation of Premier Lon Nol and his Cabinet. Gen. Lon Nol, 57, cited poor health in his letter of resignation to Cheng Heng, the chief of state. Lon Nol, who had served also as minister of defense in his government of National Salvation, suffered a stroke in February, leaving him partially paralyzed.

He returned to the capital of Phnom Penh last month from Honolulu, where he had undergone treatment at a U.S. hospital.

He has headed the Cambodian government since March 18, 1970, when Prince Norodom Sihanouk was removed from office.

On the battle front, the results of fighting for the control on Highway 4, Phnom Penh's sole link to a deepwater port, still were not known, more than a day after enemy forces launched an attack against a weary Cambodian garrison at Pich Nil Pass.

Latest reports indicated that the Cambodians still held the pass, 63 miles southwest of Phnom Penh, the capital, and the heights above it that control the vital highway link to the port of Kompong Som.

U.S. B52 bombers, flying more than 50 missions throughout Indochina in the past two days, attacked enemy positions north of Highway 7 that runs across part of Cambodia north of Phnom Penh from the South Vietnamese border.

There were scattered reports of ground action Tuesday in South Vietnam and Laos.

The U.S. and South Vietnamese operation in the A Shau Valley bordering Laos moved into its second week, but there still were no reports of significant contact with the enemy.

In another development, United Press International said the remains of a woman found last weekend southwest of Phnom Penh are presumed to be those of Kate Webb, 28, the news agency's correspondent in Cambodia. She disappeared nearly two weeks ago in an ambush on Highway 4.

Miss Webb, born in New Zealand but an Australian citizen, is the ninth foreign correspondent known to have been killed in Cambodia since the war spread from Vietnam across the border.

Bringing The War Back Home

WASHINGTON (AP)—Nearly 1,000 fatigue-clad Vietnam veterans demonstrated inside and outside the halls of Congress Tuesday in opposition to the war in Southeast Asia.

After staging a guerrilla theater in which they simulated search-and-destroy tactics near the Old Senate Office Building and on the Capital steps, the group chanted for 10 minutes: "Bring our brothers home, now."

They chanted with clenched fists or plastic toy rifles spinning high over their heads.

Some tourists stopped and watched. Others continued on their way, and this prompted one of the demonstrators to shout: "Stop and watch what we're doing. We're bringing the war home."

Between the staging of theater throughout the day, the members of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, which is conducting a week-long demonstration, visited with their congressmen and attended Senate and House committee hearings.

Several hundred of them jammed into a Senate hearing room and cheered when Sen. George McGovern, (D-S.D.) and others called for an immediate end to the war.

They gave a standing ovation to McGovern's testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Several shouted, "Right on, brother."

"We are all shocked by the barbarism of My Lai, but do we consider the large crime involved in killing several hundred thousand innocent civilians by our massive firepower," McGovern said. "These crimes against humanity are on the scale of those that led us to sentence to death German and Japanese officers at the end of the World War II."

Leaders of Dewey Canyon III, the name of the week-long demonstration, became disturbed when a rumor circulated that President Nixon had said less than 30 per cent of the group actually were veterans. A White House spokesman denied Nixon had made the statement.

The veterans are bivouacked on the Mall near the Capitol. A federal appeals court lifted part of an injuction Monday which allowed them to stay there Sunday night provided they didn't set up camp. Most of them did sleep there, however, in bedrolls and makeshift tents.

OVER THERE—In a scene reminiscent of World War I, fresh South Vietnamese troops thread their way through a line of trenches atop Firebase 6 in South Vietnam's Central Highlands. While reinforcements arrived at beleaguered garrison, Communist forces lobbed artillery fire into the base's landing zone. (AP Wirephoto.)

Will Join D.C. March

Vets Ready To Go!

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

The Veterans for Peace met last night in the Campus Center, and although a poor turnout limited the session to informal discussion, it was decided that the group will join the March on Washington April 24 and demonstrate in the Veteran's contingent.

The group, which expects twenty to thirty vets to go to Washington, urges veterans who want to demonstrate against the war to buy a bus ticket and march with the Veteran's contingent. By identifying themselves as veterans, the group hopes to break down the barrier between students and the rest of society regarding the war, and give added legitimacy to the peace movement.

Increased support from the labor movement is also expected by the vets in Saturday's march, which was attributed to the fact that labor would give credibility to anti-war sentiment from veterans.

The group is opposed to the May day movement, which plans activities from May 1-5 under the slogan, "If the government won't stop the war, the people will stop the government." They said that the demands such as a guaranteed annual income, and tactics such as trying to shut down the Pentagon are both futile and alienate many potential supporters.

Buses will leave Friday midnight for the march whose goal is seen as "an expression of the support we have," and a vehicle to educate people in other issues as a result of their involvement in the march.

They group will also support the one-day memorial strike May 5th in commemoration of the Kent State and Jackson State killings, and will set up a workshop for the day.

No Better Way

The nation could be thrust into turmoil during the next several weeks of demonstrating against the war policy which keeps us involved in the civil wars of Southeast Asia.

The government has never been less credible even to a people who have grown used to not believing what the Government says.

In marked contrast to last year's huge anti-war gatherings, people this year are planning to go beyond marching in the streets to emphasize their feelings. The organizers and thousands of individuals across the country are going to literally take the streets: the first real challenge that this government will have ever faced.

Why the President of the United States will not keep his own campaign pledges to bring peace to the Indochina, boggles the mind. How he can operate a foreign policy so contrary to the values this nation should have that millions of citizens have demonstrated against it in every possible way, leaves one with a sick feeling in the gut.

Last year, students across the country were forced to ask themselves what could be done to show disagreement with this nation's present war policy. Since then thousands of people have died from the same national policies, so long ago recognized as barbarous and criminal.

What the hell can anyone do about it?

We have long felt apprehensive about massive crowds of emotion-charged individuals. A large crowd can act in ways beyond the control of any individual participant asserting itself as a mob, with no conscience. (Armies have always been nothing more than disciplined mobs.)

The individual must decide whether he or she will become part of a mass movement towards the particular end of forcing the government to discontinue its war policies keeping in mind the political reality of America today is one where only huge numbers of people are effective when the policy being changed is one of the magnitude that this war assumes.

April 24, this Saturday, will be the first major step in this Spring's anti-war activities. We urge everyone to weigh the consequences of participating in this potentially volatile action. We ask that you weigh the results of not participating.

Everyone who goes to Washington this weekend, especially those who will stay on for the hard-core civil disobedience, must recognize that they are tied into the most turbulent times this nation has faced since the Civil War.

We are divided. Our sense of morality numbered by the never ending ramifications of waging war with technological deadlines, pathologically pursued.

Go to Washington this weekend if you can. Try to feel the pulse of a half-million people. Join in the chants and sooth the harried instincts of those around you.

You will be part of whatever happens, in a visceral way you will be what happens. Perhaps there is no better way.

A Duller Roar

It's election time in the Student Senate again and though the roar may be duller than usual, the importance of the outcome has not lessened at all. In a period of increased criticism of the Senate and political flux, the results of tonight's battles could go far in determining the future of that body and its relation to the University community.

It would be easy for us to simply list the people we would like to see elected. In this way, we might be able to repay some of the favors we have received from the Senate and to get even for many of the injuries we have suffered. In reality that type of action would have little value to the Senators involved and less to the voters.

Instead, the burden of selecting Senate officers lies with you, the constituents of that governing body. The same people who are constantly lamenting the unresponsive activities of the Senate should be the same ones who are in the forefront of a move to get their favorites elected. It's easy to say that it's the Senate's election and drop it at that. The responsible and "responsive" people, though, should realize that with their influence the Senate can reach the heights which it is capable of attaining.

It is not in a sense, a Senate election. Instead, it is an election for all constituents to make known their views and to see that they are at least heard. Any person who fails to take this action forfeits his right to criticize the Senate for not reflecting the beliefs and attitudes of the students.

Blind Insanity

For most of you it probably started out innocently enough. The guys down the hall were getting stoned and you just happened to wander by to see if anybody had any peanut butter or something and they asked you in and you got high. You liked it and so you kept doing it.

Well, weep not now that the end is near. You've had your fun and don't let me hear you say nobody warned you.

The high school class of 1967 people are now seniors. For all intents and purposes they are the veteran cope-smokers on campus. Grass was just starting to leak out of Boston into places like Brookline and Newton around the spring of 1967. Silverman himself was once caught with a joint in a bathroom at Brookline High in 1967, but the teacher, in his pre-turned-on-freak naivete, thought it was a butt and let him go with office detention.

Just tell your 17-year-old brother to pull that stunt now and see what happens.

The Boston Common of the summer of 1967 had a lot to do with dope creeping even further into the suburbs. Boston is less than an hour away from some real farm country. The then seniors (class of 1968) had no problems at all getting in town to see the hippies. When they went home into the bedroom communities like Framingham, Swampscott, and all the rest, they brought the first traces of the drug culture with them back into the sticks.

It all happened slowly, almost so slowly that no one who was in it could tell it was happening. Those on the outside, the ones with the power to stop it, had no idea what was going on. They didn't act until it was too late and when they did, they went in the wrong direction.

But pretty soon everyone was doing it and the people in the class of 1969 were more well acquainted with grass at the age of 16 than all the others before them were when they reached college. It's now a way of life among certain elements "back home." You go home and you hear the 15 year olds with hair longer than you ever thought would be tolerated in your town whispering about "that heavy trip they took last Friday."

But while all this has been going on at home, with kids getting tuned on younger and younger, things have remained, for the most part, pretty constant around here. Each year a new freshman class has arrived and each year it's a little bit more sophisticated than its predecessor. But to those of us who can remember smoking, or at least seeing people smoke, in 1967, this is really no surprise.

You can't sort of sit back and see how much drugs have infiltrated because you can't remember a time in the immediate past when they weren't there.

There was a thing about smoking before the blind masses started doing it. At first it was a secret little thing that held you apart. And after you got off to school and everyone, but everyone, at home started smoking, you realized that you actually had been some sort of trail-blazer or pioneer.

But you can't rest on your laurels now. The monster that you spawned is slowly but surely catching up with you and you will be overwhelmed by it.

The underground culture has, out of necessity, developed its own kind of underground grapevine. Let one bunch of people plot to have some kind of a concert with a reasonably well-known group, and it's amazing how the word spreads. By the real hard-core freak population is there to herald the event.

What does all this mean? It means that even though Harold Koltin himself had a hard time finding out what groups are going to be here for those foolish free concerts, the Word is out. The freaks of Massachusetts are tuned in to what's happening and they're going to be here. They've heard plenty of rumors and they've believed every one of them. They don't care that they aren't invited and not wanted, they're going to be here because it's expected of them. They're going to come up here in the biggest goddam crowd you've ever seen and they're going to be obnoxious and spoil things for us and they're going to wreck this place.

And it's all because you smoked grass trying to be a big man.

Sure, you "kick yourself the morning after and ask yourself "why did I do it?" But it's too late for all that. You should have thought, back in the days before they sprung you out of Newton South or Beverly High, you should have remembered that there are some things worth saving, that if you smoked dope at the age of 17, then in two years someone else who was 15 would smoke it and think it was all right.

And I'm going to sit back and laugh. I went to school in Boston in 1967 and I remember seeing the kids come back from the Common down Marlborough St. to sit in Spanish class and put a chunk of hash on a cigarette and snort it before the teacher came in the room. And I joined them-once. They I got smart and didn't smoke dope until I got good and ready. My brother who is 3 years younger than I am turned me on.

He's coming up for the free concerts. But unlike the vast legions of mindless idiots who'll come up here to get wrecked away from Mom and Dad for a weekend, he is coming up to watch the funeral. For in its own blind insanity, in its quest for get high now pay later, the youth culture will surely find its own undoing.

Everyone Is Tapped

WASHINGTON--Washington is a status town, but the trouble is that status has a way of changing all the time. A few months ago, you rated in the capital if you received a telephone call from Martha Mitchell after midnight.

But that's old hat now because almost everyone in Washington has gotten a midnight call from Martha Mitchell. The new status symbol is to have your phone tapped by the FBI.

While senators and congressmen, newspapermen and even Administration officials have shown great public indignation over the FBI tapping lines, secretly everyone hopes he is important enough to have J. Edgar Hoover's men listen in on his calls.

The other day I put in a call to Broadbeam, who writes a Newsletter on Tropical Fish for pet stores all over America.

As soon as Broadbeam picked up the phone, he said, "I told you never to call me at the office."

"Where should I call you?" I asked him.

"I'll give you the number of a telephone booth at Wisconsin and 0 Streets. I'll be there every night between 5 and 6. Let the phone ring three times and then hang up. I'll call you back."

"But, Broadbeam. Why all the mystery?"

"I'm sure the FBI is tapping my phone. Listen. Do you hear it?"

"I don't hear anything."

"Exactly. Most phone lines in this country are filled with static. Don't you think it's odd that we have a perfect connection?"

"Well, now that you mention it, it does seem odd. But why would the FBI want to tape the line of someone who puts out a Newsletter on Tropical Fish?"

"Why would they want to monitor the speeches of Sen. Ed Muskie and the other people who spoke on Earth Day? Who knows why the FBI does things?"

"But Broadbeam. All I called about was that my guppies have been getting sick and I thought you might know why."

"I can tell you why," Broadbeam said. "The quick brown fox jumped over the white fence."

"What are you talking about?"

"That's code, stupid," Broadbeam said. "It will take them days to figure that one out. They can tap me all they want to, but I'm not going to make it any easier for them."

"Look, Broadbeam. You may be going to a lot of trouble for nothing. Suppose the FBI isn't tapping your line?"

"That's a dirty thing to say," Broadbeam said angrily. "Don't you think I'm important enough to have my phone tapped?"

"I didn't mean that. But I just never thought the FBI would have much interest in someone who writes a newsletter about Tropical Fish."

"That's how much you know. Just yesterday I was followed for four blocks by two men wearing raincoats."

"What's so strange about that?" I said.

"It wasn't raining," he shouted.

"Oh. I didn't know that. I guess they are interested in you after all."

"Listen, about your guppies," he said, "I'll leave a message for you under the fifth column of the Jefferson Memorial facing the White House."

"Thanks Broadbeam." I hung up.

A few minutes later, my wife called. "Do you know what your son Joel did with my car this morning?" she said.

"For God's sake," I cried, "don't tell me on the phone. They're tapping Broadbeam's phone and now that I called him, they're probably tapping mine. Put a note in a sealed envelope and hide it in the cherry tree and I'll read it when I come home."

Letters To The Editor

The Feeling Was Very, Very Fine

To the Editor:

Sunday's rock festival at the pond deserves some clarification for your readers. Anyone who passed by and thought that people just "sat around drinking Boone's Apple Wine or took time to get wrecked" (MDC April 20) clearly didn't understand what was happening out there.

We were gettin' high, ya see: high on our own energies, our own gig, each other, the day AND the night (when the music finally stopped coming from the stage after 2 a.m. many made their own), high on the combination of people, place and weather which made it all come about.

The festival was originally conceived of by the local May Day Tribe--the people who plan to take our culture and our politics to Washington D.C. for two big weeks. Our caravan leaves from the Campus Center Thursday morning at 9 a.m. We're trying to get the word out to as many people as possible about what we're doing-films, workshops, literature, boogies, one-to-one raps and howeyer else we can relate to people---and Sunday's festival helped us do just that. You can't separate the politics and culture of love, this is what the festival and May Day are all about.

But Sunday's get-together at the pond was far too collective an effort to attribute it all to one small group of people. The May Day Tribe got the place, staging and publicity for the gathering, but from there it was really The People who ran the show. It didn't cost anybody anything except their own time and energy, which there was lots of. Bands came up all day and way into the night to offer their services.

In fact, at least three groups want to play Tuesday and Wednesday as well if we can get a permit to keep it going. People with vans willingly moved the needed equipment across Western Mass., much of the equipment having been donated by people who couldn't play. Tents were set up by/for those who wanted to spend the night, and firewood and food came from all over to keep folks comfortable. The people were very generous in scraping into their pockets for the May Day Food Fund (we're setting up a kitchen in Washington to help feed thousands of people each day).

Oh yes, we did do a pretty good job of keepin' each other with plenty of smoke and drink.

I hope this helps clarify what Sunday's festival was all about. We were stayin' high on each other. I also hope this kind of feeling and energy stays with us around here. We've got a lot of coming together to do.

One more correction on Tuesday's coverage of the boogie: the performers were Armegeddon, Rot, Bloodstone, Freddie's band, and a fine jazz band and rock jam group whose names escape me right now. Things were happening so fast and heavy out there, it's hard to keep them all straight. But I know for sure that the whole feeling of the day and night was very, very fine.

Proud Of The Fact

To the Editor:

Those who've attended past ASA meetings can be proud of the fact that ASA was the only body on campus to which, upon its demand, the secrets of the Free Spring Concert Festival were revealed directly by the committees coordinating the concerts. It is also in part to those who've attended ASA meetings that credit for the virtually certain passage by the SGA of a proposal I and two others formulated, giving the student body the decision-making power concerning groups for future major concerts up here. The American Student Association is not radical in the sense of being violent or extremist but is definitely radical only in the real sense of getting to the root of the problem.

To communicate effectively and influence in a positive way middle America is a goal of ASA. But this cannot happen unless students of various universities can communicate effectively among themselves. And this in turn is not possible without effective communication within a given university itself. This is getting to the root of the problem. This is being radical.

To effect this latter basic goal, ASA has recognized the parallels drawn by itself and other students on this campus: Nixon in '69 tells the American people to stop dissenting about the war and to unite behind him---Glenn Elters recently writes a letter-to-the-editor headed "Lower Your Voices"; the escapade into Laos, involving Americans, was kept a secret from the American people---the Free Spring Concert Festival, involving students, is being kept a secret from the student body, and this year's Commencement activities, involving students, is being kept a secret from the student body. We talk about changing the policies of our government yet cannot even change the policies of our own Collegian or Campus Center.

May I appeal to each of you personally to attend this Wed. night's ASA meeting, to be held in Room 162 of the Campus Center, at 7:30 PM.

Men Were Born

To the Editor:

Heroes are born and heroes die everyday. Both happened Sunday April 18. Ken Dryden was born, and those mighty Bruins who did such a beautiful soft-shoe though the ranks of the National Hockey League this season died.

Boston will long remember the Stanley Cup playoffs not for what it brought but for what it failed to bring. The people who will suffer the most are those fans who put their heroes on a pedestal that proved impossible to sustain. For the Bruins were only human, a fact everyone will have to agree with now. The expectations their fans had for them were superhuman, based on a "super" season. But the cheers and accolades that drove the Bruins all season turned upon them in the seventh and final game and instead of being driven to great heights those cheers were transformed into the kind of pressure that cost them their mistakes. It is the old story of trying too hard. If the expectations are too high failure is that much more inevitable.

Whatever the reason for the Bruins collapse much can be gained from the outcome of the series. We who followed all seven games have been witness to a pride of a group of men who attained the heights lesser men deemed impossible. The Canadiens met impossible odds and beat them. This should be an inspiration regardless of whether you were for the Bruins or Canadiens. Pride is much stronger than all the Bobby Orrs and Ken Drydens in the world. Boston also learned that the higher the pedestal, the longer and harder the fall. It will be a much more aware and mature Boston Bruins team next fall because of the valuable lessons every great man or team has to learn.. Heroes fell Sunday in Boston Garden, but as many men were born.

Sign Of Hope

To the Editor:

For three years I have been confused by the School of Ed and its overnight changes and lack of an adequate advising system. As hopeless as ever, I walked into the School of Ed during the modular credit week and dropped into Rm. 123 to check on my folder and solve some of my confusions. I had no hope of finding anybody interested in the problem of an undergrad minority student. But I saw a sign of hope when I was helped and straightened out kindly and patiently by a "foreign girl" who works as an advisor in that office. She spent more than thirty minutes after 5 p.m. with me to solve my problem. I had never seen so much consideration before. Maybe there is a sign of hope.

Editorial Points

Doesn't it seem odd that Agnew should criticize the Ping Pong diplomacy taking place between the US and China when he used the paddle so effectively in the past himself?

The following passages appeared in the Springfield Republican of April 11 and were quoted by Hy Gardner:

"During his campaign for President, JFK threw some barbs at President Eisenhower and Vice-President Nixon because of the way they answered his charges of a recession.

"As I interpret the President," candidate Kennedy quipped, "we're now at the end of the beginning of the upturn of the downturn. Every bright spot the White House finds in the economy is like the policeman bending over the body in the alley and saying cheerfully, 'Two wounds are fatal. The other one is not so bad!'"

About the only way you can get into a lot of cemeteries these days is in a box.

BETTER THINGS THROUGH CHEMISTRY—Isn't it wonderful to see all of these glowing, orange-faced coeds? QT will do it everytime.

President Nixon summed up in a speech April 19 his job as President better than we ever could have done it. He commented:

"Scrubbing floors or emptying bedpans-my mother used to do that-is not enjoyable work, but a lot of people do it, and there is as much dignity in that as there is in any other work to be done in this country-including my own."

Absurd, Isn't It?

Have you ever noticed the weird sense of absurdity that shrouds this place? I've always known it was here but I really felt it one day a few weeks ago. I was in the Campus Center, lying down on one of the couches trying to read. I fell asleep; it was when I awoke that I first sensed the absurdity.

It became apparent to me that I was a victim of Time and Circumstance. Where I am and what happens to me makes me what I am. Being in the false atmosphere of the UMass microcosm makes this feeling doubly intense. I found myself striving to be as natural as possible. But I soon discovered that all my efforts to unfabricate myself (in order to lose the sense of absurdity) were only hidden fabrications in themselves. I knew that I could never be a complete entity within myself unless I lived naked and ate berries off bushes. Isn't that absurd? I know it's true, however, because I have yet to shake the feeling.

It makes me a lot more human when other people feel this same thing. Sometimes I think I'm the only person left here. Don't scoff at my egocentrism; I'm strong enough to admit it. But to get to the root of my problem - this sense of absurdity, I think its basis lies in my innate loneliness. Ah, loneliness, the universal disease. My sense of absurdity started when, waking from that couch it was as though I awoke from a long and fruitless search for something that would end my loneliness. I realized suddenly that it really was futile and that I would be alone forever no matter the Time and Circumstance.

Now I hate the people who told me that my loneliness was my own fault or that I was suffering from a bad case of the freshman blues. What makes my feeling of loneliness at this moment any more insigificant or typical than one I felt a few years ago or will feel in the future?

All this wouldn't be so bad if I could make myself believe it now that I've awoken and realized it. Being the stupid ever-hoping person I am, I will probably disregard it and start having faith again. Then I will fall bruised at the feet of the absurdity-breeders, Time and Circumstance, get up and brush myself off to start all over again. And so, while I am still suffering from my lineliness and most of all, my sense of absurdity, I will continue my search. I wonder how many times it will take until I can at least have a sense of finality over my sense of absurdity.

Zero Population Growth

Man Is Running Out Of Earth

(Ed. Note- This is the fourth in a series of articles dealing with overpopulation. It deals with population and resources, and attempts to show how our finite resources can support only limited population.)

In discussion of the population problem, many uninformed people argue that the problem is not serious and point to the fact that there are many areas of the world that have low population densities at the present time. It is true that if the average density were increased from the present world-wide figure of 65 per square kilometer for a population of about 3.6 billion people, many more people could fit. If the density were increased to that of Japan, 700 per square kilometer, we could fit about 100 billion people on the earth. If the density were that of Manhattan, 75,000 per square kilometer the total would be about 10 trillion. The problem with this argument is that although these people could have space to fit at these densities, the land so occupied could not support such great numbers.

Land areas, which at the present time have the high population densities mentioned above, import most of the materials needed to support the people living there. At the high densities of Manhattan, it is obvious that all resources to support the people there are supplied from the outside. The needs of the earth as a whole however could never be supplied from the outside, from other planets or the moon, since it would be impossible to transport the needed quantity of materials.

The earth will run into a problem in supplying resources, even if the population doesn't increase above the present number. At the present time, the consumption of the resources of the earth is not spread evenly among the worlds population. The United States, with only about six percent of the total population, consummes about 40 percent of the annual production of minerals. In 1966, the United States consummed one third of the worlds tin production, one fourth of its fertilizer, half of its newsprint, one fourth of its steel and about one fifth of its cotton. Even if population growth were to stop completely, in order to bring the rest of the world up to the standard of the United States, the iron production would have to be increased sixfold, copper production sixfold and lead production eightfold.

In addition to those consumption rates, vast amounts of minerals would be needed just to create the economic base for such a standard which has been built up over many years in the United States (railroads, buildings, power lines, etc.). This feat would require about 75 times the yearly iron production, 100 times the copper, 200 times the lead, 75 times the zinc and 250 times the tin. Except for iron, these quantities exceed the known or inferred reserves of the world's minerals and even the iron could not be converted into steel because of a lack of molybdenum.

The seriousness of the mineral problem cannot be over stated!

The problem of supplying the world with energy places a great strain on our resources. The increases in electricity to process the poorer and poorer grades of ores that we are forced to use are very great. In 1968, 3.4 kilowatt hours of electricity were needed to refine one ton of Mesabi iron ore, but some of the taconite (lower grade) ores now used require as much as 100 kilowatt hours. The energy cost to recover any important minerals from the sea are absolutely prohibitive.

If the rest of the world were to be industrialized and brought up to the present United States power consumption rate, there would be a very great strain on the world's ability to produce such amounts of electricity. The U.S. consummed about 1.5 billion killowatt hours of electricity last year. We would need to increase power production 6.5 times just to raise the rest of the world to United States consumption levels, without any increase in the population. We are last running out of fossil fuels which supply most of the power at present.

Where will this new power come from? If all the hydroelectric potential in the world were used, it could only supply about one fourth of the present world power consumption. Solar power is not practical for large scale energy production, so we are left with only two other energy sources: nuclear and fusion power.

Nuclear power generation has many problems. It is inefficient and two thirds of the power produced has to be dumped into cooling water as waste heat. Even neglecting the damage that the resulting thermal pollution causes, by about the year 2000, all the river water of the United States would be required as cooling for the projected number of nuclear generating plant. Nuclear plants produce tremendous quantities of highly radioactive waste products during their operation. A million kilowatt plant produces as much radioactive waste each year as about 10,000 Hiroschima type atomic bombs. Disposing of these by-products is a very difficult task. In addition as much as the radioactivity of one such bomb may be released from each plant during its first year of operation in the form of radioactive polution. The chance of an accident increases greatly with the rapid increase in the number of nuclear plants.

Nuclear power generation has its limits in that only a small fraction (less than one percent) of the nuclear fuel is the usable form of U235. The remaining U238 is not used by reactors at the prsent time and so we will run out of uranium in a short time. It has been suggested that "breeeder" reactors which turn the waste U238 into a usable form during the course of their operation would be a solution to this problem, but power production from breeders on any large scale may be as much as 20 years in the future.

Another source of power which might solve power problems with little of the disadvantages of nuclear plants is that of fusion power. It would be clean and efficient and its supply would be almost limitless. The only problem is that it is not yet available. It is hoped that it may be possible to demonstrate that fusion power is possible in about five years. The problem is that fusion power, if it can be produced at all, would not be available for as much as 20-25 years in the future. Thus it will not be able to solve our immediate problems.

The above arguments should make it clear that we are facing a crises in our supply of minerals and energy. This is true even if there would be no future population growth! We must control the runaway increase in the earths population if we are to avoid turning this crises into a nightmare. If everyone in the world is to enjoy the standard of living necessary for a happy comfortable life not only must population growth be stopped, but the birth rate should be reduced enough so that the population starts to decline. Only in this way can we enjoy the life we would like to live without reducing our irreplacable mineral capital to a dangerous degree. It has been estimated that a population for the United States of about 50 million and for the world of about 500 million would allow us with careful conservation to enjoy all our resources without the fear of depletion. The fewer people we have the more available for each individual and the higher standard of living he will be able to enjoy. If we don't stop population growth, however, we are headed towards disaster as these important resources are used up without any possibility of replacement.

HEADY HEADS DEPARTMENT: the University of Denver Clarion announces the appointment of a new member of the English Department with, "Porno Expert Joins Faculty."

The appointment was made possible by a "humanities grant." Dr. M.Z. Montgomery is most "renowned" for his work with the "International Encyclopedia of Pornography."

* * * *

SPEAKING OF HEADLINES conjures this one, appearing in the Alestle of Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville: "Alestle Needs Dirty Pictures."

Which turns out to be shock treatment, for the pix it is seeking are "Pictures that show life on our planet showing...dirty streams, dead fish lying in polluted waters, ugly belches that pour from our industrial smoke stacks..."

The pornography of ecology, in other words.

* * * *

AND IN THE SAME NEWSPAPER there appears an advertisement that surely must illustrate the current cool craze for "No-ness."

The ad recruits entries for the "Lake Carlyle Queen Contest." Featured are NO entry fee and NO talent necessary. And maybe, n contest.

GRRRIPE VINE is a feature of the Indiana Daily Student which elicits questions from the campus and provides instant answers.

A recent query struck closer to home than the editors had anticipated, when a reader asked: "Is there some reason for this?....The ids is no longer a student newspaper. Very, very little is included that does not carry AP or UPI datelines. And campus articles are of the inane-cutsey types...I never thought the sole purpose of a campus paper was to present national news and events. Why use so many news services, like Copley? Can't any of you write? Why do you need a staff simply to arrange news dispatches from the other services?....."

Why, why, why?

CRIME PAYS ON CAMPUS that's what the statistics at UTexas say, according to a story in The Daily Texan, recently.

Increase in crimes was 4,741 more cases in 1970 than the previous year. And money value jumped by more than $10,000 in the same period, to $48,679. And of the 111 persons charged with crimes on campus, only 34 were students.

The robbers are coming, the robbers are coming!

ABORTION BILL ABORTED at Louisiana State U., when the Student Government Association defeated a measure to provide for a fund of $3,000 to help defray traveling expenses incurred by coeds wishing to obtain a legal abortion in New York.

The Daily Reveille reported a "heated" debate preceded the voting.

STUDENT REDRESS SYSTEM has been adopted by the English Senate at the University of Northern Iowa, according to a page one blurb in the Northern Iowan.

The system establishes a cadre of advisers to assist students who have a grievance against instructors in the English Dept.

Nine students have been appointed by officers of the English Club as a panel of three to hear each case.

BREAKFAST IS BEST, according to an Illinois State U. nutritionist who studied the eating habits of 65 students on that campus.

She found that only 44 per cent ate an "adequate" brakfast and that 4 per cent skipped it altogether.

The result, she says, may be a lack of ambition throughout the day.

She noted that "a quick cup of coffee" proved to be more detrimental than no breakfast at all. With only a cup of black coffee, the neuromuscular tremor count is increased, the maximum work output decreased, and the reaction time increased, causing a less favorable response.

Eat up, students.

When A Battery Dies Where Does It Go?

When a mercury battery dies, it doesn't go to heaven. It'll probably end up in the dump where the case will corrode and the mercury ultimately will be released. It may end up polluting the local water supply. This pollutant is important because it can be toxic to many organisms at low concentration. The recent mercury scare demonstrated that its effects need not be felt solely near the site of discharge.

Mercury batteries aren't the main source of mercury pollution, but they aren't insignificant either. There are millions being used, for hearing aids, for cameras, for transisterized equipment in general.

Now the mercury pollution mess can be reduced. A hearing aid manufacturing company has decided to take back used mercury batteries for recycling. C.E.Q. will collect any used batteries at its recycling table in the Student Union lobby during Earth Week, and at the office (Room 124 Campus Center, Student Activities) after that, and forward them to the manufacturer.

Wagons Ho!

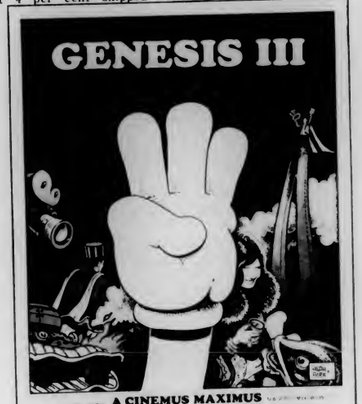
The Five College Area caravan to Washington, D.C. for April 24-May Day activities leaves Thursday morning at 9 a.m from the campus center parking lot.

The caravan will travel down Route 1 and stop in towns along the way to pass out May Day literature and talk with people about the Indochina war and May Day. It is expected that the caravan will arrive in Washington by Friday night, April 23.

All people from Western Massachusetts who intend to stay in Washington during any of the April 24-May 5 activities will have a special place to stay in Washington. This will be in either Rock Creek Park or the grounds of a nearby church, depending on whether or not a permit is granted for use of Rock Creek Park.

Anyone desiring any more caravan or tactical information should call 546-5167, 546-5233, or visit the May Day table in the Student Union.

Want To Go On A Trip?



This week "College Life" is traveling to Brattleboro to hear Arthur Blessitt minister of the famed Sunset Strip in Hollywood and spokesman for the Jesus Movement. Transportation will be provided from the Stockbridge Hall bus stop at 6:30 p.m. Wednesday, April 21.

Arthur Blessitt has received national publicity for "His Place" the Christian coffee house on Sunset Strip. When his landlord evicted "His Place" because it was hurting the business of neighboring night clubs, Arthur fasted for 28 days ouside of the coffee house. Last summer, he was a member of a small group that carried a life-size cross across the country. By simply preaching "Jesus loves you.", Arthur has seen thousands of youth who previously were turned on to drugs now turned on to Christ.

"The Jesus Revolution" a folk group from Brattleboro will be playing Wednesday night also.

Thanks To People Like You Holt Family Drive Succeeded

The Save the Holt Family Fund Drive, sponsored by the local Arnold Air and Angel Flight Squadrons, and recently held outside the Campus Store, was a great success. This project was sponsored on a national level with 155 participating Arnold Air Society and Angel Flight squadrons to collect money for the chemical desperately needed to keep the two surviving Holt children alive.

The family needed $20,000 immediately. On this campus the two groups managed to raise $370 in the three days of the campaign. At this time, the national collection agency located at West Virginia University has collected approximately $14,000. In addition a group of Air Force personnel located in Viet Nam raised another $30,000. The combined amounts should be able to pay off the family's debt and maintain the children's health until they will be receptive to kidney transplants.

The local Arnold Air Society and Angel Flight, on behalf of the Holt family, would like to thank all those who contributed.

Do You Have A National Defense Loan?

Red Sox Down Indians; Tatum Sharp In Relief

BOSTON (AP)-Gary Peters doubled home the first two runs of the game for the Boston Red Sox in the fifth inning and defeated the Cleveland Indians 4-1 yesterday with relief help from Ken Tatum.

Billy Conigliaro doubled and Doug Griffin singled him to third to open the fifth, then Peters lined a shot down the right field line that scored both runners. John Kennedy was hit by a pitch, finishing Cleveland starter Camilo Pascual, and Reggie Smith greeted reliever Steve Mingori with a two-run double to make it 4-0.

Peters, who had given up only three hits in the first five innings, was tagged for a solo homer by Ray Fosse in the sixth, then gave up singles to Roy Foster and Larry Brown and a walk to Buddy Bradford, loading the bases with two out.

Tatum came on at that juncture to face pinch hitter Gomer Hodge,.

The Boston reliever got Hodge to ground out on the first pitch and held the Indians hitless the rest of the way to preserve Peters' second vietory in three decisions.

Stickers Face Tough Harvard

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

Beginning a 10-day spree that will include five of the toughest teams on their schedule, the UMass lacrosse team will face a highly touted Harvard squad at 3 p.m. this afternoon at Harvard.

In playing their third straight game on their opposition's home field, UMass will face a Harvard team "that probably has more good lacrosse players than any other team in the country," said Coach Garber.

In four contests, Harvard has compiled a 2-2 mark, but the .500 record can be deceptive. Both losses were to teams ranked within the top 10 nationally as Navy (last year's national co-champs) and Cornell pummelled Harvard 8-3 and 9-3 respectively.

Rutgers and Penn have been victims of the Ivy Leaguers by scores of 7-6 and 13-3, and it has been the strength of their mid-field that has led to victory in both of those contests.

That "strong" mid-field of Harvard's contains four lines that are constantly rotated so as to give the opponent nightmares. All four of their lines are good, as they keep the pressure on by changing sets of mid-fielders as frequently as possible.

With numerous Harvard stickmen returning from last year's squad, the Redmen will face a defense that is composed of three football players that lack nothing in the way of speed.

In the way of attack, Bob Zuckerman at 6'4 and 220 lbs. will keep the UMass defense busy while Leil Rosenburger, Rick Frisbee, and Verdi Disese will be three of those talented mid-fielders filling out the highly respected Ivy squad.

With two big wins behind them, Garber's Gorilla's hope to look sharp this afternoon, as they did against Tufts last Saturday. Said Garber, "Like most good games this one will be decided in the mid-field. The mid-field has got to control the ball because Harvard has an extremely potent attack."

The problem which Garber is contemplating is how many mid-field lines to go with. At this time Garber plans to use two lines as opposed to Harvard's four, so UMass' middies should be ready for a busy day of lacrosse.

Last year Harvard handed UMass their lone loss of the season. It was a 12-6 affair, which saw Harvard jump out to a 6-1 lead before UMass woke up.

Playing as tight as a drum, the stickmen were awed by Harvard, as the first half began, and playing catch up the rest of the way, the Redmen just couldn't make it back. At one point in last year's battle, the gap narrowed to 6-5, but after missing an open net, Harvard moved out again to six more scores.

Psych is an extremely important part of any game, and Garber feels that it will be a key today. Against many of their opponents, all UMass need do is score a few quick goals and the other team will remain psyched out throughout the contest. This is exactly what happened at Tufts, as they expected to get killed, and as soon as UMass scored a few they gave up.

This afternoon's battle cannot allow for a first half lull that ruined them one year ago. Harvard hardly seems to be the God-like ballclub of a year ago and UMass will certainly have to have it for 60 minutes to move closer to that number one rating in New England and that NCAA bid at year's end.

Netmen Triumph Twice

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

Capturing four singles and two doubles matches, the UMass tennis team withstood their first challenger of the season and defeated a tough Tufts squad 6-3. Monday afternoon's contest moved the netmen to a 3-0 mark, after they had disposed of AIC 9-0, last Saturday afternoon.

Getting a good workout in preparation for two of its toughest contests, UMass took an early lead against Monday's visitors by taking four of the first five matches.

Captain Alan Goldberg started it off with a 6-3, 6-2 win, but Tufts evened it up as Chris Coffin bowed at the second slot 6-3, 6-0.

Then the netmen started reeling off their victories as third singles man John Bloom came away with a steady keep-the-ball-in-play 6-3, 6-1 win. Next Steve Ferber gave the home club a three to one margin taking his match in straight sets 6-3, 6-3.

Mark Brass, the fifth singles man, chalked up another Redmen win conquering 6-4, 6-3, and Tufts managed their second point as their sixth man came from behind to down Fred Braley in three sets.

The doubles contests saw three tight matches, two ending in Redmen victory. It was Jim Bornheim, teaming with Mark Brass, that clinched a win for UMass in 6-4, 6-3 fashion. Then Bloom and Coffin put it together 6-1, 6-4, while Goldberg and Ferber dropped a wild one 3-6, 6-3, 7-5.

The Redmen had gained their first victory against a formidable opponent, as Tufts was just coming off a 5-4 win over UConn, the latter expecting to battle UMass for the Conference title.

Two days earlier, UMass faced what was perhaps the worst team they will see all year. Smashing AIC 9-0, UMass dropped only one set in the entire match, as Chris Coffin was the first man to feast, winning at first singles 6-2, 6-1. Then Braley, Ferber, and Wedman captured the second, third, and fourth positions respectively, losing only two games amongst them.

Mark Lundberg and David Katz made their varsity debut in singles a good one, as Lundberg won 6-1, 6-1, and Katz made all six singles the Redmen's taking his man 6-4, 6-4.

Three doubles contest became formality, as UMass had garnered a win without four of their top six men in uniform.

By defeating AIC and Tufts, UMass moved to a 3-0 record, but their season success will hinge heavily on their upcoming matches.

This afternoon UMass will go against MIT, after dropping their first of the year to Amherst, yesterday afternoon. MIT has always had a strong squad, and today will be no different. The home contest will give the Redmen a good chance to get back on the winning track, as they come back to hardcourt surface,to which they are accustomed.

MIT will face the same men that UMass put on the court yesterday as Goldberg, Bornheim and Bloom will occupy the first three slots, and Ferber, Brass and Braley will fill up the bottom three positions. How will the netmen come off of their Amherst match mentally, will be a big factor as the Redmen hope to fare well against the highly-touted Engineers.

Today's featured sports will be baseball and tennis with coaches Dick Bergquist and Steve Kosakowski and athletes from each sport. This luncheon is open to all. Dallas Day Coming

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

On May 1, at Alumni Stadium, the University of Massachusetts will pay tribute to one of its finest athletes, Bernard Dallas, who was killed in a 1968 auto accident. Bernie Dallas Day will consist of a pro clinic with Greg Landry of the Detroit Lions, Milt Morin of the Cleveland Browns, Phil Vandersea of the Green Bay Packers, John Huard of the New Orlean Saints, Bubba Pena of the Cleveland Browns, and Ed Toner, Nick McGarry, Pierre Marheando, and Sam Rutigtano all of the New England Patriots. There will also be an intrasquad game following the clinic.

The purpose of the day is to procure funds for the planned Bernie Dallas Mall to be constructed near Alumni Stadium and also for the Bernie Dallas Memorial Scholarship which is to be given annually to the student chosen for superior all-round qualities.

Although the name Bernie Dallas may not be familiar to many undergraduates, Dallas, a 1966 graduate contributed much to the University in general, and to athletics in particular.

A three-letter winner in football, Dallas was co-captain of the 1965 squad that posted a 7-2 record, including the last six straight. He was a two-way star, playing both offensive center and defensive linebacker. He was also a two-way star on an undefeated (8-0-1) freshman team in 1963 and was chosen 2nd team All New England that year. In the very successful 1965 season, he was chosen All Yankee Conference, All New England, and honorable mention All East.

In an impressive complement to his athletic achievements, Dallas was president of his class for all four years, president of Kappa Sigma Fraternity, an Adelphian, and a member of Who's Who in American Colleges, and also the winner of the Oswald Behrend Award in 1966.

After graduating, Dallas continued his football career and was chosen the top rookie on the Philadelphia Bulldogs of the Continental Football League in 1966. He was scheduled for a tryout with the New York Giants of the NFL when he was killed in the tragic accident on April 29, 1968.

Hogan, Ladd, Verrochi Also Winners

Sandwen Elected Senate Prexy

HE IS THE PRESIDENT—Newly elected Senate President Lee Sandwen clowns for the press. His idea for today's headline: Project 10 Hippie Wins Senate Presidency...(MDC photo by Gary Alpaugh).

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

Power to the students through the Student Senate was stressed throughout last night's election of Senate officers. Lee Sandwen, as of next Wednesday, will be in the Senate's charge to work as its President to achieve the goal of strengthening the student voice on this campus.

Also elected to office last night were John Hogan as Vice President for Internal Affairs Larry Ladd as Executive Assistant for University Relations, (known commonly as External Vice President), and Richard Verrochi as Treasurer.

The general theme heard throughout the speeches of the candidates and their nominators was one of great concern for making the Senate a powerful vehicle for legitimatizing the Senate in the eyes of the student body. Academics and student life were stressed in most of the speeches as being the two areas where the Student Senate must increase its power to institute change.

Sandwen Predicts Confrontation

A confrontation with the faculty next year was predicted by Sandwen in his campaign speech. "There are better educational opportunities than are offered on this campus, and I intend to confront the faculty on this matter." He based much of his campaign on his experiences in programs of educational alternatives such as Project Ten, Free University, and the federal Office of Educational Opportunity.

President Glenn Elters (who withdrew his resignation as President made the night before) nominated Sandwen, saying in one of the lighter moments of the meeting that "Sandwen is crazy enough to do this job." More seriously, he told the Senate that he felt Sandwen was better qualified for the job than he himself had been.

Filmore Seconds Nomination

Former Senator Tom Filmore seconded Sandwen's nomination, saying that "the educational process is what is going to kill us or cure us. Next year's battleground is with the faculty." He cited Sandwen's experience in educational alternatives as making him the most qualified of candidates.

Sandwen's race with Leo Clark was up in the air right up to the balloting, prompting Sandwen's first response upon announcement of the victory to be "Golly gee whiz." He also announced a "victory party" to be held in Washington, D.C. this weekend, known otherwise as the April 24 March on Washington.

Clark had run on a platform of making the Senate, and especially its President, more open to student feedback. Viewing the office as the most influential student office on campus, he intended to strengthen the Senate mainly by strengthening the committee structure within the Senate. Senator Albert Olmstead, who seconded Clark's nomination, spoke of him as "an alternative to what the Senate has now."

The vote was Sandwen-38, Clark-32, Larry Ladd-1 write-in. (Ladd was not campaigning for this office.) All of the votes in the election were taken by paper ballot.

Hogan Defeats Bernstein

John Hogan defeated Bruce Bernstein in the election for what is commonly called Internal Vice President. Hogan campaigned on a platform of making changes in the committee structure to make the Senate a more viable legislative body. He considers his position to be one of coordinating the Senate by unifying its internal workings. Bernstein called his campaign one of alternative ideas. He felt that the Senate has more of an attitudinal problem than structural and wanted to change what he called a current trend in the Senate to respond to students as power structures and not as individuals.

Larry Ladd was elected as External Vice President, a position he defined as a lobbyist who must "bridge the gap between the values of the students and the social institutions in which the students must live." He cited his "high tolerance for bureaucracy" as one of his better qualifications for this job which will have much to do with the Senate's relations with the University.

Cohen, Voci Lose

Philip Cohen and Ed Voci opposed Ladd in the race. Cohen stressed student life, especially residential, as being one of the areas which should receive much more Senate attention in the future. Voci, also, campaigned on a concern for making changes in student life. Incorporation of student services such as gas stations and clothing stores was one of his plans for improving the lot of the student.

Verrochi Defeats Stevens

Richard Verrochi defeated John Stevens in the election of Treasurer. Verrochi is the only incumbent officer. He was supported by the current President and Vice President, who cited their satisfaction in working with him this past year.

The Senate meeting concluded with a few brief remarks by Robert Roenlord, Chief Justice of the General Court. He had chaired the meeting, a standard election procedure. He took the opportunity to thank the Senate for its "tremendous cooperation with the General Court this past year."

THIS IS NOT THE TIME FOR POETS

This is not the time for poets. No.
Now men and women waking from the false dreams of their lives burst by the thousands into the streets of cities to declare themselves. They proclaim their bodies in the astonished presence of the dictators of dreams where they are warned by guns to wake to die.

Those who wake in prison wake in another's dream. When they cry out we must break down those walls,
we must be free.

The poets of our time are on the rooftops, in the streets, in courtrooms and prisons declaring themselves with their bodies.

Down with all lies,
all lies kill. The courts and prisons of the soul, down with them all. And those who would kill us if we wake, down with them all.

Politics Panel Reviews News Media

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

Four members of the various news medias, Radio, Television and Newspapers, met last evening with a hundred people in a panel discussion in Practical Politics. Present giving their views and answering questions were Reporter and Columnist Abe Michelson; Dan Griffin representing Radio Station WEEI; Publisher of The Holyoke Transcript, Bill Dwight, and William L. Putnam, President of WWLP—TV in Springfield.

State House news reporting was the subject of a short talk by Mr. Michelson. He told the group that there should be a well organized news bureau to cover State House news.

After outlining to the group the news policies and format of WEEI, Dan Griffin said that the people are the top concern of his radio station. He felt that it is most important for people to know what their Legislators are doing in the State House.

"The media is a natural adversary. It stands between you and your political leaders," Bill Dwight, Jr., brother of the Lt. Governor told the group.

Bill Putnam who editorializes frequently on Channel 22 said, "The fundamental purpose of a democracy is to keep any one individual from running away with the show."

In a question and answer period following the opening remarks the audience brought up questions on issues such as the limiting of campaign funds, regulation of the media, and Agnew's criticism of the Press.

In response to the question raised concerning the limiting of campaign funds, the panelists agreed that it would be a good idea but that it would be impractical and unable to work unless it is strictly enforced.

Dan Griffin when asked about media regulation, told those in attendance that the various medias do regulate themselves. When asked for his opinion on the matter, Bill Putnam replied that it would be a good thing to be subject to some kind of outside control in the interest of the public.

Agnew's criticism of the media was the next topic of discussion brought up by Bob Pierpont. Dan Griffin said that the media is not too concerned because it is doing the best job possible. "There will always be allegations" he continued, "But they won't affect Broadcasting."

"When the media thinks that it is perfect then we are all in trouble," Bill Dwight stated. He remarked that when the Vice President's speeches are read in their entirity, he is correct more often than he is wrong.

In closing, the panelists discussed the advantages and disadvantages of the media.

Trustee Shaler Visits Orchard Hill

By IRWIN LEFMAN
MDC Staff

Alan Shaler, youngest member of the Board of Trustees came to Orchard Hill to hear and discuss some of the issues and problems of the Hill, including the commitment by the board of trustees for having a residential college, a multi-purpose cafeteria on the hill, and more student recognition of Orchard Hill.

Mr. Shaler mentioned the fact that he and other trustees were not really aware of Orchard Hill and its problems. The trustee revealed that not only are the trustees unaware of the Hill, but also students who live on this very campus.

Larry Monetta, a student from Orchard Hill area government mentioned that it was very difficult to appropriate funds for printing brochures in the Hill, but not in Southwest.

Also brought up in the meeting was the proposal of Orchard Hill to become a semi-autonomous residential college, calling for autonomy in housing and admissions to the hill, a multi-purpose cafeteria, credit for the Orchard Hill courses to fulfill University requirements, their own faculty, and time off for faculty and perceptors on the Hill.

Trustee Shaler replied, "I don't see why the University has to be depersonalized just because there are 20,000 students on this campus."

However, the trustee was a bit skeptical on the idea of having the "multi-purpose" cafeteria on the hill, saying that there are already enough problems with Dining Commons. It was pointed out though that this facility would be a "hatch" type of arrangement, whereby students will be able to buy what they desire, and store, not run by the University, and for recreational and academic matters.

Mr. Shaler told the small group that there are legal problems with giving preference to students who wish to take Orchard Hill courses. Dr. Leon Harron, master of the Hill, pointed out that the courses are open to anyone in the University who wishes to take them.

When asked about trustees feelings on the tuition hike, Trustee Shaler, who is also Dean of Students at Williston Academy, replied that if a "vote were taken right now, they would be blantly opposed." However, he said that room and board is different from the tuition issue; the state does not control the room and board assesments, the money must come from somewhere.

Metawampe Award Nominations Now Open

Nominations for the annual Metawampe Award are now being accepted by the Metawampe Committee. Students are being asked to suggest their favorite faculty or administrative "good guy" for the award before Monday in the box in RSO.

The award consists of $1000. and an engraved plaque. Last year Seymour Shapiro, former Acting Dean of Arts and Sciences, was the recipient.

This year Chairman John Long has expressed a desire for varied nominations. He would like to see students nominate individuals in different areas who do their jobs well and contribute something to the University.

Said Long, "We would like to see someone that the students like and relate to receive the award, someone who acts for and with students at UMass."

After the nominations are closed, the committee members (approximately 15) will investigate all candidates through interviews with students and colleagues. A process of elimination will bring the total and nominees down to three or four individuals, who then will be studied more closely by all members of the committee.

Final selection of the recipient of the Metawampe Award will be prior to May 3rd, at which date the plaque and check will be presented in the Student Leaders Night Ceremonies.

Allies Seek Fight In A-Shau Valley

SAIGON (AP)-South Vietnamese commanders dispatched more troops into A Shau Valley in hopes of drawing the enemy into a fight but the enemy has not taken the bait, command officers said Wednesday. They expressed a belief this could be the result of heavy enemy losses in the Laos incursion.

Trying to avoid engagements so there have been few contacts and "we do not know if the enemy will fight and fight," said Maj Gen Pham Van Phu, commander of South Vietnam's 1st Infantry Division. He spoke to newsmen at Hue Mo, a village east of the valley which has served as a depot for troops, supplies and troops south of the valley.

The drive into A Shau Operation Lam Son 720 began early last week in an attempt to block North Vietnamese infiltration from Laos.

Phu said the South Vietnamese had increased the number of their troops in the valley since Tuesday "hoping to engage the enemy but nothing big has happened yet."

Phu said his forces were faced with elements of one North Vietnamese division and three regiments, in addition to three other regiments across the border in Laos.

He implied, however, that the operation in Laos, Lam Son 719, had seriously crippled the enemy's supply network, which accounted for the lack of action in the current drive.

In a related development, nine U.S. B52 bombers rained tons of bombs on North Vietnamese infiltration routes in the northern sector, including the northern tip of the 30-mile-long A Shau Valley.

The extent of American ground involvement in Lam Son 720 still is not clear, although at least one battalion from the 101st Airborne Division is reported to be operating in the area.

Light and scattered action was reported in other parts of Indochina.

In South Vietnam, Viet Cong mines blasted two busloads of civilians Tuesday in different parts of the country, killing 24 and wounding 45, according to police reports.

CO's Refugees Decided, Too

Court Upholds DC Abortion Law

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Supreme Court approved Wednesday prosecution of physicians who perform abortions, but said pregnancies can be ended legally for mental-health reasons.

The 5-2 ruling upheld the 1901 abortion law for the District of Columbia against claims that its working is so vague doctors do not know which operations are permissable and which are not.

But by authorizing abortions to protect the expectant mother's mental health and by putting the burden on prosecutors to prove an operation is illegal, the justices gave physicians considerable leeway.

Not settled yet is whether women have an inherent private right to obtain an abortion simply because they desire to end their pregnancy. This issue is pending before the court in abortion cases from a half-dozen states.

The District of Columbia law, written by Congress for the capital prohibits abortions except when "necessary for protection of the mother's life or health." And it stipulates they must be performed by a licensed physician.

In November 1969, U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell dismissed an indictment against Dr. Milan Vuitch of Chevy Chase, Md., operator of a clinic three blocks from the White House.

Gesell said the law was unconstitutionally vague and that it impermissably put the burden on the defendant to prove the operation was medically necessary.

Justice Hugo L. Black, in announcing the reversal, said doctors routinely make judgments about a person's health in considering surgery and have no trouble figuring out what the word health means.

A proper definition, he went on, could include "mental health," regardless of whether the woman had a previous history of mental defects.

Thus is the way the U.S. Circuit Court for the District of Columbia has interpreted the local abortion law in another case. The Supreme Court's adoption of the view would appear to shield physicians against punishment if they certify the abortion was necessary on physical or mental grounds.

Thirty-eight states have abortion laws. Their fate remains unsettled since the court did not reach the issue of privacy.

Vuitch commented, "The guys on the Supreme Court threw the whole mess back to the doctors. I myself as a physician can see that this is correct. It's strictly a medical problem."

He told a reporter he will continue to perform abortions at his office.

In a second ruling, the court said men who claim they became conscientious objectors after receiving their draft notices are not entitled to reconsideration by their draft boards. However, the 6-3 decision said they cannot be sent into combat until military authorities make a judgment on their claims.

In a third ruling, the court said the United States may turn away refugees fleeing Communist countries if they settle temporarily in another country on the way. The 5-4 decision concerns a refugee from Communist China who took up residence in the British colony of Hong Kong before settling in California.

The abortion decision permits prosecution of Vuitch with a possible prnalty of one to ten years in prison if he is convicted. Officials would have to show at the trial that he operated under circumstances not necessary to preserve the woman's life or health.

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices John M. Harlan, Byron R. White and Harry A. Blackmun joined Justice Black in sustaining the law. Justice William O. Douglas, dissenting, agreed with Judge Gesell that the law is too vague. Justice Potter Stewart, also dissenting, said he would have ruled that no competent physician could be prosecuted under the law.

Justices Wilham J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall held the Supreme Court did not have jurisdiction over the Vuitch case. They were joined in this pont by Harlan and Blackmun but once the court chose to rule by a five-four vote, Brennan and Marshall did not state a view on the law itself.

Nixon Overhauls Foreign-Aid System

WASHINGTON (AP) President Nixon asked Congress Wednesday for a sweeping overhaul of the U.S. foreign-aid system and an increase in aid money for the coming year.

In presenting a $3.3-billion request for the fiscal year starting July 1, Nixon submitted two new bills for international security assistance and for international economic development and humanitarian aid to replace the one-package arms-and-economic legislation of previous years.

Under international security, Nixon would lump together military aid, credit sales of arms, and economic assistance to countries such as Korea whose defense is deemed important to the United States.

DRINKING IT UP....IF the Senate and the Governor concur with yesterdays House vote, those in the 18-21 year old bracket may get their first legal drink of alcohol soon, perhaps from the above cases even. (MDC Photo by Steve Schmidt)

Lower Drinking Age Approved By House

BOSTON (AP)—A bill to lower the drinking age in Massachusetts to 18 passed the Massachusetts House Wednesday on an 117-116 roll call after nearly three hours of debate.

A motion to reconsider the vote comes up Thursday.

The bill gained initial approval in the House Tuesday on a 124-100 roll call without debate.

The measure, reported favorably last week by the legislature's joint Committee on Government Regulations, was sponsored by Howard Miller, chairman of the Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission.

The legislature already has passed and sent to Gov. Francis W. Sargent a bill lowering from 21 to 18 the permissible age to marry without parental consent.

The legislature last week also passed bills to lower to 18 the age at which a person may make campaign contributions in excess of $25 and to 19 the age at which a person may make a will.

During Wednesday's session, the House rejected an amendment to substitute 19 for age 18 in the drinking bill.

'Kidnap' Priests to Appear Tonight in CC Auditorium

Two priests named as defendants in the alleged plot to kidnap presidential advisor Henry Kissinger and blow up the Capitol heating system will speak here tonight at 8 in the Campus Center Auditorium. Fr. Neil McLaughlin (right) and Fr. Joseph Wenderoth (left) will appear under the joint sponsorship of Amherst Clergy and Laymen Concerned About Vietnam, the University of Massachusetts United Christian Foundation, and the University of Massachusetts Newman Club.

According to the Rev. Samuel Johnson of the United Christian Foundation, "The government's accusations against Frs. Wenderoth and McLaughlin and others have deeply disturbed many persons who are not themselves active in the peace movement. They fear that accusations that these men and women conspired together to plan violence are in reality an attempt to stifle criticism of the war in Vietnam. Clergymen and lay persons of all faiths have come to their defense."

Mr. Johnson added, "All those named as defendants in the alleged plot have denied the charges. Their acts of non-violent civil disobedience in the past have been based on deeply held religious convictions, and they have always acknowledged their actions. The charges brought against them now are contrary to both their philosophy and past activities." Others indicted with Frs. McLaughlin and Wenderoth include Fr. Daniel Berrigan and Fr. Phillip Berrigan.

'Right To Life' Called Precious

By ETHEL HARRIS
MDC Staff

Dr. George A. Wiley, Executive Director of the National Welfare Rights Organization, addressed a crowd of about one hundred people last night in the Campus Center Auditorium, in a program sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, and explained the welfare rights movements as one which regards, "the right to life itself as the most precious and basic one we hold", and that the movement was chiefly concerned with the struggle to obtain the basic necessities of life.

We have enough money in our economy to support all at an adequate level, Wiley stated, yet one fourth of all Americans go to bed hungry at night. Citing that the top twenty percent of the nation receives fourty-four per cent of the annual income, but the bottom twenty percent receive only four per cent, he cited a delinite need to redistribute the wealth of the nation. He referred to American as a "stingy, but affluent nation", which channels its energies into destruction and war rather than the needs of persons at home.

Referring to a Nixon speech on the present "welfare crisis", Wiley attacked the proposed Nixon plan as offering only "limited solutions" for the present fiscal problems of the cities and states, yet not providing sufficient means to aid the poor. The government has determined an income of $3900 per year for a family of four as the poverty level, but the average welfare grants for a family of four would be only $2500. Nixon's plan would aid the working poor only at a low level, but would insist on people working under any conditions or at any wages, or lose welfare benefits. Thus, business would be provided with a pool of cheap labor, Wiley said.

Kolton Claims Groups Closed

"If we can't change policies on the Collegian, if we can't reform the organization of the student-owned Campus Center, what can we expect to accomplish by going to Washington on April 23 and 24?" asked Harold Koltin to the 30 people who attended the ASA meeting last night in the Campus Center.

The meeting focused on problems the activist organization has faced in recent weeks. Koltin, the group's organizer, spoke on what he considered the closed policies of groups such as the Collegian, those organizing the free concerts, and those planning the commencement.

"If the student body were allowed to vote in referendum, they would disagree with most policies now in effect throughout the campus," he said.

Speaking on future plans for on-campus concerts, the idea the new Student Government Association has sponsored was put forth. It suggested that a campus-wide poll be held on whom the students would want. The new concert group would then act as administrative body "to carry out student wishes," Harold said.

Recently the Senate struck down funding of any concerts for next year. Koltin questioned the "priorities" of the Senate action. He said the raising of Student Attorney Richard Howland's pay from 13,500 to 20,000 was "unreasonable" and that "some of that money could be spread out for concerts."

24 Hour Marathon
Armenians Run for Freedom

By DAVID WILLIAMS
MDC Staff

Tom Derderian is an easy guy to talk to. Last night he sat in a cold tent by the pond and talked about why he and his sister and some friends are running around the pond for 24 hours.

Tom is an Armenian and he's proud of it. Armenia is a small country next to Turkey which has been all but destroyed by the Turkish and Soviet governments.

In 1915 the Turks swept into Armenia and murdered 80% of the population, mostly women and children, since the Turks had taken most of the men into the Turkish army.

One and a half million people died during those massacres, the first instance of genocide in the 20th century.

Armenia was taken over by Communist Russia on December 2, 1920. What followed was typical of what happens to a country when taken over by the Communists. The intellectual class and the clergy were wiped out in an effort to destroy the class structure in Armenia.

Life today in Armenia is a battle against repression by the Soviets. People who harbor any kind of nationalistic feelings are not dealt with gently by the government.

But Armenians are proud, tough people. They are proud that Armenia was the world's first Christian country. They are proud of the heritage of the Armenian people. They are very proud to be Armenians.

So last night Tom and his buddy Rich Tashjian sat in a drafty tent and talked about what being an Armenian meant to them. Tom wanted to organize some sort of observance by the pond because he's concerned that the lesson to be learned from the Armenian tradegy has been forgotten all too quickly.

"The average student doesn't know and is not told about what happened to the Armenian people," he said. He hopes that the vigil, which ends at noon today, will arouse the curiosity of those who watch in the Armenian culture. There are plans underway now to have an accredited course in the Armenian language taught next fall.

Tom picked the idea of a 24 hour marathon because he felt it best symbolizes the tragedy which occurred 56 years ago. He feels that the running that he and his sister Lynn and Rich and all the others who join them do will somehow symbolize the endurance displayed by the Armenian people when they were overrun by the Turks.

"It represents a personal commitment, an investment of more than a few minutes of marching around with a placard," he explained.

There are more memorial observances scheduled for the coming weekend. They include a demonstration outside the Turkish Embassy in Washington and another at the United Nations. Armenians feel that the first step towards getting recognition as a people is for the Turkish government to admit that it is guilty of genocide.

The vigil by the pond will end at noon today. Tom said quietly last night that if he and Rich and Lynn have to run all night they'll finish the 24 hours.

For Tom this might prove to be a real chore. He ran in Monday's BAA marathon and he's a little tired.

But he'll keep right on running to bring justice to his people.

Washington Medical Advice

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

General advice for self care at the Washington demonstration this weekend was outlined by UMass medic co-ordinator Mark Rosoff in an MDC interview yesterday.

The injuries most likely to occur at a confrontation are head cuts and gas irritation, according to Rosoff. He detailed various symptoms and treatments that he felt marchers in Washington should be aware of.

For instance, a scalp wound, such as that caused by a club, is the most deceiving type of injury, Rosoff said. It often looks more serious than it is, but there is always the possibility of concussion with any head injury, he explained.

"When an individual has been hit and unconscious, upon regaining consciousness he should stay still," Rosoff said. "He should move only if there is positive danger from staying in the same situation."

Rosoff warned against moving any victim of a head injury or any one dizzied by a blow on the head until a doctor has been called in. He said such an injured person should not be allowed to walk off alone in search of aid because the possibility of serious brain damage.

Symptoms of concussion include a dazed state of shock, white, drawn face and dilated eyes (enlarged pupils), Rosoff explained. He said treatment should consist of subduing the person, having him relax. If other means of transport are available, they would be preferable to allowing the injured person to walk, he added.

Rossoff explained that there are three kinds of gas the demonstrators could run into at Washington: CN tear gas, CS pepper gas, and mace.

"CN looks very milky, comes out of a canister and irritates the mucus membranes of the nose, and eye," he continued. He said treatment would be to wash the eyes with water and to use a few drops of Murine. The skin could also be washed with water because CN is water soluble, Rosoff said. He added that CN is the mildest form of gas used.

Irritation to the nose, and eyes, and a strong stinging sensation to the skin, and sometimes nausea are the symptoms associated with CS, Rosoff continued. He said CS is much stronger than CN and it also appears as a milky cloud.

"Mineral oil should be used to wipe off the skin, and eyes should be washed out with water and a few drops of Murine in the case of CS," Rosoff said. The reason for the different treatment is that CS is not water soluble, he said. If water is put on the skin it will cause a more intense stinging sensation, he explained.

Rosoff said all forms of tear gas cling to clothing and hair. He advised washing of both at the first possible instance to prevent continuation of irritation to eyes. He also said that when hit with gas, be sure to keep the hair off the face.

"Mace is usually squirted from a canister," according to Rosoff. He said it causes severe pain in the eyes and reddening and irritation of exposed skin areas. Ingredients ot mace are CN tear gas, general propellent and kerosine, he added.

Treatment for mace should be heavy irrigation of the eyes and skin for 15 to 20 minutes. Rosoff said. All affected areas should be wiped with rubbing alcohol and eye drops should also be applied he said.

General advise for gas is not to run, Rosoff continued. He said that by running there more gas intake than by walking, despite the longer amount of time.

"In a confrontation the best way to avoid and deal with injury and the injured is to remain cool," Rosoff said. "Reach a medic or first aid station as soon as possible."

During the march first aid stations will be set up at St. Mark's Episcopal Church on 3rd and "A" Street and at St. John's Church on 16th and "H" NW. Three Mobe first aid stations will be at the beginning, middle and end of the march route. General co-ordination headquarters for the week will be at N-PAC, 1029 Vermont Ave NW, telephone 202-638-6601 or 202-638-6225.

High School Reform Recommended

BOSTON (AP)—The state should try to develop high schools that offer comprehensive academic and vocational-training, according to a report released Wednesday by the Massachusetts Advisory Council on Education.

A comprehensive high school, according to Dr. Lloyd Michael of Northeastern University who directed the $100,000 study, is "the type of school that can meet the educational, vocational and avocational needs of all youth in a community most effectively and economically."

"It's A Crazy Idea But It Just Might Work"

"Well, We're Faster Than That Sound Anyhow"

More Than Meets The Eye

Tomorrow begins the long-awaited weekend of April 23-24. For those who are making the trek to Washington, today will be a day of travel and excitement. For those who aren't, it will be a time for thought.

The meaning of this weekend is difficult to pinpoint. That it is a conscientious effort on the part of many devoted people to put an end to the senselessness in Southeast Asia can not be denied. However, in many ways it is more significant than simply a mass demonstration in support of a policy already accepted as the popular feeling in the nation by most Americans. Though this may be the apparent purpose of the whole thing, it will not be the meaning.

In many ways what comes out of the nation's capital in the next few days will be simpler then even the demonstrators suppose. People realize, and have realized ever since the March was in the planning stages, that thousands upon thousands of individuals would come to Washington to demonstrate their antiwar sentiments.

Past experience has taught us that demonstrations of this type produce little in the way of overt results in terms of executive changes in policy. What has been decided by Nixon and his advisors will not seriously be changed by the mere numbers of April 23-24.

In a more roundabout fashion, though, it is possible that it might. The meaning of all of these activities is clear; the peacefulness or lack of it will go a long way in determining the support which the antiwar movement gains or loses. In other words, the prime goal should be to demonstrate that thousands, or hundreds of thousands, of people can congregate to manifest their beliefs without resorting to the violence which has plagued many demonstrations in the past.

Before everything else it must be realized that the nation is watching. Though the safety of the people who go to Washington is important to all, what is even more significant is the reaction that the country at large would have to an outbreak or disruption of any type. Whether you are a revolutionary, a veteran, or even just someone who cares about a friend in Vietnam, you must realize that nothing can be accomplished without a broad base of support. Whether or not that support is forthcoming will be decided by the actions of those people in Washington.

If there is any way of altering what has been decided by the upper echelon of our government, it lies in the demonstration of peacefulness that can come out of April 23-24. That can and must be the meaning of it all.

Children At Play

In case you hadn't noticed, the Student Senate elected its officers last night. In case you didn't know, the Student Senate is your official public voice and levies your student activities tax each year. Just in case you might happen to care, the Student Senate is not the most pleasant thing in the world to watch.

When it holds its election, the members of the Senate, who for some reason call themselves Senators, are even more obnoxious than at other times. Election time means making speeches in front of a microphone. This is very appealing, because when they speak in this manner, the Senators think that they are powerful.

But the Senators are not very powerful. Anything they do can always be slapped down by the Board of Trustees, if the Board feels that the Senate's action could hurt the University.

This has never happened because the Senate has never done anything monumental enough to affect the general workings of this University to the point where it would concern the Trustees.

So the Senators who think that they are important but who, in reality, don't count any more than any other students, put on a show last night.

And, as you might guess, the speeches they make are stirring. They say things like "My candidate is a good man." Good.

It should please the students of this University no end to know that their next Senate President has the courage of John J. McCarthy and the determination of Frank Bellotti as he fights the never ending battle to stop the Stamp Club from being funded.

For, if there is anything more absurd than a grown adolescent's desire to be a Student Senator, than it is his desire to be Senate President. And what could be more obnoxious than hearing the Senators babble and cry over what personality will be chosen to lead them?

It is a good thing that the students of the University don't attend Senate elections in person. If they did, the University Senate would be established in a week and the Student Senate done away with for good.

Subversive And Proud Of It

(Ed. note-The following letter is being sent to J. Edgar Hoover by the undersigned members of the Valley Peace Center)

Dear Mr. Hoover,

In the light of recent revelations of government spying on American citizens, in which your agency has taken a major role, we the undersigned, members of the Valley Peace Center of Amherst, Massachusetts, believe it only right and proper that you investigate our organization for its possible subversive thoughts and activities.

We request this investigation because efforts in favor of peace and justice such as ours have often of late been characterized as aid and comfort to the enemies of this nation, and even as stumbling blocks to victory in Indochina. That the moral and political ideals we so inadequately represent may actually constitute a real counterweight to the pygmy patriotism you and your latest patrons speak for could constitute for us a legitimate source of satisfaction. But only an investigation expressing your distress with our work will make us feel entitled to it. Were your agents actually to attend our meetings we might both profit, in any case, in another way: we from an example of the FBI's legendary efficiency, and you from our example of grass roots democracy at a very human and confused level.

Not all our activities are properly subject to charges of ineffectiveness, however. We are pleased in that relative scale of pleasure the war has forced upon us that our selective service counseling has been steadily expanding, to reach out to an ever wider cross-section of people in this part of the Pioneer Valley. Those who dedicate themselves to this task under our sponsorship have now helped hundreds of young men to form essentially moral judgments about the war, and perhaps even about political life in general, that must differ notably in content and style from those of which you would approve. We say this because we have never thought to measure the worth of our activities in that statistical manner-growth rates, attrition rates, body counts, numbers of names and dossiers on file-so essential to bureaucratic government today.

Furthermore, while as an organization we have never reduced our various sentiments to a creed, we think it fair to say that most of our membership supposes the necessity and desirability of a substantial, not to say radical, restructuring of those very institutions you believe yourself to be defending, and whose spirit increasingly resembles the spirit of suspicion and fearfulness you have helped to give them. We believe this restructuring necessary and desirable because none of us can see how the distorted priorities and means of present policies may be separated from the institutions which have produced and maintain them. On the other hand, we do try to avoid-perhaps not altogether successfully-taking a holier than thou attitude toward people who disagree with us, since we believe such attitudes can be a fruitful source of the repression increasingly characteristic-and newly so at least for the white middle class-of the services you have undertaken for recent Administrations. All of which is to say that we believe in government by discussion in an atmosphere of public confidence rather than in government by liat, faits accomplis, false accusations, fear and dissimulation.

Kest

Lest this request to be investigated by you be thought paranoid, we refer to a directive seized from your Media, Pennsylvania office, asking FBI agents to stimulate paranoia among what you, or they, regard as dissidents. In an age when government itself so demonstrates its own paranoia, ordinary citizens may perhaps be excused for feeling uneasy. Since this is indeed our feeling, we shall try to counter it with another request that is far from paranoid, since it is intended specifically to help Washington regain confidence in the good sense of ordinary Americans. This second request, which you may substitute for the first with our leave, is to call for the immediate resignation of yourself and your closest collaborators in the Bureau. We mean to give this call the widest possible publicity. And we hope you will do the same.

Accessory Before The Fact

To the Editor:

Ever heard of Neil McLaughlin or Joseph Wenderoth? Probably not. They are coming to the Campus Center Auditorium tonight at 8:00. In fact, they are two co-defendants arrested for allegedly conspiring to kidnap Presidential aide Henry Kissinger and blow up part of the Washington heating system. There are many alarming aspects to this case, but one I find particularly upsetting is that this is the first time in the Movement's history that someone has been arrested before any event actually occurred. William Sloane Coffin, Spock et al were arrested because draft cards were turned in; Jerry Rubin, Rennie Davis et al were arrested for the Chicago disturbances during the 1968 Democratic Convention. But with McLaughlin, Wenderoth, Berrigan et al nothing had or has taken place.

The implication is that you may be arrested not for what you have done but for what the FBI thinks you may do. The conspiracy law used against McLaughlin and Wenderoth is another step in the erosion of our civil liberties which protect our society from becoming a totalitarian system.

Another aspect of the Harrisburg case (the trial's location) is that those involved are part of the Catholic Left; all have taken part in or supported nonviolent civil disobedience against the government in open action stemming from their religious convictions. They see the Christian religion demanding that they affirm life through protest. These are dedicated men.

I urge all of you who are concerned about the government's action against these men or interested in their life styles or beliefs to come and hear them speak tonight-it may be the most important thing you ever did for youself, your country or your faith.

"You"

To the Editor:

I came across this bit of prose the other day and I'd like to share it with everyone. The author remains anonymous but it could be hundreds of people.

YOU

Do you remember the time when I borrowed your new car and I dented it....I thought you'd kill me....But you didn't.

Remember the time I spilled blueberry pie all over your rug.....I thought you'd hit me....But you didn't.

And how about the time I forgot to tell you that the dance was formal and you showed up in jeans....I thought you'd drop me....But you didn't.

And remember the day I dragged you to the beach and you said it would rain...and it did....I thought you'd scream, "I told you so!"...But you didn't.

Remember the time I flirted with the guys to get you jealous and you were,....I thought you'd hate me....But you didn't.

Do you remember the countless times you tried to be serious and I would giggle...I thought you'd leave me....But you didn't.

Yes, there were plenty of things you didn't do, but you put up with me, understood me, protected me, and loved me, and there are so many things I wanted to tell you and make up to you when you came home from Viet Nam....But you didn't.

Yerevan

To the Editor:

April 24 marks the anniversary of the 1915 massacre of the Armenians by the Turks. John Updike wrote a poem about Yerevan, the capital city of Armenia.

Armenia, Asia's waif, has here at last constructed shelter proof
Against all Turkish massacre.
A soft volcanic rock called toof
Carves easily and serves to be
The basis of boulevards
That lead from slums of history
Into a future stripped of swords.
The hotel, pink and cresent shaped,
Faces a fountain. Mountains, tan
And sere, bear poles for power raped,
Affectionately, from Lake Sevan.
Mount Ararat, a conscience, floats cloudlike, in sight but unpossessed,
For here, where Noah docked his boat,
Begins the brutal, ancient West.

You Missed It

To the editor:

Last Wednesday night, April 14, we attended an outstanding performance of "The Best of Both Worlds".

We are writing this letter on behalf of the actors, Maureen Hurley and Darryl Croxton, who were wondering why the UMass audience was so few in number (under 25), when they always get crowds touring other college campuses.

To the profs--Why wasn't it publicized better in your English, Speech, and Theatre classes?

You really missed a great experience!!

They're All Hawks

To the Editor:

The term "Red-baiting" is a catchword concocted by the left for the purpose of intimidating or silencing that which they fear...intellectual opposition to Marxism. Those who employ the term do so with the intent of likening anti-communism with antisemitism, sometimes called "Jew-baiting." Such a semantic lacade doesn't have any validity. Racists are people who hate other people because of their ethnic background. Intellectual anti-communists have nothing in common with bigots. Their opposition is to an ideology which has given the world nothing but totalitarian police states.

I have been accused of supporting Nixon's policy of "escalation" and of trying to shut off the antiwar movement at UMass. Both accusations are false. The overwhelming majority of antiwar activists demand OUT as an end in itself. The minority of Marxists demand OUT not as an end, but as a means to a end. To them, the end is total Communist victory. To me, they are just hawks on the other side. The aims of the anti-war in general are aims which I support, and have always supported. I don't think one has to be opposed to the anti-war movement in order to be critical of the minority of Marxists within it.

Lastly, I have participated in an effort to challenge the Student Senate funding of the MOBE because I am opposed to any political group receiving funds expropriated involuntarily from the student body. Since MOBE claims to have a large following, they should have no trouble surviving on voluntary donations.

Ode To Spring

The day is soon comming
For the fun and the cheer
There'll be amusements for everyone
And plenty of beer

So watch for the day
At eleven twenty-three
And as everyone knows
It's the time for the spree

The bells will ring
The sun will shine
And believe me, man
It'll be a good time

The State House of Representatives gave initial approval to a bill Tuesday which would lower the drinking age in Massachusetts to 18. That must come as a large relief to all you beer freaks out there.

* * * *

If people had known that ping pong would have such a great influence on international relations, perhaps finding a suitable table for the Paris Peace talks wouldn't have been such a hassle.

* * * *

At the same time as the 18 year old drinking age is being discussed in the Massachusetts House, Sen. George Aiken (R-VT) has proposed that the U.S. Constitution be changed so that 18 year olds be allowed to become members of Congress.

Perhaps the connection is more than coincidence.

Bernard Borman, in a study published in yesterday's Boston Globe, listed 16 reasons for the decline of the city of Boston. Among the categories named were age, governmental structure, ethnicism, lack of respect for government, limited experiences, corruption, the alienated voter, institutionalization, frozen funds, Ivy League schools, educational system, establishment, civic spirit, New England environment, newspapers and TV, and overorganization. If you're not guilty of one of those things then you probably don't live in Boston. Or anywhere else for that matter.

Names Are The Game

To the Editor:

Claire Moriarty, local curvy Trotskyite feminist and sometime supporter of grape pickers, lettuce pickers, gay liberationists, abortionists, environmentalists, black self-determinists, ad infiniumists thinks I'm "paternalistic" because I argue that the college people from UMass who go to Washington 24 April are inadvertently playing into the crazies hands. Lets face facts, Claire and those of her mentality have no more desire to see an immediate withdrawal or easy solution to Vietnam than Curtis LeMay or the Rev. Carl McIntire do, though for different reasons. An easy solution would indicate the system continues to be respondent to its citizens urgings...in a strictly marxian context a system must have exhausted its potential for self correction in order for a precipitant permanent revolution to occur. In other words if the YSA/SDS lose their "issue" because it is resolved within the existing governmental apparatus, then they stand to lie awake waiting for the revolution for one hell of a long time.

The question to be answered is how fast should the withdrawal proceed. The majority of Americans have always, and continue to favor "phased withdrawal" after it became clear the United States had no intention of trying to "win". But Claire says "immediately", and Nixon says when we get our prisoners back and it looks as if the South Vietnamese nation has a decent chance of standing on its own. In the meantime, the last 18 months have seen 200,000 GI's return (mostly combat troops), and by this coming December another 100,000 will leave. By election time all ground forces will be out. The entire demonstration scenario suddenly begins to look like "chasing an ebb tide out to sea".

Here's where the difficulty sets in: the revolutionary mentality must capitalize quickly on the continuously diminishing heat generated by this issue before it, (Vietnam), becomes a non-issue (soon). A spring day, April 24, is chosen by the MOBE, YSA, and SDS, tens of thousands of dollars of student tax money goes into having capitalist printing presses make up first class propaganda posters and leaflets containing all the latest cliches. Full page spreads in the collegiate and other university papers are taken out advertising the event. And Claire's crew begins working over-time. Anyone with half a brain today wants to get out, unfortunately though, it appears a common concensus that all the YSA/SDS freaks share the same objectives as the huge majority of young Americans. This is a patent distortion, of course.

Once the demonstration is underway in Washington, the crazies will probably attempt to provoke an incident with the National Guard or cops in their usual fashion. A perfect illustration of the tactics employed to get innocents "involved" occurred in Boston one Saturday night last February when the Second American Revolution was slated to kick off in Kenmore Square about 10:30 P.M. YSA and SDS goons from Brandeis and BU planned to intermingle with the completely unassuming and apolitical dating-bar gang who converge in force on Kenmore Square each Saturday night. Revolution or no Revolution. They were then going to start hitting the Boston Police with rocks and lug nuts from inside the crowd. I don't care what your political affiliation is, if you get hit in the face with a rock it may tend to tick you off somewhat. The idea, of course, was to get the cops to charge into a crowd of people who didn't know what the hell was going on. Hysteria was bound to occur, because in the cops' frenzied efforts to catch the SOB's who were hitting them they were bound to bump into innocent people on a crowded sidewalk. So the next thing you know the inevitable explosion occurs.

It doesn't take Jean Dixon to see how the same tactics could be used in Washington, with a predictable disintegration of crowd control, and the inevitable brutality and tragedy following close behind. Cop or soldier, they're human too, and have, like all the rest of us, a limited toleration for abuse. By going down there with people whose announced intention it is to overthrow your country and impose their collectivist nightmare here, you may well be providing your body as fuel to assist the crazies in making another issue to replace the Vietnam issue, which is rapidly falling apart right before their eyes. If they can cause a massacre, say by shooting down cops or soldiers from within the crowd and make them return the fire....here we go again.

If you are so bored that getting gassed or knocked into tomorrow sounds like fun, may I suggest the University's sky-diving club as an alternate activity. For $30 you will be trained, equipped, taken up 2000 feet in a plane and dropped into thin air. At some point in your fall you have the analogous option of pulling the ripcord or not. It's really up to you, at that point. Think about what you're doing? Enough "paternalism" for now. GOODNIGHT CLAIRE!

Subsidies Said Needed For Amherst Rent Drop

AMHERST-The landlord-tenant relations committee of Amherst met recently with the League of Women Voters Human Resources Committee which had conducted a study of Amherst rents and the formulation of those rents.

Discovering in this study that the private sector builds the conventional family unit which is not geared to the student life style, the League pointed out that to obtain low-rent housing in Amherst, it would be necessary to have a subsidized program, as students are 70 per cent of the town's population.

Created at the 1970 town meeting, the landlord-tenant relations committee has for ten months been receiving grievances from both landlords and tenants, working to resolve problems.

Under Chairman Stevenson W. Fletcher, the committee is working to establish methods of avoiding problem situations before they occur. One example is the creation of a list of the rights of tenants and landlords which is to be distributed to landlords and real estate agents.

Also under consideration is an approved lease which would be used as a framework. Richard Howland, general counsel for students at the University of Massachusetts, noted the difficulty in creating one lease in a community consisting of a shifting population.

To lodge a complaint, the tenant or landlord should write to the committee all pertinent information, it was noted. Generally a solution is reached following the consideration and recommendation of the committee, it was explained.

One of the major problems causing high rents in the Amherst area, continued Howland, is the allocation of taxes, with student complexes carrying a heavy burden of school taxes when few children from these apartments attend town schools.

The University is now considering a formula plan for married students which would provide university housing for which rent would be taken out of the pay of the student when he is in the employ of the University.

Another possibility would be to pay 12 months' rent in 10 months with the option of subletting during the summer.

Militant Forum Focuses On Situation In Prague

The UMass chapter of Young Socialist Alliance is enlisting in the international defense campaign to free 18 young Czechoslovaks accused of "Trotskyist activities." 16 of the defendants were convicted on March 19 on charges of "subversion" and given sentences ranging from one to four years; two others await trial.

The YSA will be sponsoring a forum to discuss the situation in Prague tonight. As part of the Militant Forum series, Sidney Finehirsh will speak at 8:00 in Room 163 of the UMass Campus Center. The forum is open to the public.

Also, the YSA group is sponsoring a petition to be sent to the Czech consulate in New York City. The petition reads: "We, the undersigned socialists, nationalists, leminists, and gay activitists struggling for revolutionary change within the greatest imperialist power in the world--the United States--express our international solidarity with the Prague defendants charged with "Trotskyist activities" and demand their immediate release.

"We understand that the crime of "Trotskyism" is used by the present Czech government leaders to repress anyone who opposes the present bureaucratic regime in the name of socialist democracy.

"We stand unconditionally in support of the socialist system of Czechoslovakia embodied in the state ownership and planning of the means of of production. But we feel that thought control and political show trials not only fail to protect socialism from imperialist attacks, but actually aid imperialism by constituting a slander of the very idea of socialism.

"Socialism, yes! Bureaucracy, no."

A summary of charges which were prepared in Prague by the Czech government against the 18 young students and workers included the following:

--Posting the "Manifesto of the Revolutionary Youth Movement" in the Philosophy Department of Charles University in Prague;

--Organizing a demonstration at the East German embassy to protest the expulsion of Burmese students from East Germany;

--Encouraging members of the group to read articles by Trotsky, Bukharin, and Djilas.

One defendant was also charged with the "crime of translating works of Trotskyists and revisionists." The summary of the indictment stated that the defendants "wanted to replace the state and party apparatus by a system of so-called 'self-management' of the entire people."

For more information, everyone is invited to the YSA table in the UMass Student Union, set up every Thursday.

Frieburg Program Gains Popularity

Next year's Freiburg Program will enroll about 30 students. More students have applied for the program than ever before and applications are even beginning to come in for the 1972-73 program.

A meeting about next year's program is scheduled for 8:00 p.m. Thursday April 22 in Room 164-171 in the Campus Center. Students admitted to next year's program or who are interested in applying for the program in another year are invited to the meeting.

A number of students who have been in the Freiburg Program in past years will be at the meeting to answer questions about the program, including how to find housing in Freiburg, living costs, and other aspects of life as a student at the University of Freiburg. Next year's program director, Professor Peter Fliess, will also be present.

Slides of Freiburg and the surrounding countryside will be shown and light refreshments will be served. Students interested in learning about the Freiburg Program are urged to attend.

Intern Program Operates

A student intern program is now in operation in the President's office. Its purposes include the development of effective day-to-day contact with student representatives, an easier flow of information, training in University staff operations, and providing analysis and recommendations for University-wide student affairs.

This semester, two students are participating in the intern program: Miss Betty Pugh and James Triplett.

Miss Pugh, from UMass-Amherst, is a senior Sociology major from Elmont, New York, who has been actively involved on the Amherst campus for the past four years. Her most recent activities were co-chairman of SWAP and president of the Campus Center Governing Board.

Mr. Triplett, from UMass-Boston, is a sophomore in pre-med from Marblehead, Massachusetts. He entered the University in 1965 with the first class on the Boston campus and was involved in the Mass. Media, Dramatics Club and student government before interrupting his studies with a tour in the United States Navy.

Miss Pugh and Mr. Triplett are currently involved in exploring alternatives for interaction between students and student groups from each campus. They are also investigating avenues for improved student communication and the further design of the intern program.

Army Defends Use of Paid National Ads

WASHINGTON (AP)–Under attack by congressmen seeking to bar the government from buying radio and television time, the Pentagon defended Wednesday its use of paid broadcast advertising.

If the Army's 13-week, $10-million recruiting campaign is a success, the military should have the chance to use paid ads in a total national drive to cut and eventually end reliance on the draft, said Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense Paul Woolstadt.

While stressing no decision has been made on future use of paid ads, he conceded under close questioning by the House Communications subcommittee that other service branches are not enthusiastic about the idea and they are not likely to want to proceed with it once the Army's experiment ends.

Woolstadt said the Army's test involves $2 million for TV time, $1 million for radio, $1.2 million for production costs, $200,000 for a telephone answering service to handle leads generated by the ads, $100,000 for travel and $100,000 for research.

We simply hope that the stations will continue to make time available without charge, to each of the services to help in their recruiting which is so vital to our national defense," he added.

He estimated that during 1970, the Army got $8 million worth of free radio and TV time, the Air Force $11.6 million, the Navy $9.5 million and the Marine Corps $5 million.

Erosion Of Faculty Purchasing Power Cited

Last year, for the first time in more than two decades, the average gain in salaries for college and university faculty members fell below the increase in the cost of living.

This indication of a "continuing erosion" of faculty purchasing power was cited in the annual survey of faculty salaries done by the American Assn. of University Professors.

The uniformly gloomy report, released at the association's meeting in Philadelphia, said that the academic boom years of rising enrollments and salaries have ended and that the immediate future looks dim.

"1970 was a bad year for the academic profession," the report said. "Whether it ushers in a disastrous decade remains to be seen. It is a possibility that cannot be ignored."

The report, which contains information submitted by 1367 institutions, showed that average faculty salaries grew 5.4 percent last year, compared to a six point increase in the consumer price index (average compensation, which includes salaries and fringe benefits, grew 6.2 percent.)

Since salaries in some institutions and for some categories of faculty were well below the average increase, the report pointed out that "for some the cut in real living standards has been large."

The effects have been especially painful, the report said, in areas such as Boston and New York where the combination of higher costs and higher living standards added up to more than nine percent last year.

The squeeze on faculty salaries is part of the overall bleak financial picture in higher education, the report said, and is aggravated by the fact that faculty are now in a buyers rather than a sellers market. While college enrollments are leveling off, the production of graduate schools is rising, the report noted, leading to the so-called "PhD" glut in the academic market place.

Faced with this situation, the report said, colleges and universities will have to make difficult decisions about how to allocate resources.

This year, for the first time, the annual survey does not assign letter grades to each institution based on its faculty salaries. Instead institutions are ranked from one to 10 based on their salaries compared to other institutions in their category.

The average salary for all ranks of faculty in all kinds of institutions was $14,707. The average range for the entire country was from $19,600 for a full professor at a university to $8200 for an instructor at a two-year school.

Comparable figures for New England ranged from $21,470 to $9030. Massachusetts schools which ranked high compared to institutions in their categories were Amherst, Babson, Bentley, Boston College, Harvard, Lowell Tech, MIT, Smith, Wellesley and Williams.

Salary Standings

Following is a partial list of Massachusetts colleges that submitted information to the AAUP salary survey. The numbers indicate where each institution stands, measured against others in its category, in salaries for professors, associate and assistant professors and instructors. The scale ranges from one to 10, with one being the highest.

Development Walk Coming May 8-9

The major objective of the International Walk for Development which will be held in 39 other countries simultaneously with those in the U.S., May 8-9 is to focus worldwide attention on those measures necessary to enable every man to achieve a decent standard of living and his highest individual development said Mike McCoy, student head of the organization.

According to McCoy, International Walk Day will focus on Reducing worldwide military expenditures, thereby permitting nations to use their resources for more constructive purposes;

Assuring an adequate income for every family and for every nation through an equitable distribution of work opportunities and world trade;

Providing a minimally sound diet for the current world population;

Harnessing the growth of the world's population;

Learning to appreciate diversity of culture and values among the world's peoples;

Reversing the degradation of the earth and its environment.

In addition to their educational objectives, the International Walks raise money for domestic and international self-help projects ranging from nutrition education among Dakota Indians to agricultural scholarships for South Korean youth McCoy said. Worldwide the walks are sponsored by the U.N. Food and Agricultural Organization; Young World Development of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation is the U.S. sponsor, he added.

U.S. walkers plan to meet a goal of $8 million this year by having each walker enlist a sponsor (or sponsors) who agree to pay him from 1¢ to $10 for each mile walked said McCoy. Generally the walk routes are from 20 to 30 miles in length, he said.

Groups desiring to participate in the Walk for Development are urged to contact the International Walk for Development, 1717 H Street, N.W., Washington, D.C., 202-872-4727, concluded McCoy.

Bromery Proposes 'Paired College Concept'

A UMass educator has proposed a "Paired College Concept" to provide a greater opportunity for Black students to choose careers and gain access to college training in the earth sciences.

Dr. Randolph W. Bromery, professor of geology and vice-chancellor for student affairs at UMass, introduced his concept as a member of the Advisory Committee on Minority Group Members in Earth Sciences of the Geological Society of America. The committee was created to formulate programs and locate funding sources necessary to recruit black and other minority group students into the earth sciences (Geology, Oceanography, Geophysics, and Meteorology).

It was adopted as one of the primary recommendations of the Advisory Committee, which met in Boulder, Colorado in March. The proposal will be submitted to the Governing Council of the Geological Society of America in late April.

Dr. Bromery explained the concept this way: "If brought into operation, the 'Paired College Concept' will permit Black students enrolled in predominantly Black Colleges to major in a geological science by taking geology courses from an adjacent predominantly White college or university. The student would continue his enrollment in the Black College, take all other course work and receive his degree from the Black institution.

"The Black College catalog would include the complete course listing and other information concerning the geological science department (geology, oceanography, geophysics, environmental science, etc.) of the Paired College' as if the department were an integral part of the Black College.

Included in the proposal are recommendations for student scholarships, financial incentive grants to Paired Colleges, for teaching and administrative costs, summer employment programs for Black inner city high school and college students, and summer geological field camps designed to serve as Junior High School stations.

Dr. Bromery is an educational administrator nationally-known for his work in recruiting minority group students. He is also active as a scientist. His spring, for example, he served as a member of the National Academy of Sciences Conference on Minority Group Participation in Science and is chairman of the Advisory Committee to the American Geological Institute's Earth Science Teacher Preparation Project headquarters in Boulder, Col.

He also delivered a seminar at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn. on "Geological Interpretation of Aeromagnetic and Aeroradioactivity Surveys."

Participants in the seminar were selected from professional geologists and geophysicists at forming the Northeast Section of the Geological Society of America Meeting in Hartford, Conn. and graduate students and faculty from the Department of Geology at Wesleyan University.

He has been invited to be the principal speaker at the Saint John College Commencement in Cleveland May 14. He was selected by members of the student government and approved by the President.

Dr. Bromery is an exploration geophysicist who formerly headed the geology department at UMass. He helped found and later been president of CCERS at UMass—the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students.

Bloody Campaign, Lie-In Start Soon

A massive demonstration is being planned for the U. Mass. campus two weeks from now; a demonstration by students and faculty that they really care about their fellow man.

The Massachusetts Red Cross guarantees that blood will be spilled during the demonstration, from student arms into plastic bags for transfusion later into hospital patients.

In what the Red Cross hopes will be a record-breaking "lie-in," students and faculty are being asked to sign up as blood donors. The Bloodmobile will be on campus May 4,5, and 6 from 9:30 to 4:30 in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

Those interested in participating in a meaningful and relevant demonstration, should sign up in front of the Campus Center Bookstore Monday through Friday, April 26-30, from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. This will allow the Red Cross to make adequate arrangements.

A continuous shortage of blood exists in Massachusetts. On the average day, hospitals in the state use over 1000 pints of whole blood for transfusion to patients, most of which is provided by the Red Cross.

But the average number of pints donated to the Red Cross per day amounts to only 70 percent of the need. Now that students between the ages of 18 and 21 no longer need parental permission to donate, students have a challenge to help increase this average.

Remember, the Red Cross can't transfuse excuses, so sign up to donate today.

New Journalism Course Slated For Next Fall

A new course, titled "The Rhetoric of Journalism" (Eng 380, Sect E80) is scheduled for next Fall by the newest member of the journalistic studies faculty of the English Dept. at UMass.

Howard M. Ziff will offer the three-credit course at 2:30 p.m., MWF. He has been appointed associate professor of English, effective Sept. 1. He is presently assistant professor of journalism at the School of Communication of the University of Illinois.

According to Ziff, "The course deals with the imaginative style of the journalist. The approach is to deal with some classic journalistic standards in terms of the social and rhetorical resources of the reporters."

Further description of the course, he says, involves "viewing the contemporary scene and the rhetorical options being chosen. The student interested in professional journalism and the student interested in instant literature are invited."

Requirements of the course include "possibly two papers: one critical; one in the form of a piece of journalism. The latter will require no previous journalistic training. The course will be conducted through lectures and class discussion, and is limited to 20 students," he said.

Zero Population

Persons further interested in the zero population series that has appeared in the Collegian should contact Jack Maytum and George Wilder at 581-8597 for more information.

JV's Win At Amherst

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

AMHERST—Revenge was the order of the day at Pratt field yesterday as fireballing southpaw Steve Merrill fired a brilliant two hitter and drove in the winning run with a base hit as the UMass JV's avenged a 6-0 setback Saturday with a polished 1-0 verdict in the cold and wind across town.

Merrill was simply immense throughout as the tall lefty fanned thirteen stickers and walked only one in going the rout. Only a line double to right by Considine in the first frame and Chris Williams' single to left in the second eventually separated Merrill from no hit immortality. Merrill started strong and finished stronger while retiring the last seven in order including the side in the eighth on strikes.

While Merrill was mowing down the Lord Jeffs nonchalantly, the Little Redmen were not exactly tearing the horsehide apart. The visitors managed but four hits throughout, but strung together a pair of walks, a wild pitch, and a single by Steve Merrill to produce the margin of victory in the second.

Starter Servini generously donated the free passes as Larry Heron started the inning with a gift. Then Tony Serino laid down a perfect sacrifice bunt pushing Heron into scoring position. After the runner moved to third on a wild pitch, Merrill slammed a Servini slant on a line to left to literally win his own game.

Against Merrill's sharpness only one mild thrust went by the boards. In the second Chris Williams singled to left but wound up at third after a two base throwing error on an infield grounder. However, an errant squeeze play cost the Lord Jeffs the equalizer.

Offensively only Merrill, Mike Phillips, Tony Serino, and Ken Brewer garnered base knocks. However, a gusting wind from right field held up some fairly hard shots off the Redman bats.

The JV's have now leveled off their season's mark at 2-2. Merrill has undoubtably become the number one man on Coach Wilson's staff. The lefty has been just short of perfect on the hill. In 13 innings to date Merrill has yet to surrender a run, K's 18, and allowed but three free passes.

However, the Little Redmen will have to find some suitable hitting stride by the time Saturday rolls around as UMass will travel to Springfield College for a double header starting at 1 p.m. Coach Wilson would like to go again with Merrill but the logical choices for the double header are Ed Kurr, Eric Levine, and Glen Campbell.

Merrill, who went with the Varsity on their southern swing, looks as though he belongs in the big time after yesterday's performance. Although the wind was frigid enough to stiffen your arteries, Merrill stayed loose with a quick fastball and a dancing curve ball that baffled Amherst from start to finish. His control was near pin point as the southpaw fashioned a stimulating effort which no doubt will bring a smile to Coach Berguist's face.

Bosox Down Indians

BOSTON (AP)—Exploding for four fifth inning runs, the Boston Red Sox came from behind to defeat the Cleveland Indians, 9-7, yesterday.

Boston trailed 7-2 at one stage, but the four-run fifth capped by Billy Conigliaro's three-run homer moved the Red Sox close, then John Kennedy's double and Reggie Smith's run-producing single tied it in the sixth.

Sparky Lyle came on to blank the Indians over the next two innings, and got credit for the victory when the Red Sox rallied in the eighth.

A walk, a pair of wild pitches by Cleveland starter Steve Hargan and Yastrzemski's first hit gave the Red Sox a 1-0 lead in the first inning, but starter Ray Culp was shelled for five runs in an extra base hit barrage by the Indians in the third.

Larry Brown started it with a single, then after one out Buddy Bradford, Vada Pinson and Ray Fosse hit successive doubles and Graig Nettles blasted a two-run homer.

Yaz got one run back with his homer in the third, but the Indians picked up an unearned run thanks to an error by Petrocelli in the fourth and made it 7-2 in the fifth when Reggie Smith lost Fosse's fly ball in the sun for a triple and the Cleveland catcher scored on Ken Harrelson's single.

Smith started Boston's fifth inning rally by drawing a walk. Yaz and Petrocelli singled for one run, then after two out, Conigliaro hit his second homer of the year into the left field screen to cut the deficit to one run.

Stickmen Lose Thriller To Harvard

By STEVE FERBER
MDC Staff

In a see-saw heartbreaker, the UMass lacrosse team went down to defeat at the hands of the Harvard stickmen, 7-6 in overtime. Yesterday afternoon's contest saw three goals find their way into the nets in the final 75 seconds of the overtime period. Two of those were by the Harvard ballclub as UMass lost a game in which they never trailed, at least until 45 seconds were left.

Despite Harvard's early pressing tactics, Garber's Gorilla's roared out to a 2-0 lead. It was Ritch on an unassisted at 2:33, which was closely followed by a Phil Sheridan goal. It was Lou Marinacci who flung the pass over to Sheridan, and with less than six minutes gone UMass was on their way.

Bruce Crawford was playing an excellent game in the goal and the Redmen defense was containing the Ivy Leaguers in fine fashion. But with just 19 seconds left in the opening quarter Harvard got on the board. It was Ducky Hayes who picked the ball up on the rebound to bring the home team one goal closer.

The fourth penalty of the game began the second quarter and just as soon as UMass had killed off their penalty Harvard scored again. It was a pass from Zuckerman to Milerkin that knotted it at 2-2.

John Gannon quickly got the Redmen back on top gathering in a pass from Charley Hardy at 4:08 for the temporary lead. Again Zuckerman came back, this time with an unassisted goal and the half ran out with a 3-3 tie.

Half number two saw a Harvard penalty enable the Redmen to score goal number four. It was Ritch, with his second of the day, again off of a Marinacci feed that put U Mass on top. But again big 6'4 220 lb. Phil Zuckerman got the lyies even, and with just over 8 minutes left in the third period it was 4-4. Scoring came quickly as quarter number three progressed. Ritch again, this time unassisted, gave the UMass stickmen the lead in the seesaw battle. But just 53 seconds later, at 13:43 it was all knotted again. John Haggerty was the home club's scorer, as his unassisted effort closed out the scoring in regulation time.

The final 15 minutes were all defense. UMass was losing its poise and hurrying their chances as the final 60 minutes ran out. The Redmen were playing control ball, in contrast to their normal style of run-run fast breaking.

Overtime was the next matter of business, and two four minute periods constituted overtime number one. The opening four saw little of anything, no close chances, and a close checking game. Then Harvard was called for a penalty, as the second four-minute period began. UMass was unable to score as they were held in check nicely by Harvard and with two minutes left in the overtime, a second one looked inevitable. But suddenly Ritch found the net, and his fourth goal of the day at 2:45 left UMass only 75 seconds away from victory.

Then 15 seconds later Bob Green scored an unassisted goal, and with a minute to play both teams had 6 scores.

The crusher came only 15 seconds later as Harvard's Haggerty scored his second solo goal and 3/4 of a minute later UMass went down to defeat.

Netmen Beat By Amherst Bounce Back vs. MIT

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

Rebounding strongly from their 8-1 loss to Amherst, the UMass tennis team knocked off a tough MIT squad 6-3 yesterday afternoon.

On Tuesday the netmen took off for Amherst's clay courts and had more than a hard time of it. Amherst whipped through Alan Goldberg and Jim Bornheim, dropping only two games in the first two matches. Then third singles went Amherst's way to the tune of 7-5, 6-3 with John Bloom falling to Mark Coffin.

As the home team went down the line Mark Brass suffered loss number four for UMass, also falling 7-5, 6-3. Then Amherst wrapped up its five points with a win in the sixth slot, as Fred Braley came out on the short end of a 6-3, 6-1 score.

From there fifth singles saw Steve Ferber drop a long 10-8 set before injuring his left leg, and falling 6-0 in the second set. From there doubles were just as much trouble for the Redmen, as the combination of the slow surface, and the strictly superior play of the boys cross town were too much for the visitors.

John Bloom and Chris Coffin managed to earn UMass its only point, pulling out a three set victory in 7-5, 4-6, 7-5 fashion.

Yesterday's match against the Engineers gave the Redmen a chance to show their stuff on their home surface, and they came through in fine style. As they split the Tuesday-Wednesday series with two of their toughest opponents of the year, UMass captured four of the six singles positions and glided in from there.

After dropping first and second singles UMass fought back. John Bloom recovered from a 6-0 first set loss and won the next two sets in 6-0, 6-4 style. With UMass down by a point, Steve Ferber recovered from a temporary lapse to take his match 6-0, 8-6. Ferber had no trouble in the opening set, but fell behind 4-0 in the second before rebounding to win the match.

With the match at two points apiece Mark Brass put UMass on top to stay with a 6-2, 9-7 victory in the fifth singles slot. Minutes later Fred Braley gave UMass a 4-2 lead to the tune of 6-3, 6-3, and the doubles began with UMass one point away from victory.

Redmen Nine Seek Revenge At URI

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

When one team can so wreck the title aspirations of another, such as what Rhode Island did to the UMass baseball team last year, there is no second guessing as to the amount of motivation each player will have to get his due revenge.

This afternoon at Rhode Island the UMass baseball team will have its chance to settle a score with the Rammme in a game starting at 3 p.m.

In hot pursuit of league champ UConn last season the Redmen were derailed twice in 4 close ball games by Rhode Island and looking back over this coach Dick Bergquist said, "that killed us as far as the conference title was concerned last year."

One of the culprits on last year's Rhody team will be on the mound today. His name is Brian Sheeky and he's a good one. Last year he two-hit the Redmen at Rhode Island outdueling Don Anderson, 2-1.

In his last outing, Sheeky two-hit Boston College as the Rams defeated the Eagles, 2-0. There is no doubt from last year's season performances and the mound work he has done this spring that the Redmen will have their work cut out for them today.

If Sheeky thought he was in a duel last year, he may have more of one this afternoon as Bergquist will be sending sophomore left-thander Tom White to the mound. White was super in his last start on Saturday limiting Vermont to only one scratch hit while striking out 15 Catamounts in a complete game performance.

The remainder of the Redmen lineup will have Tom McDermott behind the plate, Mark Palau, Jim Saracino, Eddie McMahon and Jim Kiley in the infield with Jack Conroy, Charlie Manley and Brian Martin in the outfield.

The Redmen are currently 8-4 on the season and 3-1 in Yankee Conference play and will have to keep winning to again keep pace with UConn which has run off 10 straight victories including Yankee Conference action.

The setting is just about the same for this game as it was last year at this time with one exception. A hungry bunch of Redman ballplayers have a score to settle this year.

DIAMOND DUST—In the latest baseball stats Palau is the leading Redman hitter amongst the starters with a .355 average. Bergquist has been talking of his team's speed this season and with 35 bases stolen in 40 attempts he has the material to back him up. Manley leads the Redmen with 14 out of 14, followed by Conroy with eight for eight and McMahon six for seven...Chip Baye and Tom King lead the mound crew. Baye has not allowed an earned run in 16 innings, King has an earned run average of 0.31 and has also struck out 39 batters in 29 innings...Adding the effective performances of Jack Bernardo, White and John Olsen the Redman hurlers have a combined ERA of 0.96 which is unheard of in collegiate ranks...Next home game is Saturday against UNH. On this day Varsity Field will be dedicated to Earl E. Lorden, former Redman baseball coach.

Tennis Coach Remembers '50 Champs

By FRED ROSENTHAL
MDC Staff

Head coaches Stephen Kosakowski (tennis) and Dick Bergquist (baseball) were featured guests at yesterday's Varsity M club luncheon.

Speaking before a small gathering at the Newman Center Kosakowski explained humorously how his tennis team of 1950 won the first Yankee Conference championship ever won by a UMass team in any sport. The coach told how one of his players was able to befriend the opposition the night before the match the teams were comprised of two players each then and get them drunk out of their minds; thus making them totally ineffective the next day.

Continuing on a humorous note Kosakowski gave away his secrets to winning in the Yankee Conference. One must "withstand cheating by the opposition cheat a little yourself, and be more vociferous than the opponent."

He then ended his speech with some remarks on the sport of tennis itself commenting that it is "not a sissy sport" but "an individual, tough sport to play." He added that his players are as closely knit a group as players in any other sport.

Coach Bergquist had his two star pitchers with him, lefthanders Tom White and Tom King. White, who pitched a one hitter against Vermont last weekend, told about playing in the Cape League last summer. "Playing in the Cape League helped me during the past season. I feel like I can beat just about any team right now."

Both King and White were drafted by major league teams out of high school. White was drafted by Houston and King was drafted by Boston on the fifth round.

In previewing the rest of the season Bergquist said that his deep pitching staff, which allowed only one baserunner to reach third in 27 innings against Vermont, defense, and speed should be able to win some of the key games coming up in the next week or so.

Golfers At Home Today

By ALAN WRIGHT
MDC Staff

Today, UMass takes on Holy Cross and Boston College in an important triangle meet at Hickory Ridge C.C. Tee-off time is 1:30. The lineup should read something like Cicconi, Puzas, Minkos, King, Towle, Salter and Langevin as Coach Page has decided to stick with the experienced seniors. As usual, they will be playing the middle tees which total about 6400 yards.

The course, which is in relatively good condition for this early in the season, has been putting very tough and this will have to affect some scores. Boston College and Holy Cross are both good teams with some excellent prospects. Holy Cross has already beat Providence and Yale, and it's a sure bet that they will be eager to prevent UMass from extending it's early season winning streak.

Faculty Senate Adopts New Calendar

By LINDA A. BALICKI
MDC Staff

The Faculty Senate last night adopted a new calendar for the academic year 1972-73 and heard Student Senate President Glenn Elters declare that "The student revolution has come to UMass."

Other business included the endorsement of a pre-paid group practice plan for the University Health Services and the tabling for further investigation of a proposal to change the number of credits which must be taken on a graded basis.

The calendar adopted by the Senate begins the year on September 5 with exams for first semester coming before Christmas and second semester beginning January 22 and ending May 26. It was offered by Dave Booth chairman of the Space and Calendar Committee as a compromise between the traditional calendar under which we now operate and the original proposal of his committee which would have seen classes beginning August 29.

In his comments concerning the Faculty Senate and the faculty in general Elters commented that in his experience the Senate "has proven to be unsympathetic toward student problems and is unwilling to even attempt to understand students. This body has not engaged in debate with students in good faith and has dismissed student opinion as adolescent rhetoric."

He went on to add that "This body has refused to change the status quo in regard to student participation in any substantial matter. You have allowed a group of reactionary faculty members (I refer to them as academic fascists, they refer to themselves as the faculty group for academic freedom) to inflict its views upon this University with increasing regularity."

Elters also stated "In the near future I am sure the Student Senate will review student participation in Faculty Senate committees and where such representation is viewed as tokenism students will be removed and no new students will be appointed."

In commenting on the recent fate of the Report on Campus Governance Elters noted that "the nature of the debate in this body has shown this body is again willing to support the status quo and is not in any way in favor of involving students in the governance of this campus and in mutual, joint efforts to decide the problems and the future of this University. This, coupled with the complete unwillingness of this faculty to be responsive to alternatives in education have been the last straw. We will no longer tolerate it."

In conclusion Elters remarked "We are unsatisfied with the methods of the past we will not allow ourselves to be dealt with as we have been dealt with in the past. I envision a state of war existing between this body and the Student Senate. I pray for our victory and the creation of a truely free university. He also stated that his comments were supported by the newly elected Student Senate officers and by the President of the Graduate Student Senate.

The pre-paid group plan as adopted by the Senate would reorganize University Health Services so as to make billing and care more effective by allowing students to pay for all their health care needs at the beginning of the year which will cover all services.

Elters Sees Faculty-Student War

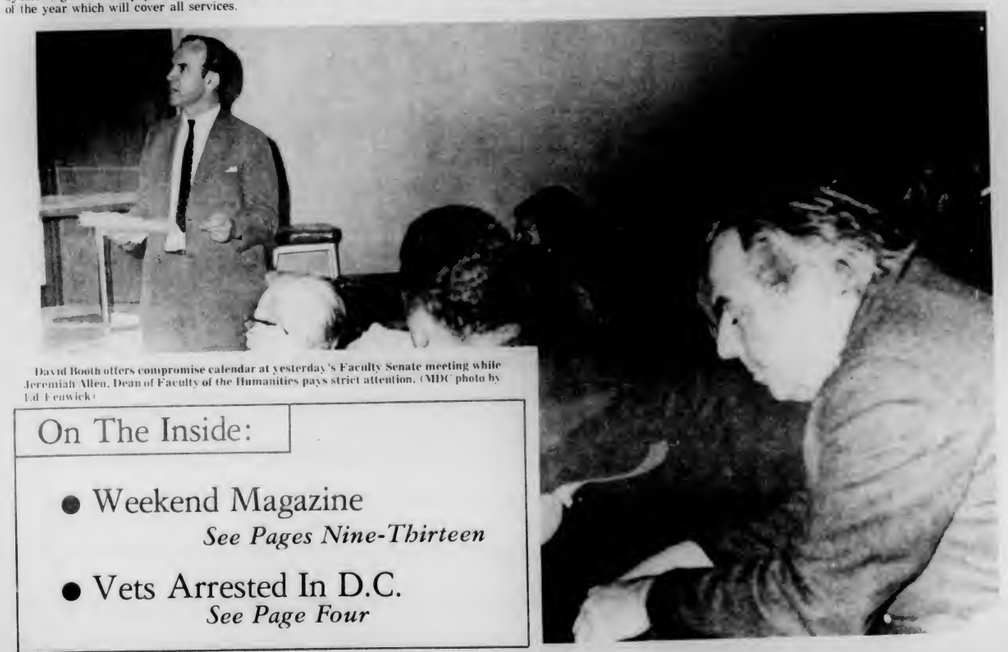
(Editors Note: The following is the text of Student Senate President Glenn Elters address to the Faculty Senate.)

The comments I am about to make are supported by the newly elected Student Senate officers and by the President of the Graduate Student Senate.

The time has come the walrus said to speak of many things.

After having observed and at times participated in this body over the past three years I should like to make a few comments about this body, about the faculty of this institution (in general terms) and about the future situation ovis-a-vis faculty-student cooperation at the Senate level.

This Faculty Senate has in my mind acted irresponsibly toward students on this campus. This body and this faculty is uninformed about students and it has done little or nothing to gain expertise in this field. In fact this body has proven to be unsympathetic toward student problems and is unwilling to even attempt to understand students. This body has not engaged in debate with students in good faith and has dismissed student opinion as adolescent rhetoric.



This faculty, this Senate, and similar bodies across the country have attempted to create an academic empire. They have refused to recognize that education is now a joint effort between faculty and students. This body has refused to change the status quo in regard to student participation in any substantial manner. You have allowed a group of reactionary faculty members (I refer to them as academic fascists, they refer to themselves as the faculty group for academic freedom) to inflict its views upon this University with increasing regularity. Apparently no one is willing to stand up to Mrs. Brogan, Lewy, Hollander, et al and argue that they are living in an age of academia which has been superceded by the present age of full student involvement. Students can only view this as an aquiessence on the part of the entire faculty and as an implicit acceptance of the views of this group. This is a grave situation, this means that students and faculty are diametrically opposed. There can be no cooperation there can be no peace between students and faculty under these conditions.

In the near future I am sure the Student Senate will review student participation in faculty Senate committees and where such representation is viewed as tokenism, students will be removed and no new students will be appointed. Ladies and gentlemen, we are stating now for the record that we are patently opposed to tokenism. Tokenism is having one voting member of the Faculty Senate Academic Matters Committee, tokenism is repressive and is indicative of an attitude toward students.

We have raised these points before, we have worked hard, we have "done our homework" especially in the field of academic matters where the Student Senate has produced the authoritative document in this area. We have been patient. We have pushed and badgered, but we have been responsible and mature.

Chancellor Tippo stated last year that "present methods" of campus governance "are inadequate and even harmful to the University." I agree, students in general agree, but the response by this body to the Report of the Commission on Campus Governance and the nature of the debate in this body has shown that this body is again willing to support the status quo and is not in any way in favor of involving students in the governance of this campus and in mutual, joint efforts to decide the problems and the future of this University. This, be responsive to alternatives in education have been the last straw. We shall no longer tolerate it. The student revolution has come to UMass. It will be fought in the classroom and between students and faculty through their respective Senates. We are unsatisfied with the methods of the past we will not allow ourselves to be dealt with as we have been dealt with in the past.

I envision a state of war existing between this body and the Student Senate. I pray for our victory and the creation of a truly free university.

Bly Returns Today

Robert Bly

ROBERT BLY was born in Minnesota, educated at Harvard and Iowa, and lives on a farm with his family in Minnesota. He is one of the few American poets who does not teach, and who consciously refuses to join academic establishments. He was one of the first American writers to publicly condemn the war in Southeast Asia, and his poems convey active, moral messages.

Bly is the founder of a magazine called The Fifties, then The Sixties, now The Seventies, which has been effective in returning American literature to the world community, after decades of literary isolation. He has made the poetry of Pablo Neruda among other South American writers, available to the American public through his translations. In 1968 he won the National Book Award for Poetry for his book, The Light Around the Body.

DRIVING TO TOWN LATE TO MAIL A LETTER

It is a cold and snowy night. The main street is deserted

The only things moving are swirls of snow.

As I lift the mailbox door, I feel its cold iron.

There is a privacy I love in this snowy night.

Driving around, I will waste more time.

THE THIRD DIMENSION

Who'd believe me if I said, "They food and split me open from scalp to crotch, and still I'm alive, and walk around pleased with the sun and all the world's bounty." Honesty isn't so simple a simple honesty is nothing but a lie

Don't the trees

hide the wind between their leaves and speak in whispers?

The third dimension

hides itself
If the roadmen crack stones, the stones are stones.

but love cracked me open and I'm alive to tell the tale — but not honesty:

the words change it. Let it be — here in the sweet sun

a fiction, while I breathe and change path.

He was born in New York City in 1921, served in the 36th Infantry Division in World War II. A graduate of Amherst College, he has taught at Harvard, Wellesley, and is currently a Professor of English at Wesleyan University. His translations of Moliere have been widely acclaimed, and he has published at least 6 volumes of poetry.

Mind in the purest play is like some bat
That beats about in caverns all alone,
Contriving by a kind of senseless wit
Not to conclude against a wall of stone.

It has no need to falter to explore,
Darkly it knows what obstacles are there,
And so may weave and flitter, dip and soar
In perfect course through the blackest air.

And his this simple a like perfection?
The mind is like a bat. Precisely. Save
That in the very happiest intellection
A graceful error may correct the cave.

Amini: Diligent Revolt

JOHARI AMINI has spirit, free spirit capable of yanking her right up and over the rubble in the road if she approves. But she does not approve. She is diligent revolt. A salted frenzy. A freedom...a perpetuating sensuousness, with the frankness unfolding as the lines gather, until there it all is, perfectly open and deliberate before you: the woman commitment. So says Gwendolyn Brooks about Johari Amini, whose book, Let's Go Somewhere, is published by Third World Press of Chicago.

I said to myself in 1964 that "The POEM should be a thorough integration of flesh and sunlight flesh and darkness--a fusion of spirit matter and time in some alien and ever forming consistency."

That was the wish and trance of the early '60's. And the skull still pumps that way.

But in the seathing sphere of hug and feel the blindman/ the stone/TIN—SOUL—THE—SLAYER of lost-nigger-my love/ to thump the heart and bone of the double-assed cadillac driver--the tenet is generated to this:

That the spirit of pigs and crippling myths be destroyed, he who bears the word and vision of the people--the poet-teacher-seer-enchanter must witness the principle of personal power and creativity which is, that the development and intentions of the personality determines a man's effect upon his environment and his COSMIC environment.

When the poet's personality becomes consistent with the SPIRIT OF LIFE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS (which is not greedy, capitalistic, depraved, TV-imbued butcher-energy of the U.S.)/ when the poet's personality becomes consistent with the SPIRIT OF LIFE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS is when his WORDS (his thoughts and life desires) shall be the inspiring creative force of his God--shall be the sharp new vision and LORDLY voice of THE PEOPLE.

Present Your Views Sunday On Room, Board, Fee Hikes

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

Students are being given the opportunity Sunday night to present their views to the Administration on the increases in room, board and fees now expected for next year. An open meeting of the Student Senate is to be held at that time to decide on the Senate's recommendations for which of several alternatives the University should implement in raising the costs.

Representatives of the Administration will attend to present their reasoning for the increases and the alternative plans by which the necessary funds can be raised. Vice Chancellors Thomas Campion and Randolph Bromery have proposed four alternatives for next year' board plan and two for the rent.

Following the presentation by the Administration, students will be allowed to ask questions and present different ideas they may have. Also to be presented for Senate consideration are the recommendations of an ad hoc committee of students which has met with administrators and directors of several campus services to study the plans. The committee, composed of seven Student Senators, representatives of area governments, and a SUG Board member, has worked to come up with its own proposals. All will be considered in the Senate debate.

The options for board as presented originally by the Administration are the following: Plan 1--Continuation of current 15-meal plan with additional exemptions for Southwest residents, consistent with the rest of the campus. Special diet accomodations. $581, a $51 increase; Plan 2--Choice of a 10-15-meal plan with same exemptions as Plan 1. 10-meal $543, a $13 increase, and 15-meal $613, an $83 increase; Plan 3--Same as Plan 2 except that those living in dorms but not eating in dining commons would help pay for building cost of commons at rate of $62 a student. 10-meal $530, no increase, and 15-meal $602, a $72 increase; Plan 4--Same as Plan 1 but with exemptions to juniors too. All living in residence halls but not eating in commons pay $62 building fee. $600, a $70 increase.

There is one additional option possible--if seconds were eliminated, an estimated cost savings of $16 per year could be applied to board rates.

Options offered in room rent plans are as follows: Plan A-A $50 increase for all dorms. Traditional dorms would cost $550, Southwest, Orchard Hill, Thatcher, and Lewis would cost $610, and suite dorms would cost $700; Plan B--A $65 increase for all types of dorms. The $175,000 greater than Plan A would be used for alterations, refurnishing, repair, and student projects.

The open meeting to allow student response to the proposals will be held Sunday at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Czech 18 Subject At Militant Forum

By STEVE FELD
MDC Staff

The Young Socialist Alliance presented speakers Nancy Mazonson and Sidney Finehirsh discussing the invasion of Czechoslovakia and its consequences, including the 18 Czechoslovaks accused of "Trotskyist activities". The program was held as part of the Militant Forum series.

Nancy Mazonson was in Prague at the time of the invasion. "The people were almost expecting action of some sort by the Soviet Union. They were surprised when it happened, not that it happened. It was an incredibly unified all-out effort on the people's part."

The reason for the invasion, according to Sidney Finehirsh, was "that the spirit of Prague was spreading. This would obviously endanger the beaurocratic elite of the Soviet Union."

Of "the Czechoslovakia Eighteen," about the trial Finehirsh said that they wee basically being accused of being opposed to the Stalinist regime in Czechoslavakia. They were convicted on charges of subversion on March 19. Their sentences range from one year to four.

"Today there is a mass sentiment of socialist democracy in Czechslovakia. It is spreading to the Soviet Union itself. The bureaucracy is being threatened. There will be more Prague Springs in the future."

"The defendants were fighting for the ideals of true Communism-which is why I support their cause," Finehirsh explained.

SUG Board Will Use New Election Method

The Student Union Governing Board, going on the premise that the Board of Trustees will approve its new constitution, has revised the methods whereby student representatives to the Board are chosen.

According to Rocky Hodgson, newly elected Secretary-Treasurer of the Board, it has been felt for some time that student representatives to the Board were not chosen in a representative way.

"In the past, the method has been to hold elections, in which the student body voted for the candidate of their choice who represented their academic year," he said. "However-judging by last year's voter turnout, in which about 3% of a class of 3,000 voted for their SUG Board candidate, elections are not a good way to get representatives on the Board."

Hodgson outlined the new approach SUG Board will use to get delegates.

"Representatives from each of the student senates will be appointed to the Board," he said. "There will be 16 appointees from the Student Senate, 4 from the Graduate Student Senate, and 1 representative from Stockbridge. They will be voting members, as will be the three officers, all students, and the Alumnae representative."

Hodgson added that the present non-voting members of the Board, specifically Building Managers, Dean of Students William Field, Asst. Dean of Students Jerry Scanlon, and Vice-Chancellors Bromery and Campion will probably continue in their advisory capacities.

Open Discussions Part of Greek Week

By LISA CHERNICK
MDC Staff

Last night on the eighth floor of the Campus Center four open discussions were held. Student Mobilization MOBE, the Student Homophile league and Gay Liberation, Free University, and the POW issue were all represented.

The discussions were sponsored by the Greek council as part of Greek Week.

In conjunction with the prisoner of war issue, mimeographed letters to the president of Hanoi were displayed for people to sign. The letters asked for humane treatment of prisoners of war and the right of the Red Cross to inspect the camps in North Vietnam. Also, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hinkley of Sprinfield and Pat Sullivan, a student at UMass, were available to answer questions concerning the families of POW's. Mr. and Mrs. Hinkley have a son held captive in North Vietnam while Pat has a brother held there.

Claire Moriarty spoke to about 10 people on the basic tenant of MOBE. She said the main demand of the MOBE is immediate withdrawal of all troops from Southeast Asia. According to Claire, the MOBE feels the best way to facilitate the end of the war is mass demonstration tactics.

The Student Homophile League and Gay Liberation spoke to about 10 small groups of people on the purposes of the SHL and Gay Lib. According to a member of both organizations the SHL is a socially oriented group where gay people can get together without the usual problems of coping straight people. Gay Liberation, the member said, is more a politically oriented organization which is concerned with securing the legal rights of homosexuals.

Free University was represented by Myrna Schwartz. She answered questions about the Yellow Sun Food Co-op and the Day Care Center, both organizations which are connected to Free University. According to Myrna, the idea behind Free University is to get people together. To do this, she said, Free University communicates and exchanges information.

Vets Still Hold Mall

Police Arrest 108 In D.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Police arrested 108 in an antiwar veterans demonstration Thursday on the Supreme Court steps while other vets stuck to their Capitol Mall bivouac in defiance of a court ban that was not enforced.

The camp itself, a few hundred yards from the Capitol, thrived with visiting congressmen, speeches, a military-style chow line, tents, some vets toting toy M16s seemingly well rested after sleeping where the court said they couldn't.

Park police watched the camp with tacit approval, despite the court injunction against it. But at the Supreme Court city police moved in on the demonstrators after an hour and a half.

The veterans at the court were protesting the Supreme Court action upholding the injunction against their sleepin, pitching a tent or building a fire on the Mall, where they have been staying all week as a preliminary to Saturday's major antiwar protest.

The veterans arrived at the court singing and chanting "bring our boys home, now," and "all we are saying is give peace a chance."

There were some obscenities, but the tone was generally passive.

Twice Capt. V.W. Coble announced to the protestors they were violating federal law.

When the police moved in many of the veterans walked to the police vans in prisoner style, hands clasped over their heads.

Bill Wiman, 23, Boston, had his friends take his wheel chair to the door of a police van, but the police carefully went around him, refusing to arrest him. Then he left his chair to sit on the steps, still no arrest. He lost both legs to a land mine last August in Vietnam.

At city jails the 108, two were women, were charged with disorderly conduct, rather than the more serious charge cited at the scene obstructing and impeding justice, which carries a possible maximum penalty of one year in jail and a $5,000 fine.

Individual bonds of $10 were set and the free veterans — their total strength is around 1,000 — set out to raise the money by panhandling and selling blood to blood banks at $25 a pint.

The veterans voted 480 to 400 to stay at their campsite Wednesday night after hearing their chief lawyer, former U.S. Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark, advise them to comply with the strict injunction.

However, some vets crawled into their bed rools and their several tents stood through the night. Nonveterans were asked to leave, and pickets were posted to watch for the police.

All along, the veterans' leaders had maintained that their resistance would be non-violent and non-provocative.

American Fighter-Bombers Hit Bases In No. Vietnam

SAIGON (AP)—U.S. fighter-bombers pounded enemy targets in three areas of Indochina Thursday, including surface to air missile positions inside North Vietnam.

The missions dominated the war scene, as little significant ground action was reported.

Operation Lam Son 720, code name for the latest U.S.—South Vietnamese drive to smash enemy infiltration and supplies in the A Shau Valley bordering Laos, also produced few results.

Nearly 30 B52 bombers hammered at enemy supply and troop infiltration routes and storage areas in the panhandle of Laos bordering North Vietnam, in eastern Cambodia, and along and beyond the demilitarized zone dividing the two Vietnams.

The attacks against the missile sites marked the 27th time this year and the sixth this week that U.S. bombers have flown missions over North Vietnamese territory.

The U.S. Command terms such raids "protective reaction" and "an inherent right of self-defense."

The strikes were called for after pilots reported their flights were being tracked by radar, an action the command considers prepatory to firing.

The results of the air raids remained unknown.

Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen reported from La Vang there had been no major results thus far in Operation Lam Son 720.

Brig. Gen. Vu Van Giai, commander of the South Vietnamese task force, said the purpose of the operation is to block an enemy buildup during the dry season in the northern region.

Although termed a combined operation, it was not clear to what extent American forces were involved.

A dispatch from Phnom Penh reported that Cambodia troops claimed they killed about 50 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong soldiers Wednesday during an operation 11 miles northwest of Svay Rieng. Cambodian casualties were given as 17 killed and 16 wounded.

No significant ground action was reported in Laos.

In Saigon, the U.S. Command, in its weekly casualty report, said 56 Americans were killed in action last week, an increase of 14 over the previous week. The report also listed 195 Americans wounded in action during the week ending at midnight last Saturday, a drop of 123 from the previous week.

The report brought to 44,974 the number of Americans listed as killed in Indochina since Jan. 1, 1961. During the same period, 297,771 U.S. troops have been wounded and 9,459 have died from nonhostile causes, such as accidents or illness.

The South Vietnamese command said its forces suffered 494 combat deaths last week, a drop from 523 the previous week. The number of wounded rose, however, from 1,168 to 1,562.

Zero Population Growth

Slow Down, World!

(Ed. note-This article is the fifth in a series on overpopulation. The previous articles attempted to prove the existence of a serious over-population problem and highlight unpleasant implications for the near future if our growth is not halted. The unlikely possibility of providing food and resources for present and future generations was discussed. This article will present the main obstacles to slowing population growth. For further information contact John Maytum at 581-8597 or George Wilder 549-0768)

In some areas of the world, such as South Asia, there is a statistical ignorance of the over-population problem. Even though there is an obviously large population density, annual growth and death rates are inadequately known. Thus a government will not push a birth control program until the people demand it, and this the people will not do until everyone is practically standing on top of one another.

There is an unconcern for the problem, even when it is recognized. In a study done at Cornell University, and published under the heading "Population Control, Sterilization and Ignorance", over 1000 people were interviewed 74% of whom were males. The group included 294 faculty members, 174 graduate students, 264 upper classmen and 327 freshmen at Cornell. 84% of the above group generally agreed on the desirability of limiting family size. However, a majority (65%) said it wanted three children or more. 26% wanted more than 3 children, only 30% favored 2 children and a mere 5% expressed a preference for one or none. The choices of those studied appeared to be affected in no major way by age, sex, marital status, parenthood or professional specialty.

The investigators concluded that the educated youth growing up among us is "either unconcerned about population growth or, at the very least, unable or unwilling to apply itself to the simple arithmetic of growth."

There are selfish individuals. Some persons would have large families regardless of the consequences for mankind.

There are those with blind faith that technology will always provide an answer-this would include individuals who anticipate mankind will ship excess populations to the moon, our neighboring planets, and to the stars; even while New York City is having serious difficulty financing its own garbage collection.

There are superstitions and myths. In India outrageous rumors have arisen about IUD's (intrauterine devices) which have substantially decreased the use of IUD's in that country. The rumors were alledgedly spread by an American drug company interested in promoting the use of birth control pills. These rumors include the following: a. The interuterine loop sticks copulating couples together. b. It swims through the bloodstream to the brain. c. It causes cancer. d. It gives the man a shock during intercourse.

Two other myths are widely believed. The first, discussed in a recent article by Isaac Asimov, holds that motherhood is sacred. According to Asimov, "must we not accept the fact that is our present world, excessive motherhood is an evil and, indeed, genocide? For a woman to have more than two children nowadays is evidence of a frightening and callous disregard (or, possibly ignorance)...It is the woman who deliberately limits her child-bearing capacity who is now the worthwhile and noble citizen of the planet." The second myth, a popular one, holds that children from one-child families become sheltered, over-loved sissies if male and over-protected and spoiled if female. But there is much evidence to negate this stereotype. For example, more than half the Westinghouse Science Talent winners have been "only children". And so have such notables as Franklin D. Roosevelt, Albert Einstein, Charles Lindbergh and Robert Louis Stevenson.

There is a belief that national size and international power are positively correllated.

There is a belief that a large population will provide more military security.

There are economic priorities which compete with potential population control programs for government attention and government spending.

There are priorities for health programs which compete with potential population control programs.

There is a shortage of physicians and, related to this, an unavailability of certain contraceptives in certain parts of the world. In some areas there are not enough doctors to insert IUD's or to perform vasectomies quickly enough to halt population growth.

There is an incentive for farmers everywhere to have more children than city people. Children are an asset in rural areas where their labor is especially useful.

Government leaders, our own being no exception are politically sensitive to population control programs.

President Nixon delivered a message on population and family planning to Congress on July 18, 1969. He presented figures which revealed the magnitude of world population growth. And he stated that "most informed observers...agree that population growth is among the most important issues we face."

But despite his speech the President subsequently said and did little about the population problem. In 1970 an HEW spokesman insisted that the administration had no plans to encourage a policy on family size. And President Nixon left the population explosion unmentioned in his recent State of the Union message.

The relative unconcern of the Administration has been reflected in recent statements of highly placed government officials. In late March 1970, Mr. H. Houthakker, a member of President Nixon's Council of Economic Advisors, stated that "there is little reason to expect over-population for the world as a whole in the foreseeable future". He characterized the idea of population control as a possibly "simpleminded panacea" and denied knowledge of any casual relation between growth of per capita GNP and growth in population. He added that "unless there are specific indications that population growth interferes with the attainment of a desired standard of living, governments might do well to be cautious in interferring with what is essentially a private matter."

Yet in an article entitled "Population Control in India", John Lewis of Princeton University, stated that "...despite Mr. Houthakker, there is no real question in India that, at least for the next 10 or 15 years the growth of per capita GNP and of the birth rate will be inversely related."

According to an article in the Population Bulletin "...the single most definitive achievement of the population community in 1970" was the passage, in both the Senate and House, of two companion family planning bills. The bills would have made family planning services and information available to every woman in the U.S., regardless of income. Services would have included birth control pills and other means of contraception along with consultations, examination, instruction and referral to other medical programs where necessary. $387 million was funded for use over a period of three years after consideration by a conference committee and final floor votes.

Despite formal approval by the President and both houses, Daniel Flood (D-Pa.), chairman of the HEW Appropriations Subcommittee of the House, adamently refused to permit any of the money authorized to be appropriated. Flood cited the Administration's refusal to formally request money. But a recent editorial in the N.Y. Times stated that "...a White House memorandum sent to Congressional leaders last month..."killed Senate efforts to appropriate the supplemental family planning funds.

D. Edgar Berman, once a special assistant on health problems for Vice President Humphrey, recently stated that a voluntary approach to birth control has been totally ineffective and that "...funds without laws will not reduce the population growth rate fast enough. Congress knows this...", he said, "but timorously continues to subsidize local clinics and well meaning academicians." He concluded that "we must limit families by law."

Final Exam Schedule To Appear Monday

Think Twice About This

Dr. Wayne Friar, Chairman of the Department of Biology at The Kings College, Briarcliff Manor, N.Y., will be speaking Saturday, 2 P.M. in the Hampshire Room, SU.

Dr. Friar recently has had two papers published as a result of his work with turtles. One was in connection with his trip to the coast of Surinam, South America, taken with the help of the National Geographic Society.

For the past 10 years Dr. Friar has been obtaining blood samples to help in the improvement of the classification system for turtles.

His address in the Student Union will be in the form of a lively Bible symposium, "Have Youth Thought Twice?" — Creation or Evolution — Which?

Dr. Friar received his MA at UMass and his PHD at Rutgers University.

Dr. Wayne Friar

Hello...

This is to announce, with great sadness and remorse, that on Monday, April 26, copies of the final exam schedule will be ready and available somewhere on campus.

Interns Gain Experience Working With Legislature

By ANNE STADNICKI
MDC Staff

The Government department is accepting applications for its Undergraduate Legislative Internship Program, under the co-ordination of Professor Robert A. Shanley.

The internship program is a one semester, 6-credit independent study program offered through the government department. It allows three junior or senior political science majors to gain "valuable experience in practical government and politics in the State House in Boston" according to Shanley.

Chosen by a selection committee of three government professors and three students interns from previous years, the students must have a 2.5 cumulative average in their government courses to be eligible to apply. Those majors with a lower average will need a letter of recommendation from one of their political science professors Shanley said.

The spring semester of each year is the internship period. Shanley said the student works with the legislator of his choice at the State House.

Intern work is supervised by a UMass political science professor and by the representatives office. To earn the six credits the intern must write two papers on the work he does on the committees and in the legislators' offices.

Applicants must also enroll for an additional nine credits of regular academic work at UMass Boston. Living arrangements in Boston must be worked out by the individual students.

This semester's interns are Leo Clark, Jeffrey Bolger, and Howard Hurley. They are serving as aides in the offices of Representative Felix Perrault, Senator Andrea Nuciforo and Representative John Buckley, respectively.

Leo Clark listed speech writing, research on bills, attending committee hearings and handling constituent complaints as some of the duties of an intern.

He said the value of internship lies in the opportunity it provides for a student to test the theories he has learned in class against the real operation of a functioning legislature.

"It allows for a great deal of dialogue and interaction between the student and practical politician," Clark said.

Professor Shanley said that the close work with the individual legislator allows the student to see the real responsibilities a legislator has.

"The atmosphere and unwritten rules of how a legislature works is also part of politics, and it is a part we can't teach in the classroom, and this is where internship can be a valuable experience." Shanley added.

Interested students should contact Prof Shanley in 202 Thompson Tower during pre-registration week.

Southwest U.S. Drought Major Agricultural Disaster

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — A drought that U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Clifford Hardin terms "a major agricultural disaster" in parts of the Southwest gave no indication Thursday of ending.

And half a continent away, Florida remained in the grip of a prolonged dry spell.

The dry weather has stretched into western Kansas, dried farm ponds in Missouri and was causing concern among foresters in Pennsylvania, Texas, Ohio, Arizona, New Mexico, Mississippi, Georgia, North and South Carolina and Tennessee.

Wheat was being plowed under in parts of Texas, Oklahoma and South Dakota because there wasn't enough rain for it to grow.

Scattered thunderstorms in the past two weeks have eased a crucial situation in San Angelo, Tex., but the hit-and-miss downpours failed to blanket the hard-hit state. They came too late to save most winter wheat or to prevent a heavy sell-off of cattle lacking drinking water and grazing.

West Texans still were dragging out their favorite, time-honored quip:

"When Noah got his flood, we got half an inch."

Before the rains, two million acres of Texas farmland had suffered wind erosion this year because of dry soil, very little crop cover and high winds.

The Texas drought began seven months ago. Many West Texas areas had no rain of consequence until the recent scattered showers.

The Dust Bowl area of Oklahoma and Texas Panhandle famous in the 1930s, may be in the best condition in the Southwest because of late winter snows.

Secretary Hardin toured parts of Texas and Oklahoma Wednesday to look at the problem and announced that 39 Texas counties and 20 in Oklahoma will receive federal aid.

Gov. Preston Smith wants 147 Texas counties declared disaster areas, a designation that goes beyond Hardin's order.

Florida's drought has led to many water-saving measures.

Waitresses in some places were told not to serve water to diners unless they asked. Lawn sprinkling was banned or restricted. Irrigation is limited.

The fresh water shortage has been further complicated by seepage of salt water into some city supply systems.

Rainfall in South Florida since October has been about five inches compared with a normal of nearly 20. In Jacksonville in northern Florida, rain is half of normal.

Rally To Defend Angela Tonight at Smith College

A rally to defend Angela Davis will be held at 7:30 tonight in Sage Hall at Smith College. Two representatives from Black Women to Free Angela will speak, and a film about Angela's extradition from New York to California will be shown.

Miss Davis, a black Communist and former assistant professor of philosophy at the University of California, is presently on trial in California. She faces charges of murder, kidnapping, and conspiracy to murder and kidnap. It is alleged that she purchased the guns used in an attempt to free three black prisoners at Marin County Courthouse last summer, which resulted in three deaths. Under California law the purchaser of the guns may be held equally responsible for a crime.

The rally is being sponsored by the Smith College Committee to Free Angela, as part of the nation-wide effort to win freedom for Professor Davis and other political prisoners.

Get Tapped

On Sunday, April 25th, at 9:00 p.m. the 1971 members of Mortar Board will be tapping the newly selected members. Over a hundred applications were reviewed on the basis of scholarship, leadership and service.

Applicants are requested to be at their place of residence. A short pledging ceremony will take place in the Colonial Lounge following the tapping.

UM Publications Host Collegiate Press Day

The first annual National Collegiate Press Day at UMass Friday and Saturday, April 23 and 24, will be attended by student editors from institutions of higher education throughout New England.

Hosts of the two-day colloquium are the National Council of College Publications Advisors (NCCPA) and the four UMass student publication — The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, newspaper; the Index, senior yearbook; Yahoo, humor magazine; and Spectrum, literary quarterly.

Theme of the conference will be "A Free and Responsible Campus Press In a Free and Responsible Campus Society" and will be set at a two-hour convocation beginning the conference at 7 p.m. April 23.

Coordinating the program are Associate Prof. Dario Politella of the UMass English and journalistic studies departments, and Prof. T.P. Elliott-Smith of Massasoit Community College, chairman of NCCPA District 1.

National Collegiate Press Day, set by Congress as the last Saturday in April, is the second day of the UMass meeting. Attending will be student editors of newspapers, yearbooks, and magazines, as well as faculty advisors to campus press, and representatives of college administrations.

The Saturday meetings will be "rap" sessions segregated by interest groups. The sessions will include editorial discussions for newspaper, yearbook, and magazine staffs; business and advertising matters; production problems; financing of the student press; and student-administration relationships.

Invitations to the conference have been extended to "anyone who is interested in the growing student press field."

Boggs Denounces Hoover Calls For Resignation

WASHINGTON (AP)-House Majority Leader Hale Boggs of Louisiana, calling again for the resignation of FBI Director Edgar J. Hoover, said Thursday the FBI is moving toward thought control of the American people.

In a speech to the House following up his earlier request for Hoover's resignation, Boggs said an apathetic Congress has permitted the FBI to expand its spying practices unchecked.

"Over the postwar years," he said, "we have granted to the elite and secret police within our system vast new powers over the lives and liberties of the people."

Boggs's speech, which was awaited as his answer to demands of Hoover's defenders that he offer proof of his charges that the FBI tapped the phones of congressmen, went behond his earlier remarks in its denunciation of Hoover and the FBI.

He said telephone company investigators had found evidence that the phone in his home had been tapped, and he repeated other alleged instances of FBI surveillance that have come to light in recent days.

But the main thrust of his speech was an assertion that the liberties of Americans have been undermined by the secret activities of the FBI.

Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, in a reply to Boggs' original charges, said: "Let me repeat categorically: The FBI has not tapped the telephone of any member of the House or Senate, now or in the past."

Over the years, Boggs said, Congress has been surrendering its duty of oversight over bureaus, agencies and organizations in the federal government "which are most sensitively involved with the lives and liberties of the people."

"We have authorized and permitted the bureaus and agencies to assume powers that belong to Congress," he added.

"We have established the rule of the dossier.

"We have conferred respectability upon the informer.

"We have sanctioned the use of bribes and payments to citizen to spy upon citizen.

"We have consented to the accused being denied the right to confront his accuser.

"But this is not all..."

No member of the House, Boggs said, knows or can know with certainty which or how many such bureaus and agencies may be involved in "clandestine activities" not subject to "meaningful reporting."

Neither can any member of the House know with certainty, he added, "what the bureaus and agencies involved with the liberties of the American people may be doing."

Boggs emphasized that he was speaking "only for myself" and not in his capacity as majority leader of the House. He is a Democrat congressman from Louisiana.

"I have not asked and do not ask that members of my own party associate themselves with either my request or my remarks, except as their own private convictions may move them to do so."

"Our apathy in this Congress," he said, "our silence in this House, our very fear of speaking out in other forums has watered the roots and hastened the growth of a vine of tyranny which is ensnaring that Constitution and Bill of Rights."

Financial Aid Director Speaks At CCEBS Seminar

Robert J. Morrissey, Director of the Placement and Financial Aid Services at the University of Massachusetts, met with Dr. Hodges Glenn's seminar for the staff of the CCEBS program on Thursday, April 22nd in Mills House.

Morrissey stated that at the University there were three major areas of financial aid available to students, these are: scholarships; grants; and loans. He discussed with the CCEBS staff how each of these areas applied to the University as a whole, to the disadvantaged students and the complexities of the married students needing financial aid.

Stressing changes that have taken place during the past four years Morrissey gave the class a brief historical survey of financial aid services for the past ten years.

Policies and guidelines were the main topics for discussion. Where the operating dollar comes from and how it is spent was discussed at great length. It was said by Mr. Morrissey that many changes have taken place in policies for financial aid, generally from the basic premise of academic excellence to a basic premise of financial need.

Morrissey also agreed with the staff of the CCEBS program that many more changes would have to take place in regard to financial aid priorities for the underprivileged student. The class thought that Mr. Morrissey's presentation was both informative and sensitive to the needs of the CCEBS program.

Haiti's 'Papa Doc' Dies Teenage Son Succeeds

PORT AU PRINCE, Haiti (AP)—The era of Francois "Papa Doc" Duvalier ended in Haiti on Thursday and a new one was launched by his teenage son.

Duvalier, 64, who mixed voodooism and intrigue to make him dictator of Haiti nearly 14 years ago, died Wednesday night. A palace announcement said he had been ill for three months.

The official radio announced that his disignated successor, his chubby son Jean Claude, 19, has assumed the presidency and named a Cabinet with only two holdovers. Since he is considered a playboy, unschooled in politics, the implication was that there is a strong guiding hand behind him. Jean Claude was designated president for life, as was his father.

Neither palace announcement nor the radio gave the cause of Duvalier's death. They withheld the announcement for about 12 hours. Duvalier's health had failed after a series of strokes. He also suffered from diabetes.

It was ironic that the announcement of Duvalier's death came on April 22. Duvalier considered the 22nd day of the month lucky. He assumed the presidency Sept. 22, 1957, and often made important decisions on that day of the month.

After the announcement of Duvalier's death and the transfer of power to Jean Claude, a first-year law student at the National University of Haiti, the radio played funeral music.

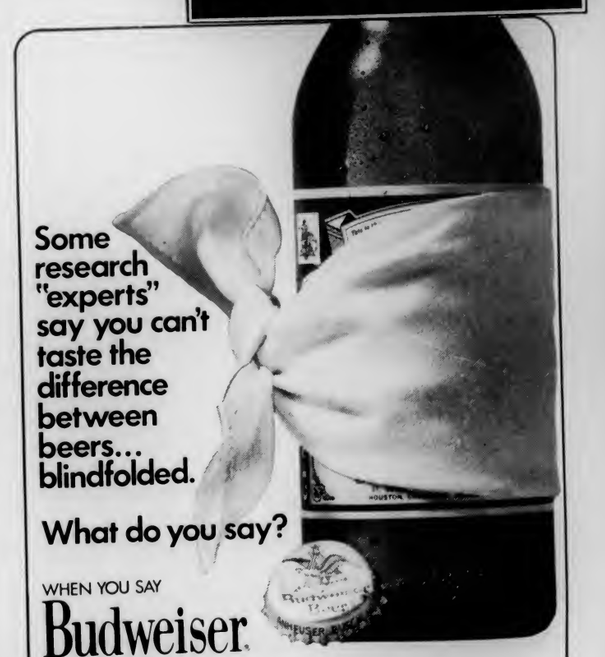
Port au Prince was quiet. Many Haitians seen on the streets were crying. The palace guard band played somber music.

Jean Claude made his first appearance after being sworn into office in the morning. He emerged from the presidential palace to the garden in front and was cheered and applauded by a large crowd.

It was reported that Duvalier's body would lie in state so the public could pay its last respects, but no details were made public.

In the new Cabinet as foreign secretary is Andrien Raymond, a brother of Gen. Claude Raymond, chief of the armed forces general staff. Luckner Cambronne, a former minister forced out of politics by Duvalier, is the new secretary of interior, defense and police.

All other Cabinet members are known as friends of the Duvalier family.



It was because of declining health that Duvalier announced last January that his son would succeed him. The national legislature adopted an amendment to the constitution that month lowering the minimum age of a president from 40 to 18. The amendment was overwhelmingly approved in a national referendum.

Duvalier promulgated the constitution in 1964. It made him president for life to carry on what he called "the Duvalierist revolution."

Duvalier ruled with an iron fist, shot many of his opponents, and made enemies who plotted against him, but managed to ride out each crisis and died in bed, a luxury not allowed many of his predecessors.

Room To Move

Questionnaire On Drugs, Lecture Upcoming

Some time in the next week about 2000 students of UMass will receive a form in the mail asking each student to anonomously describe his drug use and some of the changes in his attitude over the last few years. The form purports to come from a sociology class led by Peter Park. It does. The form will be sent to students selected at random. It would have gone to everybody, but they couldn't get enough money for that. So don't get uptight because you get one.

A lot of work has gone into guaranteeing the anonymity of the people responding to the form. The amount of background material asked for has been trimmed substantially from what was first proposed. (If you still feel that a question could be identifying to you, leave it blank.) Only Peter Park will have the list of to whom the forms are mailed, and he will destroy it after the mailing is completed. No one outside the class will see the actual forms when they come in. Only the compiled figures will be made public.

The study is important, we believe, because statements and actions by people in relation to the subject of drug use are usually so clouded by myth and emotion. We have as one of our basic operating principles at Room to Move that people are entitled to honest objective information about drugs upon which to base their own decisions. We think that the study by Peter Park's class will supply this kind of information to the community.

There is another aspect of information about drug use which we (the staff of Room to Move) would find useful. We are constantly in training to do what we do better. One thing we do is help people on bummers. After the training we expect to get into with Stan Grof this week, it would be really helpful to us if we had some write-ups of peoples experiences on bad trips or on trips that were really important to their lives. We need to have as broad a sample of experiences to refer to in our training so that we will be more likely to be able to understand what's happening with the different people we see who are bumming. Writing up a trip can be much more useful to the person who is doing the writing than most people realize. If you write up a bummer, it is quite possible that you will get a better understanding of the issues which contributed to your bumming out. If you keep a record of your experiences with psychedelics over a period of time, you will have a sort of illustrated map of your own inner processes and growth. We will be glad to try to help you make some sense out of what you write if you want us to. (Even if you don't bring it to us, write it up for yourself.)

We would be really grateful for these recordings in any form which people want to do them. If you want to find out more about what we need or if you just want to talk about your experiences, come by the center. (Saturday evening when Dan Brown is on might be the best time).

WORLD AUTHORITY ON LSD TO SPEAK HERE

Next Monday, April 26, will be an extremely important day for drug education here at the University. Dr. Stanislav Grof will be the guest of Room To Move, and we cannot express enough the importance of his visit. Dr. Grof is without question the world authority on LSD and other psychedelic drug therapy. Formerly, Dr. Grof served as a leading research psychiatrist at Research Psychiatry Center, Prague, Czechoslovakia, and is now Chief of Psychiatric Services, Maryland State Psychiatric Research Center, Baltimore, Maryland. The Baltimore research center is itself significant because it is one of the very few centers remaining in this country which is actively conducting LSD research on human beings.

Dr. Grof is not as well known popularly as he should be because he hasn't published extensively--even in professional journals as of yet; nor has he gotten entangled in the popularized and distorted mass media debates on LSD. However, he is now actively involved in lecturing and has written a book which is scheduled to be available early next year. I have had the privilege of seeing parts of this book and personally believe that it is undoubtedly the most ingenious material ever to be written on the subject. We anticipate its publication date.

Dr. Grof has become world authority by personally guiding over 1900 LDS sessions over fifteen years. From this work he has been able to chart out the possibilities for experience in the psyche so as to develop expertise to predict and guide the progression of an LDS experience. He has worked with a gamut of subjects: normal subjects, neurotics, schizophrenics, alcoholics, drug addicts, artists, musicians, psychotherapists, as well as experiencing those realms of the psyche with the drug himself.

Dr. Grof will speak at 8:00 P.M. at the Student Union Ballroom on "LDS and the Great Religions of the World." He will share with us some fascinating stories of his patients' reliving and participating in great moments of religous history and reliving through symbolic expression past reincarnations. He will also show slides drawn by his patients which represent the other realms to which his patients ventured. After the lecture, he will be available for questions.

We urge ALL to attend this lecture: anyone who has ever taken a psychedelic drug and all those interested in the extent of psychedelic drug usage, we request to attend. There is far too much misinformation on psychedelic drugs--here is a chance to hear and bring questions to perhaps the world's authority. He is truly the Master and Guide of internal states and experience. Don't miss this lecture.

Bishops Say 'No'

BOSTON (AP)-The Roman Catholic bishops of Massachusetts announced Thursday they are "strongly and completely opposed" to three bills in the legislature which would make it legal to provide birth control information to unmarried persons.

In a prepared statement released Thursday the bishops said:

"Making contraceptive advice and service legally available to the unmarried condones premarital sexual experience and encourages promiscuity. Moreover it compromises existing criminal laws prohibiting extra-marital sexual intercourse."

The statement was signed by Archbishop Humberto S. Medeiros of Boston and eight other bishops.

Northeast Engineers Here This Weekend

Outstanding engineering students from the Northeast will meet at the UMass Friday and Saturday, April 23 and 24, for the North East Regional Student Conference of the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics (AIAA).

Twenty-seven graduate and undergraduate technical papers will be presented. Twelve will be chosen for awards, to be presented Saturday at an awards luncheon. The conference is sponsored by the UMass department of mechanical and aerospace engineering and the UMass student branch of AIAA.

Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, provost and vice-chancellor for academic affairs, will open the conference with remarks at 8 a.m. Friday; Dean Kenneth G. Picha of the UMass Engineering School will speak at the Friday luncheon. John R. Dixon, head of the department of mechanical and aerospace engineering, will present awards. O. Hugo Schuck of the Transportation Systems Center in Cambridge will be the guest speaker at a dinner.

Unique types of aircraft will be displayed for the students attending the conference Friday beginning at 2 p.m. On display at LaFleur Airport in Northampton will be a Scorpion helicopter, a Benson Gyrocopter, a sailplane and a STOL or short take off and landing aircraft. Prof. Duane Cromack is conference director.

CEQ Close-up

North Pleasant St....The Urban Blight

By the CEQ

Blight is the process that leads to the creation of a slum. We see this process underway on North Pleasant St. Visual and physical deterioration is psychologically depressing to live near as well as sometimes being dangerous to health. Yard clean-up can make available space for recreation that you never thought you had.

Who is Responsible?

LANDLORDS: will not make improvements because they cost money and will cause property tax increase.

TOWN OF AMHERST & STATE OF MASS: are responsible for property tax policy which reinforces landlords for not making repairs and keeping up maintenance.

STUDENTS are still responsible for the crap that they clutter up a place with: it takes a minimum amount of time and effort to clean up junk around the yard so a few blades of grass and a few flowers can brighten your days. The returns are more than worth the effort. You are not really aiding and abetting the landlord because without constant maintenance a yard will revert to an unmanageable tangle by the time you leave.

THE UNIVERSITY is responsible because of its housing policies towards off-campus housing. Subsidized student housing would alleviate private landlords and incentives and/or pay for permanent maintenance personnel could be worked out.

The University is also responsible for priorities pertaining to students and the campus environment. Do we cater to conventions or classrooms?

C.E.Q. (Coalition for Environmental Quality) sees this as a responsibility in that the environment in which students live is badly deteriorating in this area. We propose a compromise: a coalition of landlords and student residents. C.E.Q. will provide information, know-how and mediation for students who want to better environment.

Certain repairs can be easily done by landlords and much of the work can be done by students. All you need is time, tools and materials. Design advise on car park problems might be gotten from lanscape architecture students. Pruning problems can be easily delt with by students of arborculture at Stockbridge. If you approach your landlord with positive proposals he might concede to supply materials and tools. In any case, call us if you are concerned and need help. C.E.Q. will help to provide resources to improve your living conditions, if you so desire. Call 5-0618.

Harsh Words

In tones more common to an anti-war rally or a Spiro Agnew lambasting, Glenn Elters took the floor of the Faculty Senate yesterday afternoon and derided that body for trying to create what he termed "an academic empire" on this campus. The Student Senate President, hardly subdued in his lame duck role, hit on an issue which has drawn only sporadic attention but which is of specific importance.

It would be easy to neglect Elter's words as those of bitterness from a leader who did not achieve in his term of office many of the things which he had hoped, yet with his experience in faculty relations, it is unfair to make this classification. Instead, the bitterness of his words was likely more a manifestation of his disappointment in the body he was addressing, an organization which has neglected, or perhaps hidden, its duty to the students of this campus. Though his charges of academic fascism and visions of senatorial militarism might have been a bit hard for many to stomach, his ideas obviously needed such a forceful carrier.

The Faculty Senate has indeed failed in bringing about the academic changes needed and in the process has transformed itself into an ivory tower legislature, only casually glancing at the hounding student masses below and then quietly returning to its academic cells. It must be easy to forget or at least overlook the fact that students should have a major role in their own education.

The University Senate appears now to be a thing of the past and for this reason it appears unlikely that students are soon to gain any more influence with the faculty or its representatives. Let Glenn Elter's harsh words serve, though, as a foreshadowing of things to come. This academic stone wall has existed long past its usefulness and as Elters put it, "We shall no longer tolerate it."

"Of Course You Can Ha ve Time For Reply — When And If You Can Get Back In Power"

Mark Silverman

It Happens Every Spring

I used to know a guy named Billy Chatham who loved crowds. He was the kind of person who would go to a baseball game and spend more time downstairs meeting people and standing in the hot dog lines than upstairs watching the game.

He loved to go places in a crowd--it was that sense of community that envelopes a person and locks him into a sort of group spirit that he loved about crowds. It was this unified feeling of excitement that drove him to go to Washington in 1967 with the first great march against the war in Vietnam.

Billy was never very political. It certainly wasn't any feeling of devotion that made him drive eight hours to Washington. But, when he got there, Billy Chatham found himself in the middle of a great political movement, one which was just beginning to interest the millions of Americans who rarely react to anything political outside of a voting booth.

He found himself in a crowd of people who were half crazed because of a political cause. Billy found himself tagging along for the hell of it, without really caring about why all the other people were there.

Billy Chatham saw a cross section of theAmerican Left during the March, a cross section of the Left, a la 1967. The academicians were there, sipping gin and wearing tweed sportcoats. And the 1967 flower children were there too. They wore colored clothing and some of them smoked marijuana. They talked about love and brotherhood and winning hearts first and minds later and they were the weirdos of the movement. There weren't very many of the kind of people who might now be branded revolutionaries, for this was 1967 and things were just beginning.

Draft card burning was just beginning to get popular in 1967 and people hadn't begun to listen to acid rock tape casettes quite yet--the big songs in 1967 were "All You Need Is Love" and "Light My Fire."

Lyndon Johnson was still President, and he was one of the most popular conversation topics during the March. Another topic was how funny the Smothers Brothers were.

Emotions in 1967 were a little bit more tame than emotions in 1970 or 1971. People did scream and people did cry but very few people talked about real, outright revolution. 1967 was still in the era when it was fashionable to talk about things like working within the system and changing things from within.

But, with the comparitively mild surface rhetoric of 1967, there was also the agony of Vietnam which really hasn't changed much in the past four years. The arguments have changed and the voices have become louder, but the agony, the horror, is still the same.

Billy Chatham went down to Washington to be in a big crowd in 1967 and came away talking about everything that he had seen. He was confused. He thought about Vietnam for the first time in his life, and Billy Chatham began to talk about politics with an interest that he had never displayed in the past. Billy had gone to Washington with the crowd and had come back wishing that he had not gone.

The march had made him think and he would now have to make a decision. In 1968 he was drafted. Had he not gone to the March, had he never tagged along just to be in a crowd, he now would have just gone into the Army without a second thought. But now he worried--not just about the possibility of going to Vietnam, but also about his role in the Army, his part in something which, for the first time in his life, he had begun to question.

But Billy went into the Army anyway. He wrote me a letter after a month saying that he had made a mistake and that he should not have gone in. He hated the people, he hated the war, and he felt sure he would go to Vietnam.

If he had a chance, Billy Chatham would probably be going to Washington this week. He would not be going just to be with a crowd. He would be going because of his hatred for the war.

But Billy will not go to Washington in 1971. He came back from Vietnam last year in a box.

Rummyed Reactions

WASHINGTON — "Good evening, comrades. This is Wo Pang of the Mao Tze-tung Broadcasting System in Peking. Seated with me in our studio tonight are the members of the People's Republic of China Gin Rummy team. Last week, in an unprecedented diplomatic move, the Americans invited our team to visit the United States to compete in the Gin Rummy Mixed Doubles Classic at Pebble Beach, Calif. This is the first time that citizens of the People's Republic of China were permitted behind the Nylon Curtain and we would like to ask them their impressions of what they saw in this most mysterious of all Western countries.

"Let us begin with Tai Bun, the captain of the gin rummy team. Comrade Bun, what impressed you the most about your visit to the United States?"

"The friendliness of the American people. Everywhere we went, people said,'We may not agree with what your government stands for, but we really like Chinese food.'"

"Comrade Lo Song. Did you find the American people well-clothed?"

"The older people seemed to have enough clothes, but the young people were very poor. All the young people we saw had torn pants, dirty sweat shirts and none of them had any shoes. Our translator said that the young people in America preferred to dress this way, but we knew this was capitalistic propaganda. Why would people who could afford it walk around in their bare feet?"

"Comrade Bu Wong. Did the Americans let you see everything you asked to see?"

"No they didn't. They were very careful to let us see only the things they wanted us to see. For example, they wouldn't let us see Los Angeles."

"What reason did they give?"

"They said no one could see Los Angeles because of the smog. They said on most days even people who lived there couldn't see it. They expected us to swallow this story."

"Comrade Hu Toy. Do you also feel the Americans tried to prevent you from seeing what you wanted to see?"

"Yes. But they were very clever about it. They said we could go anywhere we wanted to, so one day I asked to go for a drive in the countryside. They took me on a road which they call a freeway. We traveled five miles in four hours and by the time we got out of the city, our translator said we had to go back because it would take us another four hours to return to our hotel. So we didn't see anything. I asked if we could take a train the next day and he told us there were no passenger trains in the United States any more. Of course, none of us believed it."

"Comrade Dan Gum. What were your impressions of the visit?"

"The thing that impressed me the most was the cult of Nixon we saw everywhere. It is like our cult of Mao Tze-tung with one major difference. In the People's Republic of China, we give credit to our beloved chairman Mao for everything good that happens here. In the United States, they blame Mr. Nixon for everything bad that happens there."

"Comrade Ro Po-li, what was the highlight of the trip as far as you're concerned?"

"I think the highlight of the trip was our private visit with Vice President Sprio Agnew. He was very friendly and he told us many things about the United States that no one else would talk about."

"Such as?"

"He told us that the American press and television networks were full of lies and they slanted the news and took things out of context so the American people never knew the truth. It was exactly what Mao Tze-tung had told us and we were happy to hear it confirmed from the lips of a high American government official. At the end of our interview, Agnew gave us a souvenir golf ball which he said he had personally played with. The ball had a quite dab of blood on it, but our translator refused to tell us why."

Earth Week, 1971

Nothing could be more gratifying than the knowledge that so many young Americans are taking such an active part in improving the quality of life in America. And it gives me special pleasure during this Earth Week to applaud these constructive efforts to answer one of the most challenging crises to face our nation in this century.

It is imperative that we make our reparations now for the damage we have done to our air, our land and our water; and it is crucial that Americans of all ages and walks of life cooperate and work together toward this goal. None could be better suited to give inspiration, initiative and fresh ideas to this movement than America's young people; and none could give us so much confidence in the continuing success of this all-important mission and in the eventual realization of the goals we have set.

My warmest congratulations to the young men and women who have decided to dedicate their talents and energies to the work of environmental protection and preservation. It is an investment well made in the future of our country.

Letters To The Editor

It Was The Worst of Times Syndrome

To the Editor:

Normally, the diurnal pageant of inanity, silliness, and sanctimonious viewing-with-alarm on the Collegian editorial page may be suffered to pass without comment as the natural result of deadlines and youthful ardor. Still, the April 21st lead editorial on the upcoming anti-war demonstrations was more than normally outrageous. For perceptible beneath the accustomed torrent of trivial puerilities may be seen the symptoms of a more profound malaise, a more sinister blighting of the spirit: the "It Was the Worst of Times Syndrome."

Sufferers of this syndrome are, in every age, convinced that the problems confronting them are without parallel for complexity, magnitude, and foreboding of doom; that their counter-measures are likewise unparalleled for courage, desperation, and sincerity; and that the nation will hurtle headbasketed to hell if their counsels are not heeded.

The symptomology of the Collegian displays this gleeful wallowing in superlatives. One line on the fever chart runs: "The government has never been less credible..." Vitiating counter-examples spring to mind; John Adams, sponsor of the Alien and Sedition Acts; Franklin Pierce, esteemed a traitor by most of his countrymen for sympathy with the South; Warren Harding, besmirched by high scandal and corruption. Surely this is dubious historical judgement.

But a second symptom passes beyond the niceties of estimation, and lands up in the realm of errant nonsense. We are told that the coming street demonstrations will be "the first real challenge that this government will have ever faced." Fie on you, Sir! for such zeal! Are these not real challenges: the Whiskey Rebellion and Daniel Shay's Rebellion in Washington's term; the Hartford Convention of 1814, plotting New England's secession from Mr. Madison's war; that fraternal altercation since known as the Civil War; the Pullman Strike of Cleveland's term, broken by the U.S. Cavalry? Or, if by "this government," you intend "this administration," there is always the harlequinesque figure of Hubert Horatio Humphrey on the hustings in 1968. So much for that.

The point of this letter is not to trip up, out of pettiness of spirit, the Collegian for particular indiscretions. It is rather to suggest that draining the cup of bathos, calamity, and jubilant masochism not only opens the Collegian to skepticism from the social quietists, and ridicule from the recondite, but also hinders the presentation of the editorial message (however chuckle-headed that may be, beneath the layers of black crepe). It is not altogether impossible, that a cooler view of contemporary pertubations, conjoined with some restraint in the slinging of ink, might do much to elevate the Collegian to some pretensions to respectability, and enhance its appeal and impact throughout the University community. Confiding in your innate good sense, and wishing your journal nothing but prosperity and felicity, I remain, Sir, your Faithful Reader,

C. T. Irwin

At Home With Mud

I was only mildly surprised yesterday (April 22) to find yet another in the scintillating series of letters to the Editor from the pen of Mr. Robert Corry. He is obviously piqued by the unexpected and unprecedented number of students at UMass who do not agree that Viet-Nam is an issue "rapidly falling apart right before their eyes". I am referring to the well over 200 students who have purchased bus tickets to go to Washington for the April 24th demonstration against the war. For reasons known only to himself, Mr. Corry chose to vent the venom of his frustration on Claire Moriarty, whom he describes as a "curvy Trotskyite feminist" Since Mr. Corry makes no secret of his feeling about Trotskyites and feminists, one can only infer from the context of his letter that he is equally abhorrant of the female body. He further classifies Claire as a "sometime supporter" of a list of causes which he doubtless considers un-American. I have not known Claire to be less than wholly sincere in her support for any issue involving human rights and dignity. Finally, he refers to Claire and those of us of her mentality (a word, I fear, he has confused with - "persuasion") as being "crazies". If Mr. Corry can truly believe the fiction he has created by lumping the MOBE, YSA, and SDS together as a conglomerate, perhaps his own sanity ought to be questioned. In conclusion, I can only say that Mr. Corry has done a remarkable job of mud-slinging once again, but then we all know what animal is most at home with mud.

Stop A Thief

To the Editor:

Some people may call me a paranoid when I warn them to lock their door at all times. However I no longer agree. I used to lock my door when I went out of the dorm or downstairs to the kitchen or T.V. room. But why lock your door when you are just going to the bathroom or next door to visit a friend. It's such a hassle to put the key in the door, turn it to lock and have to carry the key around with you expecially if you're wearing a skirt or slacks without pockets.

On Sunday, April 18 1971, between the hours of 11 a.m. and 1:45 p.m., I must have been in and out of my room fifty times. ONLY during that time was my room unlocked. On Sunday, April 18, 1971, between the hours of 11:00 a.m. and 1:45 p.m. a SCM Electric typewriter, GE portable hair dryer, a Selmer-Bundy Clarinet, a checkbook and a UMass I.D. were stolen from my room. Why get upset over material things? HELL, I worked hard to earn money to buy these things. I'm going to be upset especially since the robbery could have been prevented if my door had been locked.

I [illegible] around when I tell them to lock their [illegible] my warning starts from my mistake [illegible] I'm not the paranoid half [illegible] don't look your own [illegible]

Enjoy

To the Editor:

I am told that loneliness is a problem here on campus. I see loneliness in many faces. Yet somehow I feel loneliness need not exist. It is perpetuated by us in the West by our group consciousness and by how everyone has a need to belong. I wonder. Are we merely conditioning everyone to feel "lonely?" Can one not enjoy solitude? How can a person be truly lonely (alone, solitary) when there is air and ground around him? Can he not realize the presence of trees, of blades of grass? If you think they do not respond, you are not listening hard enough.

If people tell you, "You are alone," merely turn around. You do not live in a void. You are not alone. Throw out loneliness and realize the passion of nature and of life. You will feel the warm smile of the passion of yourself. Enjoy.

Walking Hurts

To the Editor:

I'm sure this question has been asked many times, but why the hell are so many people on this campus so God-damn apathetic? Maybe some of us were just made without hearts. That's all I can think of. As Ferlinghetti once said, "The world is a beautiful place to be born into if you don't mind some people dying all the time, or maybe, only starving some of the time, which isn't half so bad if it isn't you." And he's right, if it isn't you-you don't care!

I'm a member of the Amherst Walk for Development Committee. This Committee is trying to set up a walk in the Amherst area to help feed some of the hungry people in this world, and to give some of the least fortunate a chance. Did you know that an average dog in N. America has a higher protein intake than an average child in India? We, as a committee, have run two other editorials and many announcements and have gotten no response from the University community. At the moment a core of about five students, five out of twenty thousand, are struggling to keep this walk alive. We need your help! At this point we're no longer asking, we're begging. Please come and see us, or at least give us a call. We will have a table in front of the new bookstore from Monday April 26 to Friday May 7 from 9 a.m. till 5 p.m., or call us at 253-2958.

GIVE A DAMN!

Dada Challenge

To the Editor:

This is a letter to the Editor and to the people in response to the challenge ("We Challenge the Dada Festival to Produce a Schedule of Their Events") that appeared in the Thursday, April 22 Collegian from the anti-dadaists to the dadists.

First of all I believe "dadaist" was misspelled "dadist", also, dada is rarely a capitalized word, and, foremostly, what would anti-dadaists do with a schedule of dada events? Would they attend them? Such insolence is not only hard to bear, but also rather amusing. We all the dada phone have agreed that the anti-dadaists have created a simultaneous dada event out of their premeditated dada attack. This is just another example that goes to show that dada is better [illegible] there are [illegible] if [illegible] Performers [illegible] rating we at the Dada phone challenge [illegible] dadaist [illegible] a committee of ten people.

Simply Wonderful

To the Editor:

To most of us food is means by which we can maintain our bodies in good health and to satisfy our sense of taste. Food offered to God before it is eaten by man, however, also gives us the purifying strength to maintain our consciousness or awareness of God. Food offered to God is called prasadam in sanskrit and it means "mercy". In shopping, in preparation, and in eating, prasadam, we are given a chance to remain conscious of Him, to be engaged in His transcendental loving service. Krishna or God requests in the Bhagavad Gita, "Just offer me a leaf, a flower, a fruit or some water with love and devotion and I will accept it." Therefore, in offering food to God we only offer those things that he mentions in addition to milk products because Krishna is called the protector of the cows. The prime ingredient in all preparations, however, is the loving attitude with which we prepare, offer and eat the prasadam. This love makes God "transcendentally hungry". When the food is nicely prepared, we offer it back to the Source from which everything emanates and by so doing our contaminated consciousnesses become gradually purified and blissful.

Those persons who would like to sample this spiritually and physically beneficial diet which is recommended by all yogis who are trying to control their tongues and other senses in order to fix the senses on God, are invited to come to the "Simply Wonderful" in the Berkshire Room in the old Student Union starting April 26. Lunch prasadam will be offered at 11:30 a.m. and served at 12:00 noon, Monday though Friday, April 26 to May 7 by members of the Bhaktiyoga Society in conjunction with the International Society for Krishna Consciousness. Donations are requested to help cover costs, but are not mandatory.

Hare Krishna!

THE GLASS MENAGERIE
Tennessee William's best play will be performed Sunday through Tuesday evenings at 8:30 at Sage Hall, Smith. (S)

Films

THE ARISTOCATS (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)
A new full-length cartoon from Walt Disney. It's about kidnapping cats and features the voices of Eva Gabor, Sterling Holloway, and Phil Harris.

COOL HAND LUKE (Friday, Mahar, 7 and 9:15)
It seems that the print of this film is getting pretty well-worn. Nonetheless if you haven't seen it yet, it's well worth while. Paul Newman gives an excellent performance as a convict attempting to live with sadistic authority. Arthur Kennedy and Jo Van Fleet are excellent in supporting roles.

DOCTOR'S WIVES (Campus Cinemas)
A hopelessly banal and clumsy film about the behind-the-scenes of a big city hospital. Everyone has secrets; the neurosurgeon is making with the nice looking bed pan girl, and the hospital chief's a scag freak, and the head nurse has hot pants for one of her charge. It may make you take up faith healing.

GENESIS III (Friday and Saturday, Hampden Dining Commons, 7:30 and 10)
A collection of ten short, experimental films. The program is comprised of dramatic screenplays, animation, social documentaries and comedic offerings. Several of these films have won film festival awards.

HANG 'EM HIGH (Sunday, SU Ballroom, 7:30 and 9:30)
The final film in the Sergio Leone film series. As in all the rest the film boasts fine photography and an excellent music score. Clint Eastwood again stars and the Man With No Name.

JOHN AND MARY (Thursday, SU Ballroom 7 and 9:30)
Dustin Hoffman and Mia Farrow shine in an otherwise flat and undistinguished film. The two leads meet at a dating bar, sleep together, then fall in love. Even the New Morality couldn't save this reverse Hollywood cliche.

LAST SUMMER (Friday, SU Ballroom, 7, 9, 11)
Frank and Eleanor Perry's stunning and frightening film about the nature of evil. Four rich and bored youths spend a summer together on Fire Island but being a little too much about life and each other. The film is memorable for a brilliant sequence involving a rape. A fine script, taut direction and excellent performances, minus those of Cathy Burns and Richard Thomiley, make this the best film about growing up since Francis and Angela Lee Coppola's "You're a Big Big Boy Now."

LITTLE BIG MAN (Showcase Cinemas, W. Springfield, Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Almost to the contrary, the best and most memorable film of last year. Dustin Hoffman plays Jack Crabb, a man who was raised in both the white and Indian cultures during the 1870's. Director Arthur Penn has been able to capture the epic and sprawling nature of the novel from which the film was based. Characters weave in-and-out adding comic effect to the film's ultimate dark theme. Hoffman is excellent but no one in the cast can compare finally with the exciting performance of Chief Dan George.

LOVE STORY (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
Erich Segal's saccharine success. In its last weeks.

MARRY ME! MARRY ME! (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith)
A most cunning comedy about a young man about to marry, to his astonishment, into a family of diamond merchants and his poorly timed passion for his pretty English tutor.

MASH (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
A funny, funny film. The story of three cynical medics during the Korean war and their many wild antics. Truly excellent film comedy with outstanding performances from Elliot Gould, Donald Sutherland and Sally Kellerman as the immortal Hot Lips Houlihan.

PATTON (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
A comedy. Oscars for best movie, acting, and directing were given to this last year. Not to be confused with the college-town (Sexfest). If recently won the Oscar for best movie of 1969.

PUT UP YOUR MONEY AND RUN (Saturday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)
Woody Allen's wild and hilarious comedy. The story of a shmeil who robs an ice cream parlor to finance a bank heist. If you like Woody Allen you will find the film an absolute joy.

THE GREAT WHITE HOPE (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
The impressive film of the Pulitzer Prize winning play. James Earl Jones gives a magnificent performance as Jack Jefferson, a black boxer who won the world championship during the early part of the century and suffered much abuse because he did. Jane Alexander is excellent as his white friend who suffers very much from a rough script and some poor directing.

TO KILL A MOCKINGBIRD (Friday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30 and 10)
One of the most memorable films of the Sixties. Gregory Peck gives his finest performance as a lawyer in the South during the Thirties. It is a story about growing up and prejudice as seen through the eyes of two children in most sensitively done.

THE VIRGIN SPRING (Talkie, Northampton)
Ingmar Bergman's medieval passion play. A rape-murder and the father's subsequent vengeance precede an act of God. Formal and most difficult but excellently done.

Albums: Short Takes

Real Live John Sebastian, John Sebastian (Reprise)
This is one of the most enjoyable albums in a long time. John Sebastian is one of those truly happy performers that's always so good to hear from and his new album is more than what could have been expected.

Recorded in concert last summer, the first four California concerts in particular, the Album's comprised of old Lovin' Spoonful hits, oldies, country-blues, and even the old standard "Irene". John Sebastian could probably sing anything and get away with it, he has that kind of rapport with his audience. It's unassuming, easy, fun, and happy, and it all comes through on this album.

He opens with expected soft good-time folk (such as the old hits "Lovin' You" "Younger Girl", and "Make Up Your Mind.") He next gets into oldies from the fifties in a fun way, before doing "Nashville Cats" and some numbers off his single album.

He closes out, after a strong, powerfully-felt version of "Darlin' Be Home Soon", with some great harmonica playing. Sebastian has played the instrument all his life and in many ways, his harmonica playing is the best thing on this very fine in concert album.

B.N.

Hexagram 16–Russ Giguere (Warner Brothers)
The format for solo albums is starting to get stereotyped–on this one, there are a couple of country songs, some old rock (Smokey Robinson's "Shop Around," for one), some heavy rock, and a few deep meaning songs, and it's starting to get a little tight for individual Expression.

Fortunately, Russ Giguere of the Association is good enough to make it work one more time. Partly, I imagine, because the good backup team is neither from the Kantner-Crosby-Garcia crowd nor the Russell-Clapton-Bramlett bunch, and partly because Giguere has written some good songs and sings them very well. Hexagram 16 is still refreshing to hear.

E.J.

Expressions, Turley Richards (Warner Brothers)
Turley Richards sings a mild sort of white blues, not quite as mellow as Van Morrison and light years away from Leon Russell. He has a good, strong voice and is backed by some fine arrangements. His major problem is he isn't much of a songwriter. Some of his seven originals are nice, but others suffer from simple, repetitive melodies and foolish lyrics ("I'm stoned, stoned, stoned, stoned, stoned, stooooooned on love.")

This is probably his only fault for when Turley Richards is good, and he is throughout most of the album, he makes some fine easy listening.

City of Gold, Pearls Before Swine. (Reprise)
Pearls Before Swine have been, unfortunately, an elusive group for a number of years. A version they did on an early album of Leonard Cohen's "Suzanne" is fondly remembered by some, aside from that, the group has drifted from memory.

They are a soft, acoustical guitar–oriented group and fall into two distinctive music styles. When the group's leader Thos. Rapp is singing, their sound resembles Leonard Cohen; when there's the soft, fragile vocals of Elisabeth and David Noyes, it's Pentangle.

It's good to have this group back in an intelligent, soft, unpretentious album. It's most refreshing to hear a group who is so careful with their material as Pearls Before Swine.

The Floating Opera (Embryo)
Some mild–very–mild–jazz rock from an Ann Arbor, Michigan, quintet. There are a couple of decent songs, such as "Age of Onan," but as a whole this is a pretty interesting record, one on which the songs tend to last much too long.

Bring Me Home, Mother Earth (Reprise)
Mother Earth is another fairly neglected group, which is hard to understand why considering the talent and voice of their lead singer Tracy Nelson. Her voice is grainy, rich, impressive bluesy baritone. Listen and compare, for instance to Rita Coolidge's version of "Seven Bridges Road" and then more folk version on this album, Tracy's voice is most overwhelming.

The group backs her up well without losing their personality. (as so often happens in this kind of arrangement). They also wisely keep away from their own material and do an excellent set of blues done in folk-rock style. The songs of a songwriting E. Kaz are especially impressive and the group does a more than fine job with them. Whoever E. Kaz may be, his work should be further explored.

Their version of James Taylor's "Fire and Rain" is much better than any other I've heard. Tracy's emphasis on the phrase "let's be Yankees memories (perhaps unintentional) of Aretha Franklin's excellent version of the Beatles' song. They have this intensity of feeling.

White blues is now becoming a popular style in music. Tracy Nelson and Mother Earth easily have a strong lead on anyone in this area.

B.N.

Hold On, It's Coming, Country Joe McDonald (Vanguard)
Joe McDonald, the last refugee from the almost-fantastic Country Joe and the Fish, has gone back to rock after two excellent Nashville albums. Though the mix is different, the best good word of the Fish still linger on.

First the bad. From the guy who gave us the "Fixin' to Die Rag," and I know you all have it by now but it was the best Vietnam song ever, all the social commentary we can get in some anemic cuches about the Pigs, two identical versions of the title song (an anachronistic ode to love freaks), and an anti-drug song, "Playing with Fire," which is quaint compared to a couple on the Fish's unjustly ignored "Here We Are Again."

Joe's best touch, however, has always been with the fragile, ethereal ballads, such as these that made the Fish's second album such a masterpiece. "Traveling," though just a bit silly, is one of Joe's most haunting compositions, and "Ballancing on the Edge of Time" features a top-notch expressive vocal. I swear I've heard the song before somewhere, but I'm still waiting for Joe McDonald to come out with that really fantastic album I always thought the Fish were capable of, and which he could still do on his own. In the meantime, this is another very good album for him.

The Doobie Brothers (Warner Brothers)
Acoustic Creedance? The songs are rock'n'roll, but the performances are quiet, sometimes like Crosby Stills and Nash's first album, sometimes like an unamplified Band. Not to say that they are particularly versatile: the voices often sound as if they were too far away from the mike, and the songs run together without any change in expression or sometimes even in chords.

An Expression Of Black Spirit

TAKE TWO

Replies To Notes From Yale

By Nathaniel Hayden

To the Editor:

I was pleased to see an article on Crestdale in The Yearling. It was a very important article because it gives us the reasons for the current situation that black students here are in. As Mr. Hayden mentioned, there is "the Nobility". In addition to that, there are two other organizations. They are the traditional BSU and the African Students Association. With three factions such as these, it is difficult to get anything done collectively. Although I live in New Nairobi, I see no need to distinguish myself because I happen to live there. That is why I chose not to join "the Nobility", I could not join the BSU because its' quota for members who live in one of the Big Five had already been filled. This definitely detracts from the spirit of the BSU's when they first organized in the 1960's. I guess since we aren't suffering as much as we did during that period, there is no need for unity amongst black students of all socio-economic levels.

The chauvinistic views expounded by "the Nobility", and even the title of the group is parallel to the fantasies in E. Franklin Frazier's book "Black Bourgeoisie". True, many blacks today can afford their castle in suburbia and the like, but I think the idea of a group of blacks, or anyone for that matter, getting together and designating themselves "nobility" is appalling.

There used to be a term called "ghetto fever", to characterize the attitudes prevelant in many ghettoes. Today we have the suburban plague. In the 1970's, there did not seem to be any mass movement of middle-income blacks to the suburbs when they were gradually pryed open, but this changed when according to the New York Times in an article in 1982 stated:

NEW CITIES TO BE BUILT ACROSS THE COUNTRY

Washington, June 8- George Henderson, Director of the Department of Housing and Urban Development announced here today that thirty new cities will be constructed throughout the nation within the next five years.

The purpose of creating these new cities is to increase the reduction of concentration of large segments of the population in large urban areas. As was the case with highway construction, the federal government will pay 90% and the state government 10%. Housing in the new towns will be fully integrated. Mr. Henderson said, "We will take measures to insure that minority groups will have a share of the housing which is at least equal to their representation in the population. The schools, police forces and the like will be set up with this in mind too.

Seeing that the government was serious about protecting their right to move into suburbia, many blacks took advantage of the opportunity. Unfortunately, as in the case of immigrant groups, newcomers are being looked down on by those who preceded them. Of course, the community I live in is one of them. It's a shame because these communities had the potential to become a combination of the best of both worlds: the middle class white culture, and the Afro-American culture. They chose instead to caricature some of the aspects of each. Examples:

1) "Many of the meals I serve my family are in that "down home tradition". We have chitterlings, hog maws and spare ribs each weekend." A very good term for what I have just mentioned is "gastronomic soul".

2) Whenever I go to the theater in New York, I always stop by Harlem, to see if any improvements have been made. I doubt that I will ever go to Harlem again, however, because it's still very depressing.

3) Elvira Hotchkiss' son Marvin is going to The University of Georgia Law Schol this fall. For some reason she asked, "Why the hell aren't you going to Columbia or Yale?" He was so shocked by this that he decided not to go at all.

4) "Davis, face it. I'm worth more than you. Yes, your position has the prestige, but mine offers the cash. I'm sure there is no doubt in your mind as to which of the two is valued more. You can't buy a summer cottage with prestige." It's statements such as these that makes one feel that Crestdale and New Nairobi, not to mention the other towns like them were not worth building.

Black Studies

By Richard Hardie

I was leafing through the Smith College course catalogue the other day...let's see, under B, there it is, Black Studies: Courses, descriptions–I swear, it was like finding marijuana in that Sears directory that farmers are always leaving in the outhouse. Wouldn't that blow your mind–under M, and there, nestled cosily on the same page with baby mattresses, little leaves of grass, shipping weight, etc. We know what Sears is about, and if they start selling pot there's going to be a lot of people shopping around for another vice. That's immature?--well so maybe is Sears and pot and Smith, but Black Studies is NOT.

First of all, let's stop capitalizing it--Black Studies. Whenever an outstanding negro was getting his praise we always used to wait for the phrase: ...and So-and-So is a credit to his race. The wording has changed a bit these here days: He gives glory and dignity to America through deep attachment to the past, present and future of his race; and the smith catalogue had a very interesting variation on that theme: You get credits for studying those courses. I don't think they're credits to or for your race, that is, I think you're going to be a credit to the college--three hours worth for studying a century of heretofore fucked up black history.

...I swear, it was like finding marijuana in that Sears directory that farmers are always leaving in the outhouse.

Black studies has a grander history than its come-lately tenure in the Smith catalogue might indicate. 1760. Name of course: White Civilization. Name of school: slave ship. Student: Olaudah Equiano. Professor: Himself...and I was now persuaded that I had gotten into a world of bad spirits, and that they were going to kill me. Their complexions too differing so much from ours, their long hair, and the language they spoke, united to confirm me in this belief...I found some black people about me...I asked them if I were not to be eaten by those white men with horrible looks, red faces, and long hair. They gave me to understand we were to be carried to these white people's country to work for them. I then was a little relieved, and thought, if it were no worse than working, my situation was not so desperate. But I still feared I should be put to death, the white people looked and acted, as I thought, in so savage a manner; for I had never seen among any people such instances of brutal cruelty; and this not only shewn towards us blacks, but also to some of the whites themselves. One white man in particular I saw, when we were permitted to be on deck, flogged so unmercifully with a large rope near the foremast, that he died in consequence of it; and they tossed him over the side as they would have done a brute. I could not help expressing my fears and apprehensions to some of my countrymen; I asked them if these people had no country, but lived in this hollow place. Then, said I, how comes it in all our country we never heard of them.

Black studies has a grander history than its come-lately tenure in the Smith catalogue might indicate.

You black professors in the black studies departments want to know where to begin if you can't use the standard tools of Sears and white education. Take that Smith catalogue and paint the two pages black, and you want to get it further back in the classroom--not under the teacher's nose, so list it alphabetically under some other letter. Try R. No, don't capitalize it, just r!

March Wages Outstrip Costs Of Living Rate

WASHINGTON (AP)–The average weekly wage of some 48 million rank-and-file workers spurted up $1.37 to $123.98 in March and outstripped last month's rise in living costs, the government said Thursday.

Most of the gain was due to a longer average work week as economic activity in many industries, particularly construction, recovered from February's slump, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

The average work week lengthened by 18 minutes and, combined with a one-cent hourly gain in pay, caused the rise of eight-tenths of one per cent in the average paycheck, the bureau said.

After deduction of federal income and Social Security taxes and allowance for the March rise of three-tenths of one per cent in living costs, the average paycheck was worth 59 cents a week more in purchasing power, it said.

"The March rise in the work week made up for a big drop in February and it's hard to say whether it is the beginning of any movement further," said a spokesman for the bureau.

Although purchasing power was still 2.1 per cent below the record peak in September of 1968, the March rise represented a continuing trend of higher buying power in the last several months except in February, he said.

Purchasing power had fallen 3.8 per cent or $3.50 a week below the 1968 peak last November, and the latest figures showed a recovery of $1.57 since then, he added.

The figures cover non-supervisory production workers who make up more than half the nation's total civilian work force of 82.6 million.

The report, following Wednesday's announcement of the March living costs rise of three-tenths of one per cent, seemed certain to cheer President Nixon in his efforts to curb inflation.

The White House had said the price report, showing the smallest first-quarter rise in living costs in four years, was "extremely good news."

Organized labor's chief economist, Nathaniel Goldfinger of the AFL–CIO said prices were still running 4.6 per cent above a year ago and wiping out much of the purchasing power of workers' wage hikes.

But another critic of Nixon's economic policies, Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., chairman of the House-Senate Economic Committee, sided with the White House in calling it "the most encouraging indication in many months" that Nixon's policies are beginning to curb inflation.

FBI Arrest Two In Fraud Case

BOSTON (AP)—Two Newton men were arrested by the FBI Thursday on charges involving alleged issuance of unauthorized letters of credit and loans on the assets of an Everett bank.

Arrested on indictments issued Wednesday in Boston were Richard H. Gens, 42, a former state assistant attorney general, and Richard E. Linn, 59, a former vice-chairman of the board of the Industrial Bank and Trust Co., the FBI said.

The indictments charged them with issuing $285,000 in unauthorized letters of credit on the assets of the bank, an FBI spokesman said. He said most of the credit letters were issued to a foreign film company in Paris.

They were also charged with acceptance of falsified and inflated personal financial statements used by the bank to issue a total of $80,000 in loans, the FBI said.

James L. Handley, special agent in charge of the Boston FBI office, said the FBI has responsibility for investigating such frauds at federally insured banks.

Smith College Plans To Remain Celibate

Smith College will not become coeducational at this time, it was revealed yesterday.

An ad hoc committee of faculty, students, administration and trustees has completed its year-long study and a report is slated for release next week.

A top-level source at Smith told the Gazette yesterday that several major findings are included in the committee's final report. The source, while declining to comment on the findings until next week, did not deny the inference was obtained from the following news release quoting Dean of Admissions, David Lasher:

"Our applicants have given a lot of serious thought to the kind of campus environment they want, and they have deliberately chosen a women's college."

"The decision made by several women's colleges to admit men as students has not dimmed Smith's appeal," he said.

"The increasing concern about woman's identity has helped us," he continued. "At Smith, women are first-class citizens and this is what today's applicants want."

He stated that the diversity of educational opportunities Smith offers also attract students.

"Smith provides numerous opportunities for students to spend their junior year abroad or to study at another American college or university for one or two semesters," he said.

The dean explained that admission figures show that Smith is a vital institution offering a unique educational program to young women," Lasher noted. "The applicants know what they want, and they know that they can receive it at Smith."

Total enrollment at the college is 2,500 and applicants represent 43 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico and 15 foreign countries.

Several years ago, Professor Eli Chinoy completed a detailed feasibility study in which he recommended a co-educational status.

The college has sent letters of acceptance to 650 potential members of the 1975 class. The new class will be slightly larger than the present freshman class.

Financial awards were given to 187 applicants.

Note Missing Hour Sunday

'Heroic Materialism' A Subject of Smith Film

NORTHAMPTON — The last film in the British "Civilization" series, "Heroic Materialism" will be shown at Smith College Friday April 23.

The screening is open to the public without charge. Sponsored by the Smith College Art Department, the 13-part series on the cultural life of Western man is narrated by Sir Kenneth Clark. The series ranging from the fall of Rome to the present was prepared for the British Broadcasting Company. The film will be shown at 4, 15, 7, and 9 p.m. in Wright Hall on the Smith campus.

"Heroic Materialism" depicts modern man's struggle to give his own civilization new direction and forward thrust. Money, gain, the new god of the 19th century, is reflected in the building of New York City to the glory of man, as compared to the gothic cathedrals built to the glory of God.

You can afford it while you're still young enough to enjoy it.

Having the want is one thing. Having the wherewithal is another. The trouble with being young is that all too often you have the one without the other.

But the 1971 MG Midget is something else again. Here is a true sports car for under $2500* — the lowest price you can pay for the real thing.

In this case the real thing includes a race-winning 1275 c.c. engine. Racing-type rack-and-pinion steering (2.33 turns lock to lock) for cool, crisp driving. Heavy-duty suspension for superb road-hugging. Disc brakes up front for straight-line, non-fade stops. Twin reclining bucket seats. And full sports car instrumentation with an electric tach.

Which only goes to show that, even though MG has been engineering sports cars for over 40 years, there's no generation gap. Crewmen In Marist Regatta

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

The President's Cup is the prize sought by crews from Marist College, St. Joseph's Academy, Villanova, the Merchant Marine Academy at King's Point, Iona, Holy Cross, and UMass in a gala regatta tomorrow in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., hosted by the Marist oarsmen. The competition will undoubtedly prove challenging for the Redman crews which are aspiring to shake off a non-firing week of practice, and to come home much happier than from last week-end's disappointment in Syracuse.

UMass has been slated into five events, with the most important race set to open rowing action at 10:45 a.m. The varsity crews will be given the best conditions of the Hudson River to row in, before the usual expected rough waters come in with the wind.

A new combination from the ever-experimenting coach Mike Faherty's practice trials of this week will find their toughest opponent to be St. Joseph's varsity in a field of five crews. The defending Dad Vail champions, St. Joe's has only been beaten once so far this year, by Navy (Otherwise, their all senior-one-sophomore eight has been winning on their usual rounds against crews like Yale and Georgetown.

The undefeated Marist varsity will stick their experience with the home course on a line they hope will lead them to a victory that will impress the home crowd by pushing St. Joe's. Marist has beaten Wesleyan this year, but so have the Redmen.

King's Point and Villanova round out the varsity competition, with Holy Cross a probably starter. Suffering from a late start onto the water, the Crusaders have already lost to Wesleyan.

Taking to the water in a pocock instead of the schoenbrod, the UMass jv's are written as favorites to win because of their strong performance last week-end. Coach Faherty has predicted, "we have a more than adequate chance to win" against St. Joe's, whose jv's were in the Dad Vail finals last year, and Marist, whose boat is composed mostly of sophomores who finished in second place of the Vail frosh contest.

In one of the four-man races, one UMass frosh group will vie against a Villanova varsity four, and the other against a freshman four from King's Point.

A five boat contest, the eight Little Redmen will find the dominating St. Joseph's and Marist freshmen to be the teams to beat. Philadelphia and Poughkeepsie are areas emphatic of crew, and both St. Joe's and Marist do recruiting from high schools to get experienced rowers, while UMass frosh are still learning in their first year of crew.

Tomorrow the UMass Crew Club will see just how they stand with two of their league's biggest adversaries that they will race against later in the season.

BB Sat on WMUA

This Saturday, April 24, WMUA opens its baseball broadcasting season, as the UMass Redmen take on the Wildcats from New Hampshire. The Airtime for the broadcast will be 1:00 P.M., for the dedication ceremony of Earle E. Lorden Field, formerly Varsity Field.

Roy Gustafson will bring you the inning by inning action, with Bob Wilman providing "color." WMUA is located at 91.1 on your FM dial.

Check Monday's MDC for a complete schedule of games to be broadcast throughout the season.

Ali-Wilt Bout?

HOUSTON (AP)—A fight between Muhammad Ali and pro basketball star Wilt Chamberlain was announced by Ali Thursday and then less than an hour later called off by an Astrodome official.

"We do not have a fight to announce at this time," Jack O'Connell, senior vice president of the AstroDomain Corp. told a news conference at the Astrodome.

Earlier Ali had told newsmen while awaiting Chamberlain's arrival that he would fight the 7-foot-2 basketball great July 26 in the Astrodome.

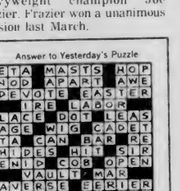
"This ain't no joke, we are going to fight," Ali said. But then O'Connell arrived and shot down the fight, saying it was being blocked by Chamberlain's tax structure.

O'Connell said Chamberlain had agreed to fight and that Ali was prepared to sign but that problems arose during a conference with Chamberlain and an attorney and tax consultant who accompanied him to Houston.

Chamberlain did not appear at the Astrodome news conference.

"The hangup at the last minute resulted from Wilt's desire for a $500,000 tax free guarantee, said O'Connell. This raised more complications than we could figure out during the time of this news conference."

O'Connell said, "There is a 50-50 chance a fight could be worked out later."



He also said the 34-year-old Chamberlain had signed an agreement last February that he would fight Ali but that that agreement was based on the assumption Ali would beat world heavyweight champion Joe Frazier. Frazier won a unanimous decision last March.

Redman Nine Downs Rhody, 6-1

By EARLE BARROLL
MDC Staff

KINGSTON, R.I. – For more than a year the UMass baseball team waited to get another crack at Rhode Island's ace-hurler, Brian Sheekey, who put a damper on its title hopes last season with two victories over the Redmen.

Yesterday the Redmen nine got their chance and made the best of it m driving Sheekey to the showers at the end of six innings on their way to a convincing 6-1 victory over the Rams.

The win upped the Redmen record to 9-4 for the season and 4-01 in Yankee Conference action while the loss was the second for the Rams against two wins and their first in Conference play against no wins.

Tom White was the pitching hero for the Redmen as he went the route for the second straight time allowing six hits, one run on an opposite field homer, struck out ten and walked only two batters.

After walking the first man to face him, the tall lefthander went to work and retired the next 14 Rams until Ken Wheless unloaded with two out in the fift with a home run which meidentally broke a string of 32 consecutive runless innings by the UMass hurlers.

After the long clout White bear down and only had to get out of a last inning bases loaded jam which he did on a strike-out and a ground out to complete his effective outing.

After three scoreless innings the Redmen opened the game up with six runs in the middle three frames.

Jack Conroy led off the Redmen fourth with a single up the middle and moved to second on an infield grounder by Jim Kiley. Mark Palau, who had a great day both at the plate and in the field singled to center to score Conroy with the first UMass run.

With one out in the first White helped himself with a single to left center and scored on a triple up the power alley in right center by Charlie Manley. After moving to third on an infield out by Conroy, Manley got in a run down between third and home on an attempted double steal with Brian Martin going from first to second. The Rams made five tosses to get Manley, but the guy with the "olden wheels" eluded all the attempts and scored.

In the sixth, the Redmen responded to the URI run in the bottom of the fifth with three of their own. Palau opened with a double. The next two Redmen were set down by Sheekey but Tom McDermott delivered a single to drive in Palau. White walked and Manley again drove a shot up the alley in right scoring both McDermott and Manley to end the Redmen scoring and send Sheekey to the showers much earlier than he and just about everyone else expected.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

Add to White's strong pitching and the teams clutch hitting the defensive gems turned in by shortstop Ed McMahon and scored baseman Conroy and the smart heads up base running on the part of the entire team and there's one heck of a complete all-around victory for coach Dick Bergquist.

The coach was noticably happy after the game. His Redmen needed this win to keep pace with U'Conn. This was a mission they had set for themselves since the beginning of the season and performing it in such convincing fashion only adds to the magnitude of the win.

The Yankee Conference is loaded with pitching this year. Sheekey will undoubtably get another shot at the Redmen up here but for the time being he will remain a terror for the rest of the league probably helping the Redmen along the way until he reaches Amherst finds another bunch of hungry Redmen waiting for him again.

REDMAN HOST UNH — Tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. the Redmen nine will be in action again hosting the University of New Hampshire. This game is of significance not only as far as the Yankee Conference standings are concerned but also because the Varsity Baseball Field will be dedicated to former UMass baseball coach Earl E. Lorden in a brief ceremony before the game. Lorden coached Redmen baseball for 20 years and this field is being dedicated to the man who contributed so much not only to the UMass athletic department but also the the entire UMass community. Chancellor Oswald Tippo and Dean Warren McGuirk, Head of the School of Physical Education and Athletic Director will make short speeches.

As for the game, UNH will be a major test for the Redmen in the conference. The Wildcats are 3-1 to date and in their last outting took U'Conn to 11 innings before losing.

This is a team that is loaded with strong young pitchers, keeping with the general theme of the conference this year. This afternoon the Wildcats are at undefeated Springfield and the Redmen will probably see either their number one or two pitcher for their contest.

Bergquist will send Tom King to the mound for UMass. In his three outings since returning from the southern trip the fireballing lefthander has given up only one earned run in 16 innings. He'll be taking a 3-0 record into the game.

With the recent shuffling of a couple of positions the definite Redman lineup won't be known until game time. But the way things have been going of late, any nine that the the field will be a solid nine.

Trackmen Run In Philly

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The Umass track team will again be represented in the prestigious Penn Relays. The Relays are annually held in Philadelphia's Franklin Field, and is one of the oldest and most popular meets in the country. It is estimated that 15,000 fans will be on hand for today's qualifying heats, and an estimated 35,000 for tomorrow's finals.

One of the reasons for the popularity of the meet is the caliber of athlete that will be competing. The Relays attract talent from the college and high school ranks from all over the country.

UMass has had some degree of success in this meet in recent years. The 880 relay team placed third in the finals two years ago. Last year Gerry Spellman, running in the 440 intermediate hurdles, placed fifth in the finals.

UMass has again entered an 880 relay team which will include Walter Mayo who was a member of the team that place in this event two years ago. Joining Mayo will be Tony Pendleton, Ron Harris and Dennis Busa.

The trio of Mayo, Pendleton, and Harris will return in the 440 relay, and will be joined by Stokes Hall. Both of these sprint relay teams have the potential to place high, but the final result will depend on the effectiveness of the team's baton passing.

The other relay team entered will be the sprint medley. Gene Costello will run the first leg of the relay which will be 440 yards. Costello, a freshman, competed in the Penn Relays last year as a member of the Fordham Prep mile relay team. Gerry Spellman will run the second leg which will be 220 yards. Ron Harris, running in his third relay of the meet, will take the third leg which will also be 220 yards, and Dave Evans, the Yankee Conference 1000 champ, will run the 880 anchor leg of the relay.

Spellman will also be competing on an individual basis in his favorite event, the 440 intermediate hurdles. Last year Spellman, in capturing his fifth place finish, established a new school record.

Eddie Arcaro will be competing as an individual in the shotput and the hammer. Arcaro continues to be a standout for the Redmen. In both of his performances this spring, he has broken the school record in the shotput. His performance in the hammer at the BC Relays should rank him in the top 20 collegiate hammer throwers in the nation according to early spring results.

Returning home from the Harvard heartbreaker, Garber's Gorilla's will host Wesleyan tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m. The stickmen will have the task of recovering both mentally and physically from the rough defeat suffered on Wednesday, as Wesleyan will be formidable opposition indeed.

In three games to date Wesleyan has faced two teams that UMass has already knocked off. Tufts and Middlebury fell to tomorrow's visitors by the scores of 18-3 and 6-5 respectively. In their other contest Washington and Lee downed Wesleyan 13-6, as Washington and Lee happen to have been the only team to defeat the English International team, which handed UMass their first loss.

In the Middlebury contest, although the score was close, the overall play was not. Wesleyan looked much the superior team, a squad with good speed and a very good first line of mid-fielders.

That first mid-field will consist of Peter Seigle (No. 22) Sandy Tucci (No. 31) and Bob Mekeel (No. 32). This first mid-field has excellent speed with three boys that can "hum the ball" in Coach Garber's words.

Mark Fredlend (No. 44) and John Billock (No. 42) will lead the Wesleyan attack as these two will be playing the sides with big Jim Akin playing the crease in between. Akin will be the second big attackman that UMass defenders will face this week. Harvard's Phil Zuckerman went at 6'4 220 lbs. while tomorrow's big boy weighs in at 220 lbs. and stands 6'5.

With essentially the same team as last year, Wesleyan revolves their attack around Billock who handles the ball quite a bit. Tucci and Mekeel in the mid-field will most likely provide UMass goalie Bruce Crawford with a busy afternoon as they take most of Wesleyan's shots on net.

Where UMass is most likely to make headway tomorrow afternoon, is against the second and third string mid-fields of Wesleyan. Garber's Gorilla's are an excellent riding ball-club that clears the ball well, whereas Wesleyan finds itself at somethig of a loss when those categories are mentioned.

Wesleyan is one of New England's top 10 ballclubs, which is saying a great deal considering the fact that UMass is number four in New England and number 11 in the country. Psychologically this is a tremendously big ballgame, because next week the Redmen go up against two teams in the top 20 in Adelphi and Fairleigh Dickinson.

"They should be tough, but we're going down there with an idea of winning." So said Coach Stephen Kosakowski about this afternoon's tennis match against the University of Rhode Island at Rhode Island.

The Rams have won 19 straight duel matches dating back to the season of '69, the same year that UMass knocked them off. In compiling an undefeated record in 1971, Rhode Island has downed a good Springfield team 7 1/2 – 1 1/2, and beaten a weak Maine club 9-0.

Last year the Rams won the Yankee Conference, which was the first time in quite a while that they had beaten UMass out in the conference championships.

Back from last year's conference title squad are their number one and [illegible]men, and Conerton and Neshat will keep Goldberg and Webman more than busy.

This afternoon's match shapes us as a tight one as Kosakowski commented, "We're playing real well now, mainly because the team has started to jell. We worked hard all spring, and now it's finally paying off."

In the way of individuals Kosakowski went right down the line. "I'm expecting Goldberg to come on strong as the season progresses. He has been bothered by a bad right hand, and as of yet it still hasn't healed. Bob Webman at number two put on a very good performance against MIT Wednesday, as he played against one of the toughest boys in New England. Chris Johnny Bloom is coming along well for us, and I'm very pleased with the play of Steve Ferber. Then there are our two freshmen, Brass and Bralley who are finally rounding out. I'm expecting them to continue their improvement."

Kosakowski moved along to doubles, saying," Chrisy Coffin and Jim Bornheim have been doing excellent jobs for us. Coffin is coming on well in doubles and of course Bornheim is a big factor in that third doubles position, because that position has won the last two matches for us."

Pagliara Elected Hoop Captain

Mike Paghara has been elected Captain of the University of Massachusetts varsity basketball team for the 1971-72 season.

The 5'10 junior was a starting guard for the Redmen last Winter. Acknowledged as the "Quarterback" of the team Pagliara's steady play, ball-handling ability and clutch scoring were highly instrumental in the 23-4 record, the Yankee Conference championship and the second straight berth in the National Invitational Tournament.

Pagliara was the third best UMass scorer with 275 points and a 10.6 average. He scored in double figures 15 times with highs of 24 at Boston U. and 17 against Rhode Island. He made 103 of 231 field goal tries for a .446 mark and 69 of 93 free throws for a .742 percentage. He was second in assists with 112, just two behind John Betancourt although missing one game with the virus.

Mike averaged 13 points for the undefeated 15-0 freshman team and was the third guard as a sophomore for the 18-7 Redmen. He is majoring in Accounting in the School of Business Administration and is a member of Kappa Sigma Fraternity.

Area Supporters Turn Out for D.C. Rally

By JANE ROLAND
Special to the MDC

Up to a thousand people from UMass and the surrounding area joined the upwards of 500,000 anti-war demonstrators in Washington, D.C. this Saturday.

The demonstration, which the Boston Globe called the largest ever in the capital city, was also unique in that it was the first demonstration against the war in Vietnam that was not overwhelmingly student oriented.

Marching in contingents alongside the massive amounts of students participation were thousands of older people, organized labor, veterans and active-duty G.I.'s, women and gay people and welfare rights organizations.

Organized labor contingents were particularly well-received: wherever District 65 Distributive Workers or UAW Local 59 went, they were applauded and cheered by the other marchers. Union contingents, which stretched on and on through the line of march, brought thousands of demonstrators into the city–one local in New York chartered an entire train for its rank and file membership.

The march was scheduled to begin at 12:00, with assemblying into different groups starting at 10:00 a.m., but by 8:00 in the morning busses had already poured into the city in such numbers that specially designated parking areas were full.

Peace March Jams Washington

Most people marched in different contingents: active-duty G.I.'s and veterans Against the War; draft resisters, pacifist groups and peace groups; the Third World contingent, United Women's and Gay Liberation contingents; Federal employees, trade unionists, professional groups, religious groups, and students. Most contingents were spirited and chanted much of the way along the parade route. The gay contingent was especially spirited, chanting "Gay Power" and "2-4-6-8-Gee, this march is really straight," the women's contingent chanted "Sisterhood is powerful-bring the troops home", and from most every section could be heard "Out Now" and "End the War Now."

The rally itself took place on the steps of the Capitol, with demonstrators covering all grassy areas surrounding the building for blocks around while others were still marching to the rally site. As more demonstrators entered the city, they waited at nearby areas and listened to speakers; many hundreds of cars and buses were unable to get into Washington because of traffic jams and ti-ups.

Different speakers and entertainers addressed themselves to different aspects of the anti-war movement. Among the speakers were John Kerry of Vietnam Vets against the War; Jerry Gordon, coordinator of NPAC; Mrs. Coretta King; Mrs. Sally Davis, Angela Davis' mother; Congresswoman Bella Abzug, David Dellinger; Harold Gibbons, international vice-president of the Teamsters Union; and Andrew Pulley of the Socialist Workers' Party, plus representatives of the gay liberation movement.

Speakers stressed the need of building an independent anti-war movement, talked about the size of the crowd, and the fact of more older people than ever before present.

The demonstration demanding an immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Southeast Asia was originally called by the National Peace Action Coalition at a mass meeting held last December in Chicago, and the call to demonstrate was endorsed by thousands of groups and individuals. The rally was co-sponsored by the People's Coalition for Peace and Justice, which also called for setting the date for attaining a $6500-a-year guaranteed minimum income and freeing all political prisoners.

Buses from this area were sent to Washington by the Student Mobilization Committees at UMass and Mount Holyoke, by the Valley Peace Center and from Greenfield and Pittsfield, and uncountable numbers of individuals drove and hitchhiked. Unfortunately one of the University busses broke down soon after leaving Amherst and so was forced to turn around with forty almost-demonstrators.

Spirit among UMass marchers was high; like everyone else, most UMass students were overwhelmed by the numbers of people present. Those from Western Massachusetts were also amazed at trees in bloom and green leaves and grass all over the city.

In the words of one participant from UMass, "The rally was fantastic: because of the huge amount of people, the entire day and the entire city became a demonstration.

"Imagine so many different kinds of Americans gathered together to demand that the President and Congress listen to them: Americans demanding the right to determine America's foreign policy; thowing opposition to the vicious war on Southeast Asia."

She prophesized "We won't be tooled by phony peace candidates of either Party; the independent anti-war movement in this country will continue to grow and continue to fill the streets until the American people can determine our own foreign policy and the Vietnamese are allowed to determine for themselves their own form of government."

Senate Votes Against Room, Board Hikes

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

The Student Senate voted last night to recommend that the Administration not increase room and board costs next year. The vote came at a special open meeting of the Senate called to discuss the increases the Administration expects to make, and to consider alternative plans for meeting the increased costs of dorms and food services.

The Senate passed the following set of recommendations instead of supporting any of the proposed options for increases presented by the Administration: "(a) We recommend that there be no increase in residence hall and dining commons fees so long as students are forced to pay interest and capital for construction of these facilities while not retaining the right to (b) That there be a moratorium on the construction of any new dormitories or dining commons or other student financed buildings; (c) That a system of rent control be forcefully advocated for Amherst and the surrounding communities; and (d) That a study committee be formed to recommend to the Student Senate by May 12, the charge and membership for a permanent student Senate; by May 12, the charge and membership for a permanent Student Senate committee on non-academic fees."

Behind the passage of these recommendations is a strong sentiment in the Senate that students are being forced to pay for an unfair University building and funding policy. Many of the Senators speaking last night felt that students are paying for mistakes that were made sometime in the past when the system of dormitory construction was established.

Treasurer Richard Verrochi and several others argued that "since students are paying for the buildings, why shouldn't they own them in title?" Currently, the title is in the name of the Building Authority, control in the hands of the University, and financial profit in the pockets of bondholder, Senators pointed out. They questioned why students could not own and control the buildings for which they pay.

Senator Daniel Stearns compared the present situation to that of the saying "the student is nigger." He said a student living in Central paying for the bond interest which goes to "big businessmen" is like the slum dweller paying rent to the slum landlord.

President Glenn Elters concurred with the trend of the Senators' objections, saying "The people who own the bonds are being catered to far more than the students who pay for them. This is a form of gross capitalism being forced onto students. I think we should say very strongly that we're not happy with this."

The only debate against the set of recommendations was made by Vice President Patricia Beharry. She said that the recommendations do not face the reality that there will be an increase this September. She agreed that it is important to study the basic premises of the system, but she wanted the Senate to deal specifically with the proposed increases and options at this time.

Before the Senate voted 32-1-3 to accept the recommendations printed above, Senator Ed Voci expressed the Senate's appreciation to Vice Chancellors Bromery and Campion for their involvement with students in studying the increases. Voci also said that for the Senate to recommend any increase would be inconsistent with its philosophy that students are being forced to pay for someone else's past mistake. He said that the Senate does not place the blame on anyone, but that the time for change has come.

Vice Chancellors Bromery and Campion responded to the Senate's recommendations by saying that they understand the reasoning behind them. They said they will not penalize anybody and that they will continue to work closely with students to decide on the costs for next year and to study the system as a whole.

VICE CHANCELLOR for Supporting Services Thomas Campion presents the Senate with the facts and figures during last night's debates over room and board increases.

Comm. Studies Future U.

By ROBERT SCHEIER
MDC Staff

The President's Committee on the Future of the University met Friday afternoon in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union, and heard a variety of student, faculty and administration speakers on subjects ranging from dorm life to funding for the CCEBS program.

The committee, which is made up of three parts one-third members from the UMass community, one third interested residents of the state, and one third people from outside of Massachusetts, is charged with investigating and recommending to the president policies on such problems as the size of the Amherst campus, admissions policies, the role of the Boston campus, and opening up the school to a greater diversity of age groups.

The subject of student life on campus was approached from several different angles in the course of the meeting. Work Week, a vacation project where Central Area students fixed their own dorms was brought up as an example of an activity that promoted a sense of belonging in a residential college, which many feel UMass lacks.

A student felt that much of the problems in student life comes from "Whitmore's inability or indifference to taking action towards student wants and needs." Later, Dr. Randolph Bromery, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, speaking on student affairs in general, said that the campus was just too large for "one Dean of Students in Whitmore."

The CCEBS program was described as "really scraping for funds" and having just scratched the surface on what it should be doing by Dean Jacobs of the College of Humanities. He said that he would like to see 20% of all of the state colleges and universities' student bodies come from poor families. He added that although there are 600 black students at UMass, all but fifty of them are on CCEBS scholarships.

Dr. Bromery added that he had done some research, and said that the first CCEBS graduating class will be larger than all the previous black students graduated by UMass in it's history.

Ali To Speak At Cage Tonight

Muhammad Ali, who will speak at the Cage tonight at 8.

Former world heavyweight champion and Muslim minister, Muhammad Ali, will lecture tonight at Curry Hicks Cage at 8 p.m. in another in a series of featured lecturers sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Ali is currently under indictment for refusal to serve in the armed forces and in retrospect is regarded as a prophet of the now popular anti-draft movement.

An exquisite master of public relations and an idol to all black, white, young and old, he is mobbed by autograph seekers and well wished whenever and wherever he appears in public.

He turned professional after winning the Olympic Gold medal as a lightheavyweight in 1960 and was responsible for the resurgence of the boxing game with his quick wit and graceful retorts.

Innovator of the "Ali Shuffle" and poet laureate of the ringed square, he defeated Sonny Liston in 1964 in Maimi to gain the world championship and during the next couple of years became one of the top goodwill embassadors for America in his over-seas bouts.

He was stripped of his title in 1967 when he refused induction into the U.S. Army claiming exemption as religious leader of the Black Muslim Sect.

Late last year he started a comeback and after two successful bouts was defeated by Joe Frazier in early March to lose his title and suffer his only defeat of his career.

Since then he has had a heavy lecture schedule including tonight's stop at UMass.

Between 3:30 and 4:30 there will be a rap session at the Black Culture Center, followed by a Coffee Hour at the Student Union Ball Room and the lecture at 8.

Romney Here For Reform Conference

Public officials from three levels of government, led by George Romney and Governor Francis W. Sargent, will play major roles in a two-day conference on intergovernmental reform at UMass today and tomorrow.

Governor Sargent, Chairman of the New England Governors' Conference, will represent the six New England governors. He will speak today at 9:25 a.m. on the problems facing all governments and options for improving services and finances. The title of his talk is "Revenue Sharing--An Idea Whose Time Has Come?"

Keynote speaker for the Town Meeting on Intergovernmental Reform, sponsored by the New England Council, will be George Romney, Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. He will speak on the Nixon administration's revenue sharing program and the sharing program and the benefits to state and local governments, following Sargent's address.

A luncheon address by Dr. Laurence N. Woodworth, chief of staff, Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation in Washington, will be directed toward an in-depth discussion of federal take-over of welfare costs.

In the afternoon, Robert E. Steadman of the Committee for Economic Development in Washington, will talk on the needs for state-local government improvements.

Following dinner, Larry Margolis, executive director of the Citizens' Conference on State Legislatures, will present "An Evaluation of New England Legislatures." Responding to the address will be Marshall Cobleigh, Speaker of the New Hampshire House of Representatives and Lt. Governor John S. Burgess of Vermont.

The luncheon address on Tuesday, will be given by Daniel L. Skoler, Director of the American Bar Association Commission on Correctional Facilities and Services in Washington. He will speak on "Modernizing the Criminal Justice System."

Other major speakers include Robert H. McClain, Jr., Executive Director of the Massachusetts Master Tax Plan Commission; Maurice A. Donahue, former Senate President and now Professor of Practical Politics at UMass; and Kenneth Pickard, Executive Director of the Massachusetts League of Cities.

C.E.Q. Holding Retreat To Organize, Plan

The Coalition for Environmental Quality, (CEQ) is planning a retreat to the mountains to give its members and other interested persons an opportunity to "get their heads together" about the environmental movement on this campus. The plan resulted from numerous discussions at CEQ meetings. Members felt that while CEQ continues to provide valuable services to the University, the group still falls short of its potential.

The object of the retreat is spend a weekend together away from the University getting to know each other, and trying to get a clearer idea of what CEQ's role might be in the ecology momement.

Scheduled to leave Friday afternoon, April 30, and return Sunday afternoon, May 2, the retreat will be almost totally unstructured to give people time and freedom to deal with those questions they are concerned about. Opportunities for relaxation and all kinds of recreation will be available at the 440 acre Cummingfield Activity Center in Cummington, Mass.

The retreat is open to anyone interested in making CEQ more effective next year, but must be limited to 50 persons. The cost per person will be $14 or less, including meals, accomodations and transportation.

Registration for the retreat should be done today by calling CEQ (545-0618), stopping by the office, or coming to a special CEQ meeting tonight at 7 PM in room 164 of the Campus Center, where the retreat will be discussed in detail.

RETREAT TO THE MOUNTAINS-The CEQ will be spending a weekend at the 440 acre Cummingfield Activity Center in Cummington, where they will try to "get their heads together" on future activities.

Vehicle Inspection Registration Info.

Massachusetts motorists are reminded that they MUST display a current registration sticker on their license plates, and a new spring inspection sticker on the windshield prior to May 15. Due to staggered registration, many people are carrying validation stickers in the vehicle. They must be affixed to the license plates.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts requires that all students whose motor vehicles bear license plates from states other than Massachusetts and who are eligible to operate these vehicles on the roads and highways of Massachusetts, register their vehicles with the Police Dept. of the town in which the school they are attending is situated.

Registration of a vehicle with the University Parking Coordinator does not satisfy this obligation.

Due to the increasing number of out of state operators being cited for un-registered vehicles, all non-resident students are reminded to apprise themselves of their particular state's requirements. Information and the necessary registration forms may be obtained at the University Police Dept.

Egypt Expresses Hope At Sec. Roger's Visit

Egyptian officials expressed hope yesteeday that Sec

Egyptian officials expressed hope yesterday that Secretary of State William P. Rogers will bring a clear-cut view on how to solve the Arab-Israeli conflict when he visits Cairo next month.

"We have made our position clear and have nothing more to add," an authoritative source said in Cairo. "It would indeed be a waste of time if Mr. Rogers is coming to the area only to sound out our views."

The Egyptian foreign minister said Saturday any arrangement to reopen the Suez Canal must be "inseparable from an over-all peaceful settlement." Egypt insists an Israeli withdrawal from the canal area must be followed by a total pullback from all territory occupied after the war of 1967.

"That's our position and we will not give it up," one official declared. "We are not ready to accept any vague arrangements or promises that cannot be fullfilled. We had enough of that."

The official Middle East News Agency said Rogers on his arrival Tuesday, May 4, will meet with Prime Minister Mahmoud Fawzy and Foreign Minister Mahmoud Riad. It made no mention of a meeting with President Anwar Sadat. But a meeting could be arranged later, since Rogers will stay until Thursday.

Rogers' visit to Cairo is the first of a U.S. secretary of state since 1953, when the late John Foster Dulles went to Egypt. It is also believed the first official visit by a secretary of state to a nation that has no diplomatic relations with the United States. Egypt broke off relations in the 1967 war.

The Israeli press reacted tepidly to Rogers' plans to visit Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon, Saudi Arabia and Israel.

Most newspapers agreed with Rogers' contention that no dramatic breakthroughs should be expected in Mideast peace efforts.

"Diplomats' voyages nowadays have no particular influence, being useful only for study and demonstration purposes," said the semi-official Davar.

However, Rogers' readiness to work for stilling the Mideast conflict and reopening the Suez Canal "is further proof of America's inclination to give top priority, in the Mideast policy, to ensuring peace in the region," Davar added.

Some Arab countries did not appear to welcome Rogers' visit. Egypt's ally Libya predicted the visit would be a failure because "Israel is continuing its aggression and the United States is encouraging it," as Vice Premier Abdel Sallam Jaloud put it.

In Beirut, capital of Lebanon, some anti-American demonstrations are expected to greet Rogers. Similar demonstrations also are expected in Amman, Jordan's capital, by Palestinians and other extremist elements.

Yorty May MakeBid For Presidency

NEW YORK (AP)—Democratic Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles says he's thinking of running for president and will "test the waters" in New Hampshire this week.

"We want to see how the people feel," the mayor said.

He stopped over here during the weekend enroute to New Hampshire where he will take political soundings on his chances in that state's Democratic presidential primary next March. It will be the first primary in the nation unless Florida sets one earlier.

Most of the Democratic candidates," said Yorty, "are pulling the party too far to the left. I take a moderate position."

Yorty said he could not support any of the politicians now considered possible Democratic contenders.

"I think it is wrong to try to cause the president to fail," he said. "Many Democrats are harassing and trying to sabotage the president. That's what Muskie and McGovern are doing."

Sen. Edmund Muskie of Maine and Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota are both Democratic contenders, although only McGovern has announced his candidacy.

Yorty said he was invited to New Hampshire by party leaders and businessmen and that he had been assured of support by the Manchester Union Leader.

The Los Angeles mayor said it was a mistake for Muskie and McGovern to try to make issues of the FBI and the war.

"It will turn out that they aren't issues at all," he said. The main thrust of his own campaign, he said, would be the economy and defense. "We have to plan. We have to figure that Russia will attack us," he said.

Yorty said he regretted the recent defeat in Congress of funds for the supersonic transport plane, and blamed Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D—Wash., for a lack of leadership in that regard.

Leaders Meet, Held "Frank" Discussions

WOODSTOCK, Vt. (AP)—One hundred international business, government and education leaders ended a three-day meeting yesterday after a "free and frank discussion" of world problems.

A spokesman said, "In accordance with tradition, no resolution was passed and no report on the discussion is being issued."

"The purpose of the meeting is to promote understanding of the problems facing democracies on both sides of the Atlantic and consequently the participants came from all walks of life, irrespective of their political leanings," the spokesman said.

Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, who organized the annual meetings 17 years ago, attended but returned home Saturday because his mother was ill.

Under discussion at this year's meeting, the third held in the U.S., was "the contribution of business in dealing with current problems of social instability and the possibility of a change of the American role in the world and its consequences."

UMass Profs Join Recreation Meet

Dr. Wm. Randall and Dr. Jeanne Sherrow of the UMass Recreation Department are attending a national workshop to discuss the relevance of recreation and park curricula in preparing students to meet the social crises of the 1970's.

The workshop, being held at the University of Illinois, is sponsored by the Society of Park and Recreation Educators, a branch of the National Recreation and Park Association.

The workshop has attracted recreation and park educators throughout the United States and Canada. It has focused upon the role of recreation in meeting the crises of racial relations, urban living, environment pollution, and youth values.

Willard Brown, President of the National Recreation and Park Association, and Joseph Curtis, Commissioner of Recreation and Parks, Boston, gave the keynote addresses.

STONED IN SAIGON-Two self-proclaimed "heads," GI's Ed Norris, rear, and Bob Dickey, circulated a petition in their unit supporting President Nixon's invasions of Cambodia and Laos and his Vietnamization program. They intend it as a reaction against GI's who urged participation in Saturday's anti-war rally in Washington. They both also freely admit they smoke marijuana. (AP photo)

Participants attended the meeting in their personal capacity, not as official representatives of their countries," the spokesman said.

Among those attending the meeting were Quebec Prime Minister Robert Bourassa of Canada; Prince Claus and Princess Beatrix of the Netherlands, Bill Moyers, former press secretary to President Lyndon B. Johnson and former publisher of "Newsday"; Presidential Assistant Henry A. Kissinger and Sen. Adlai Stevenson III of Inninois.

Priest Speaks In C.C. On Vietnam, Right To Live

By CYNTHIA SWINDWELL
MDC Staff

"The role of the Church is to relate to the severe issues of the times. I examined the Vietnamese War and the peace movement and decided to contribute as an individual" said Father Neil McLaughlin in his speech sponsored by the Amherst Clergy and Laymen Concerned About Vietnam, the University of Massachusetts United Christian Foundation, and the University of Massachusetts Newman Club in the C.C. Auditorium Thursday Night.

Father McLaughlin, who is assigned to a poor west Baltimore Parish related the events leading to his arrest with the Harrisburg Six and defined his individual role in the trial and the meaning of the indictment.

"I am not a revolutionary," stated Father McLaughlin "I only wanted to be a simple priest and I to be of service to the people."

Father McLaughlin cited an act of the Vatican Council, which stated that any act of war aimed indiscriminantly is a crime against God. He noted that the Church has ignored this act in their view of the Vietnamese war, and that the South Vietnamese Bishops have asked aid from American Bishops but have thus far received no such aid.

"I have spoken to chaplains" stated McLaughlin "who say that there is no answer to a soldier who is guilty about his actions in the war and that these problems are ignored by the chaplains."

He stated the involvement in South Vietname is playing with the existence of the Vietnamese people. He felt that genocide warfare is a severe question, since right now in Vietnam, children are being born, severely deformed. He further explained that although troops are being removed, they are substituted by anti-personal weapons. These weapons seek out and locate moving object, assumed to be the enemy, but may indeed be civilian.

He stated the arrest of the Harrisburg Six stifles the freedom of speech and that when the FBI wiretaps private citizens and subsequently arrests them for their beliefs, free expression is endangered. Not only does this concern the Harrisburg Six, but is also an implication for all citizens.

"Through out history citizens have discussed the injustices of those in power, violent and non-violent means have been discussed and this is a part of the tradition of free speech."

Viewers Vote Against Calley Clemency

BOSTON AP– The Advocates, a public affairs program of the Public Broadcasting System, reported yesterday that viewers responding to a program on Lt. William F. Calley voted overwhelming against granting him clemency.

A spokesman said the program received 9,978 letters in response to an April 13 telecast on which several aspects of the Calley case were argued.

He said 84 per cent of the letters opposed clemency to Calley.

Yorty May Make Presidential Bid

NEW YORK (AP)—Democratic Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles says he's thinking of running for president and will "test the waters in New Hampshire this week.

"We want to see how the people feel," the mayor said.

Most of the Democratic candidates," said Yorty, "are pulling the party too far to the left. I take a moderate position."

Yorty said he could not support any of the politicians now considered possible Democratic contenders.

Right-Wing Panda Goes Celibate

LONDON (AP) - Modest Chi-Chi, the panda who refused to marry a "Communist," has become a lady hermit.

In the embittered middle years of her spinsterhood, Chi-Chi waddles more often into the depths of her pen to brood.

Even the donkey next door, with whom Chi-Chi worked up a noserubbing romance last year, couldn't stem the mood to brood. And, of course, An-An, the Russian boy panda to whom Chi-Chi was twice betrothed, long since has stepped back into his lonely life at the Moscow zoo.

The onset of maidenly shyness in Chi-Chi got downright critical in 1970, the Zoological Society of London admitted Sunday in its annual report. Tourists were screaming. They wanted to see Chi-Chi even if she didn't want to see them.

So, the society delicately invaded the lady hermit's privacy and installed a picture window in Chi-Chi's den.

Chi-Chi doesn't know it, but the trauma of rejection isn't bothering An-An. He shrugged off repeated rebuffs by Chi-Chi and returned to Moscow to normal life.

"He's eating and drinking and walking around," said Igor P. Sosnovsky, Moscow zoo director. "He never was very gay, but in general he's living a normal life."

A.S.A. Examined On Focus Tonight

Tonight at 10 P.M., WMUA's "Focus" program will examine the purposes and goals of the American Student Association (ASA), a newly-formed student organization on the UMass campus.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests for tonight's live forum will be two members of ASA, Harold Koltin and George Doucette. The concerns of the group, voiced recently in the Daily Collegian's editorial pages, have centered about several instances, according to ASA, where the UMass student body as a whole has been excluded from decisions involving large amounts of student funds. One such instance cited by ASA is the planning of a series of Spring concerts now scheduled for the month of May.

Tonight's "Focus" program is also expected to raise some editorial commentary on Saturday's massive anti-war demonstration in Washington, D.C. An early segment of the program will feature the taped speech of former Navy Lt. John Kerry of Vietnam Veterans Against the War, who addressed the many thousands of anti-war protesters assembled at the Capitol steps during Saturday afternoon's peace rally.

Some of the Veterans Wept.

WASHINGTON—"I don't care what happens to them", a police officer said. And so, the medals, swept up into a jumbled heap on the white stone steps of the Capitol, were raped by gawking tourists and robbed of dignified burial by souvenir grabbing Americans.

If the angle was right, one had to squint because of the glaring white sun reflecting off of the Stars of Silver and Bronze, the Service Crosses, and the Purple hearts.

Some of the veterans wept.

Senators Jacob Javits and Abraham Ribicoff were exchanging bitter and dramatic words over the elimination of de facto segregation in schools in the North. But the whispers of the tourists in the Senate Gallery were turned not to the floor, but to the khaki fatigues of the veterans as they walked in to observe their government.

"I wonder how many of them are really veterans", a pretty blond-haired woman stated to a man next to her.

A veteran supported by two aluminum crutches made his way to a seat.

The Longworth House Office Building has long, cavernous corridors. Jerry Cunningham has no legs and was being wheeled by a friend down the long hall. Jerry wanted to visit his Congressman.

Louise Day Hick's office said that she was in Viet Nam, but half a dozen pages and assistants saw her in Washington that day. She was not available for appointments.

A visitor was waiting for a friend in the Rayburn Building. Representative Hastings Keith emerged from his office.

"Are you a veteran" Did you want to see me"" he asked.

No, the visitor was not a veteran, but if Mr. Keith would.

Hastings Keith is against an immediate withdrawal from Indo-China.

Congresswoman Bella Abzug said that because Viet Nam is a war that people want to forget, the Viet Nam veteran is the most forgotten veteran of any war.

Lieutenant William R. Kinsey of the U.S. Park Police told reporters:

"We are not going in there at one in the morning and pick up some wounded veteran and throw him into the street."

On the 19th of April, Chief Justice Warren Burger was sharply and intelligently questioning an attorney before the Supreme Court. Hugo Black, a little man, appeared to be sleeping. William Douglas left the bench about five minutes before the Court adjourned for lunch.

Late in the day on the 20th, Mr. Burger upheld a Justice Department request to prevent the veterans from camping out on the Capitol Mall.

But the veterans said that they had slept in enough mud for the Country, and Lieutenant Kinsey agreed. The veterans remained, five hundred yards from Congress.

On Saturday, the rest of us marched. They'll say that we were the generation that didn't know what to do, so we were the generation that marched.

The march was frustrating, as usual. But unlike our other marches, we emerged from this one with a horror and an anger that will not abate.

Ronald Ferrizzi, 22 and unemployed, threw a fistful of medals onto the steps of the Capitol.

"This is for Specialist 4th Class Bob Smeel ...and for Sergeant Johns and for Lieutenant Panmarough, who were killed in behalf of their country."

Equal Dignity

"That's Just The Rate Of Climb Of The Plane — The Top Secret Is Over Here"

WASHINGTON—One of the major political issues in the 1972 political campaign is going to be welfare. The American worker is furious at those who collect money for doing nothing. Gov. Ronald Reagan was the first to sense welfare as the nation's No. 1 "gut" issue, and now President Nixon has decided to run with it.

In a speech last week, to Republican governors, the President discussed the welfare picture and mentioned that one of the things wrong with welfare is that people would rather take money from the government than work at what they considered "menial" jobs.

The President told his audience, "Scrubbing floors or emptying bedpans--my mother used to do that--is not enjoyable work, but a lot of people do it, and there is as much dignity in that as there is in any other work to be done in this country--including my own."

My friend Sid Liebes, who works out at Stanford as a physicist, has been giving a lot of thought to the problem of menial work and how we can get people who are on welfare to take it.

He said, "What President Nixon says about menial jobs having as much dignity as his work is just not so. Have you ever seen a band play 'Hail to the Chief' when someone empties a bedpan?"

"Not since I've been in Washington," I admitted.

"To solve the problem of getting people willing to go off welfare to take menial work such as cleaning, scrubbing and washing dirty dishes, you have to understand something about the nature of work. It is a scientific fact that the higher people are in an organization the happier they are in what they're doing.

"The secretary is happier than the cleaning woman, the sales manager is happier than the secretary, the vice president is happier than the sales manager, and the president and chairman of the board are presumably happier at their work than anybody else."

Liebes continued, "There are exceptions, but as a rule this holds true. Most successful people say they wouldn't want to do anything else. The lower down on the ladder the more complaining you hear, until you get to the stockroom, where the turnover is frightening.

"The one thing we all know is that people have to feel they're doing something important or they just won't work."

"What do you propose?"

"The Liebes Plan," he said. "I suggest that we reverse the salary scales to that the people who are doing the most menial work get the highest pay.

"For example, the cleaning woman would start at $75,000 a year; her immediate superior, the floor waxer, would get $60,000 a year; a secretary would get $50,000 a year and so on, all the way up the line until you reached the president of the company, who would get $3,500 a year. The worst jobs in this country would pay the most.

"Since the people on top are happy in what they're doing, they don't need large sums of money to persuade them they're contributing to society."

"But wait a minute, Liebes," I said. "If the people on top only make $3,500 a year, they might quit and go on welfare."

"Never," Liebes said. "Only the people in the upper classes still consider it a disgrace to go eat at the government trough."

"There should be a hole in your plan," I said. "But I can't see one."

"It's foolproof," he replied. "Once you make menial jobs the highest paying ones, you solve your welfare problem overnight. Show me a street cleaner making $50,000 a year and I'll show you someone with as much dignity as the President of the United States."

Letters To The Editor

A Long Time For Peace

To the Editor:

The latest round of letters, in a seemingly endless debate, started again in the Collegian. The conflict between "interest groups" (not political groups) is numbing, but the fostering of misguided misinformation is irritating:

The democratic system of American government has rarely responded to its people's needs, until they've gone into the streets to publicly embarass the government into action. Cases in point: veterans' benefits (Cox's Army), Women's right to vote, labor unions, civil rights, and anti-war movements. Demonstrations are the only viable, powerful means to initiate change, to be heard for the noneconomic, nonpolitical interest groups of the American people. Oh yes.....there's voting, but don't forget we voted two presidents to office who promised peace, and it still hasn't come. To start change and action, to move bureaucracy and congress, demonstrations must be employed.

It's true that 200,000 men have been withdrawn from S.E. Asia and, as a pawn in politics, the rest may be out by '72 (Wouldn't it be grand if the elections were in 1971). This seems to indicate a "winding down" of the war...Not for the 6 million Vietnamese refugees, the 1 million Cambodian refugees; not for the 1 million Vietnamese soon to be "relocated" from S. Vietnam's five northern provinces. Our air power and bombings are not being wound down, either. And, for the 300,000 American combat troops left in that napalmed rice paddy, the war is still too long. Since Nixon, 20,000 more men have died and by the time he gets the victory he wants, thousands more Americans, as well as Vietnamese, are condemned to die. We're not chasing the ebb tide; we're making the wave...

As for members of the anti-war movement, we're all aware of who and why we are, concerning our stand against the war. It's maddening to have someone intimate our stupidity, to state that we're being duped by perpetrators of a revolutionary conspiracy. The members of the movement have fought too long against lies and propoganda to be duped into believing ideologies, fighting revolutions, forming conspiracies we don't understand or with which we don't agree. And, if we don't agree on ideologies, we can find agreement on one issue, the Vietnam war must end now. Claire didn't invent that issue which is real and generally supported; the nature of the S.E. Asian war created it.

I can also say with some patriotic hope: "My country right or wrong. When right, to be kept right; when wrong, to get right." That is not the rhetoric of a conspiracy, but a tenet of democracy--and, anyone who would deny that tenet is the conspirator and enemy of this country...not YSA or Claire of the makers of the wave of reform and conscience. Our country is wrong about Vietnam, and it won't get right by our waiting for Nixon or 1972 or 1984 or for the socialists and revolutionaries to leave the movement. What is to be done, must be done now and immediately.

Hot Ticket

To the Editor:

We ran as a ticket for the Student Senate for one purpose only: to get the Student Senate and this university to support what is going to happen in Washington D.C. May 1 through 5 and the nation-wide strike that may result therefrom. We advertised this position as best we could around the Student Union. The fact that one of us could win and that a large portion of the votes were for Balboni and Mulligan (the other winner) is baffling. We asked people to vote for our position, not for us. The other winner in the election is not in support of our position and this makes the election of he and one of us absurd and meaningless. We advise that people know the politics of the people for whom they vote.

More Talk

To the Editor:

Victor J. Burke has written (Letter to the Editor April 22) that Robert Corry is an inveterate mudslinger akin to that animal which habituates mud holes. Mr. Burke's evidence for this insult is Robert Corry's remarks in the Collegian concerning a certain "curvy Trotskyite feminist," and the recent Children's March on Washington.

Yet it seems that Mr. Burke does not want for ability to sling mud at his opponents either. Aside from his crude allusion to Mr. Corry as one like the animal "most at home with mud," there was this crass remark: "Since Mr. Corry makes no secret of his feeling (sic) about Trotskyites and feminists, one can only infer from the context of his letter that he is equally abhorrant (sic) of the female body." Not even a magician could draw that type of an inference from Robert Corry's considered remarks. The only reference he makes to the female body is that Miss Moriarty is "curvy," which is hardly a statement of abhorrence. It seems the tag "mud-slinging" is just another, like that of "red-baiting," which YSA people and their devotees enjoy slinging.

And there are other unsupported statements that Mr. Burke carelessly tossed about. Robert Corry made reference to the many causes and crusades Miss Moriarty is involved with; everything from lettuce-pickers to gay liberationists. Mr. Corry obviously was suggesting that "curvy" Claire was more the "do-gooder" than the "good doer" and interested in all these causes as a Trotskyite organizer only. Nowhere does he say, however, that he considers any of these causes "un-American." Yet this is what Mr. Burke tried desparately to read between the lines and what he tried to pass off on this paper's readers as fact.

Then to refute Robert Corry's statement that the "entire demonstration scenario suddenly begins to look like 'chasing an ebb tide out to sea'" because all troops will be out of Vietnam come the '72 elections, Mr. Burke tries to amaze us with the meaningless statistic that "well over 200 students" purchased bus tickets to Washington for the demonstration. This is meaningless because he did not give us the numbers who purchased tickets last year for a similar demonstration. Nor did he tell us what, if any, funding these demonstrators' vehicles owe to the MOBE. All we know is that last year the students defeated on referendum the Student Senate's attempt to fund part of the cost for transporation, and that this year the sticky question of student approval may have been avoided by funding MOBE directly.

The one part of Mr. Corry's letter which Victor Burke did not touch upon, however, was the former's telling argument that the "interchangeable flunkies" (Finehursh and his heir apparent Moriarty) of the Trotskyite YSA and the MOBE are less than honest when they proclaim they wish to simply see the war end. For if popular opinion could convince the government that this should be done, and it seems certain that this has happened, it would prove, once again, that the system works. And this is the last thing our friends seated behind so many tables outside the Hatch desire us to discover.

Frank M. Baglione

One Last Mission

...We wish that a merciful God could wipe away our own memories of that service as easily as this Administration has wiped their memories of us. But all that they have done, and all that they can do by this denial is to make more clear than ever our own determination to undertake one last mission, to search out and destroy the last vestige of this barbaric war, to pacify our own hearts, to conquer the hate and the fear that have driven this country these last 10 years and more, and so when in 30 years from now our brothers go down the street without a leg, without an arm, or a face, and small boys ask why, we will be able to say 'Viet Nam' and not mean a desert, not a filthy obscene memory, but mean instead the place where American finally turned and where soldiers like us helped it in the turning.

Editorial Points

It must be easy to get the feeling that no one is listening when the highest government officials seen at the Washington demonstration was Senator Vance Hartke.

Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird has already stated that he will not serve another four years in his present position. He feels that four years in the job is long enough. Maybe Nixon feels the same way.

According to the Phoenix, Northeastern University has decided that its graduating seniors don't want a commencement speaker. It seems that the senior's list of recommended speakers included William Kunstler, Charles Garry, George McGovern, Ralph Nader and Julian Bond. According to NU President Asa Knowles, "To have one of those recommended speak would cost us the public image."

It's getting so that you can tell a person's political beliefs just by asking him to estimate the number of people at a peace rally.

There were a lot of new faces at Saturday's march including many hard hats and union members. Well, you know what they say about "strange bedfellows."

"Giles Goat Boy" Author Coming Thursday

John Barth, novelist and author of GILES GOAT BOY, LOST IN A FUNHOUSE, and THE SOT—WEED FACTOR, will speak this Thursday night in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8:30.

John Barth, one of the finest living American novelists, will speak this Thursday night as part of a multi-media happening "PERISH" in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8.

Barth was called by the New York Times as "the best writer of fiction we have at present and one of the best we have ever had."

In the fall of 1965, a poll of 200 prominent authors, critics, and editors placed John Barth among the best American novelists to emerge in the past twenty years. The New York Herald Tribune's Book Week, which reported the poll, noted that Barth's "profound vision of the world, evident in all his books, makes him one of our most promising writers of the novel of ideas."

In the interval since then, that promise has been resoundingly fulfilled. GILES GOAT—BOY, a demanding allegorical novel, which was greeted upon publication in 1966 with a chorus of praise, enjoyed an immediate sale of over 50,000 copies. Most recently, Mr. Barth has received accolades for LOST IN THE FUNHOUSE, the work which won for him nomination for the 1968 National Book Award in fiction.

John Barth, was only 26 years old when his first novel was published. Titled THE FLOATING OPERA, it was the runner-up for the 1956 National Book Award. His second novel, THE END OF THE ROAD, was published in 1958 to an enthusiastic press. THE SOT—WEED FACTOR, "a huge novel, rich in historic truth and bizarre historic invention, bristling with ideas and imagination, and structured by the most intricate clockwork plot since Tom Jones" (New York Times Book Review) appeared in 2960, as Barth turned 30.

Eating Out

August August

By DAVID WILLIAMS
MDC Staff

Your first reaction is one of surprise. You walk in the place and right away you expect to feel sand grinding under your shoes. But that doesn't happen and even after you've sat there and had your meal, you still wonder how did this place ever end up in downtown Northampton, of all places.

It isn't hard to guess, after you've been in the place for a while, that Jack August's in Northampton has somewhat of a local reputation as a good eating place that makes it so well-spoken of that its a must stop for the tourists on the way back east from the Mohawk Trail. Be that as it may, however, Jack August's is a terrific place to have a meal for any number of reasons.

Number 1 reason is that the food, all seafood; no meat or liquor, is just superb. Jack serves up just about any kind of fish you could imagine, from the traditional sword-fish down through some more exotic types like Rocky Mountain Brook trout and grilled perch. You can also savor the more run-of-the-mill menu items such as fried clams, shrimp, and lobster. Jack's menu isn't exactly the most varied thing in the world, but what he cooks, he cooks well.

Jack also has a very busy take-out counter that, in its own quiet way, may say something about the reputation the restaurant enjoys.

But the best part of Jack August's is the atmosphere. The building squats beside the railroad bridge in Northampton and looks very out of place to begin with. But, like I said, you walk in the front door and do a double take. It struck me as more of a Maine seacoast oriented place rather than a Cape Cod place. The walls are decorated with the lobster pots, harpoons, large lobster claws, pictures of Jack and his famous fishing buddies, mosel schooners and other sorts of memorabilia. There's something appealing and endearing about it, though. Jack August's has the same kind of flavor that Durgin Park and Jake Wurth's boast.

Jack August's is a busy place and there's usually a short wait involved with eating on weekends. Prices are moderate, a meal for two will run about ten dollars. Service is very friendly and prompt. Jack August's gets a four star rating from MDC gourmets.

Off-Broadway Success To Explore Urban Drug Abuse

by PAT SUPRENANT
MDC Staff

"Does The Tiger Wear A Necktie", a contemporary drama concerned with life in a drug rehabilitation center, will be presented May 5 to 8 at 8:30 P.M. in Bartlett Auditorium.

The play, directed by Jim Young, was an off-Broadway success a few seasons ago. It starred Hal Holbrook as an English teacher who attempts to help a group of urban teenagers having drug problems.

Recently the cast (now in rehearsal) spent a weekend touring the Odyssey House and Clinton Youth and Family Center to gain some background for the play. The trip was designed to give the members a better insight into people and problems which lead to the drug abuse situation.

In addition to teaching here at UMass, Mr. Young spends his summers employed working with inner-city youths of New York.

To acquaint themselves with the socio-economic environment of the drug addict, the members visited the East Village area, the Bowery, uptown Harlem and Spanish Harlem, and the west side of Manhattan.

While in N.Y. the members attended the performance of "King Harlem" by the Al Fann Theatrical Ensemble. The ensemble is composed of Harlem area people and is aimed at informing the people of the drug problem.

A return exchange program, sponsored partly by a grant from the Amherst Human Relations Council and money from the Clinton Youth and Family Center, is planned for a weekend previous to the May 5-8 showing of "Does a Tiger Wear a Necktie?"

The purpose of the exchange is to have the young people from Clinton react to the reality or unreality of the play", said Tim McDonough, cast member.

The play will also be shown to a jail in Springfield and the Riverdale Community Center.

Tickets are priced at $1.75 and are available at the Bartlett Theater Box Office, Bartlett Auditorium. For further information call the office at 545-3579.

Undefeated Golfers Stop URI; Prepare For YC Championship

By ALAN K. WRIGHT
MDC Staff

The Redman linksters are quickly proving that they are the finest spring sports team that the UMass is fielding this year. They definitely are the best golf squad that has ever been assembled by Coach Richard Page. This fact was made paramount last Friday afternoon when his charges beat previously undefeated Rhode Island, 5 1/2 to 1 1/2. This is the first time that UMass has been able to beat URI in several years.

Five UMass golfers were able to break 80 in this important Yankee Conference match despite the gusty winds at Hickory Ridge Country Club in South Amherst which have been hindering play all season long. Senior Don Langevin was team medalist with a 76. Captain Ed Puzas, Oklahoma transfer Art Cicconi, and Junior Rick Towle all carded scores of 78. However, the hero of the day had to be Mike Minkos, a senior electrical engineering major who posted a 79 for 18 holes, but had to continue for three extra holes to beat his Rhode Island opponent. They had been all even after their regular round of play.

On Thursday, April 22, only the day before the victory over Rhode Island, UMass captured two impressive matches in a tri-meet with Holy Cross and Boston College. The scores that afternoon were 6-1 and 5 1/2-1 1/2 respectively.

Towle received medalist honors by shooting a 76 while steady Puzas, Minkos and Dick King had 77's.

The only Redman golfer who was really off his game that day was Cicconi, who lost to both his adversaries. This was especially surprising since he had had a really hot round with a 75 earlier in the week against New Hampshire.

The golf team is in reallly good shape now with Three Yankee Conference wins behind them. (Against Vermont in the season opener, New Hampshire on April 19 and of course Rhode Island last Friday.) The important thing to remember about these matches, as well as the superb performance versus BC and Holy Cross is that they have all been played at home on the familiar turf of Hickory Ridge where the fairways have been responding well. UMass now has to prove itself on the road where they will be swinging for most of the rest of the season.

Page's "pros" were originally scheduled to play at Springfield today against Wesleyan and Springfield Colleges. That encounter has been postponed until later in the season. The next opponents will be A.I.C. and UConn, who should prove to be formidable foes. These matches will be played tomorrow at 1:00 away.

The crowded varsity schedule then pits UMass against Yale and Williams on Wednesday at Yale. The team will then get only one day's rest before they have to head for Pleasant Valley Country Club in Sutton. This is one of the toughest courses in Massachusetts and will be the site of this year's Yankee Conference Championships on April 30.

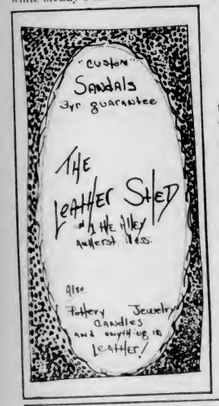
Bosox Top Chicago



BOSTON (AP)—Rookie Don Eddy walked Carl Yastrzemski with the bases loaded in the eighth inning yesterday, giving the Boston Red Sox a 5-4 victory over the Chicago White Sox that stretched their winning string to five games.

Eddy, the fifth of six Chicago pitchers, got two outs in the eighth before walking pinch hitter Phil Gagliano. Luis Aparicio followed with a single and Reggie Smith beat out an infield hit, filling the bases.

Yastrzemski, who had homered earlier to help the Red Sox build a 4-0 lead, then walked on a 3-2 pitch, forcing home the tie-breaking run.

Mike Andrews, the former Boston second baseman, lifted the White Sox into a 4-4 deadlock in the seventh with a two run homer off Gary Peters. Peters also was tagged for a two-run homer by Tom Egan in the fifth.

Bucks Rout Bullets To Take 2-0 Lead

BALTIMORE (AP) - The Milwaukee Bucks made 14 of 20 shots in the third quarter and crushed the Baltimore Bullets 102-83 yesterday to take a 2-0 lead in the National Basketball Association championships finals.

Lew Alcindor scored 10 of his 27 points in the payoff third period as the Bucks outscored Baltimore during a 5 1/2 minute span early in the quarter.

Alcindor scored eight points during the string while continuing to control the boards for the Western Conference champions in the nationally televised game.

Oscar Robertson had 22 points for Milwaukee and handed off 10 assists, in addition to picking off six rebounds. Alcindor had 24 rebounds and hit 13 of 22 shots from the floor.

The Bullets made a game of it for the first half, which ended with Milwaukee on top 49-45, although the Bucks hit 50 per cent of their field goal tries in the first two periods.

But the Bullets, who were aided by 13 Milwaukee turnovers in the first half, fell apart after intermission with only Jack Marin able to hit consistently. Marin finished with 22 points, 16 in the second half.

While the Bucks were shooting 70 per cent in the third quarter, the Bullets could hit only 7 of 22 for 32 per cent.

Earl Monroe, Baltimore's normally high scoring guard, made only four of 18 shots from the field and finished with 11 points. Baltimore center Wes Unseld had 13 points and 20 rebounds while battling the 7-foot-2 Alcindor.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Taurus is attracted to Virgo, often marries Scorpio, is good financially for Aries, should exercise caution in dealing with Leo and Aquarius. Many famous boxers were born under Taurus, a sign often identified by a thick nec, well developed shoulders. Taurus also is sensuous, determined and appreciates the good life, more so than does the average individual. Taurus helps add spice to life; not everyone loves Taurus, but very few would want a world without members of this fascinating zodiacal sign.

ARIES (March 21 April 19): Problem of a relative may involve you. Portion your time. Be practical. Aid those willing to help themselves. Refuse to be drawn into vortex of confusion. Sense of humor is great ally now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accent on money, personal possessions. Make necessary changes. Don't be put off by associate who is ultra timid. You will have opportunity to add to income. Be flexible.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your ego gets boost from family member. Emphasis on personality, appearance. Gift is in picture; you receive token of affection. Cycle is high; take initiative.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Much that occurs is hidden, behind the scenese. Emphasis is on how you handle confidential matters. Show that you are capable of keeping a secret. Pisces individual figures prominently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Routine changes. Friend introduces you to new food, experience. Be receptive. You can make important contact. Key is to talk about what you know. Avoid senseless speculation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Professional gains indicated. You receive wider recognition. Avoid one who attempts to use you. Get credit that is due. Refuse to become victim of sob story.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Creative resources come into play. You could get surprise acceptance of special, written material. Your prestige rises. What appeared a setback boomerangs in your favor.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You could become involved in mystery. A missing object turns up in surprising place. You question and are questioned. Rise above petty accusations. Adhere to principles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be versatile, flexible. Circumstances tend to dictate your actions. Important to have alternatives at hand. You are aided by another Sagittarian. Leave details to others.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You may feel somewhat restricted. Ride with tide. Don't try to force issues. Complete basic chores. Check essentials. Keep medical, dental appointments. Avoid excess.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Pride is regained. You rid yourself of burden. Concepts are broadened. Outmoded methods, ideas are discarded. Creativity surges to forefront. Utilize natural, inventive qualities.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Home conditions dominate. Include family members in special activity, entertainment. You need cooperation of loved ones. Improve property. Pin down arrangement which provides security.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY what was started approximately two years ago now begins to mature. To bear fruit. By next month, you will be seeing profits instead of losses in emotional as well as economical areas. You are a hard driving individual. Many are offended by your frankness. But more persons find this quality appealing and they appreciate your basic integrity.

Frosh Lead Redmen Over UNH

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

With the freshmen members of the team leading the way, the UMass baseball team defeated the University of New Hampshire, 10-6, Saturday in a game preceded by the official dedication of Earl E. Lorden Field. The Redmen lifted their record to 10-4 with the win, while the Wildcats' slate stands at 4-2.

Charley Manley, Ed McMahon, and Tom McDermott combined for nine of the Redmen's 16 hits and freshman hurler John Olsen struck out nine out of 10 possible Wildcats in 3 1/3 innings of shutout relief.

UMass broke into a 1-0 lead in the first inning. After Manley singled for the first of his four hits of the afternoon and was thrown out at second, Jack Conroy doubled on a wind-blown fly off the left-field fence and was singled home by Brian Martin.

The home team added two more runs in the second frame when McDermott doubled in McMahon who had singled, and Manley drove McDermott in with his second straight hit. A two-base throwing error, a bunt single by Manley, and a walk was followed by a Mark Palau double driving in one run and a two-run single by Jim Kiley as the Redmen increased their lead to 7-0, and the game appeared to be well in hand.

However, starter Tom King, who had breezed through the first four innings, ran into trouble in the fifth and was touched for a three-run homer by UNH centerfielder Pete Dresser. The left-handed batter tied into a King serving and drove it over the 375-foot mark in right-center. King survived the fifth, but in the top of the sixth, wildness, a costly error by first baseman Palau on a wind-blown pop-up, and a double by Jeff Trundy accounted for three runs and brought the visitors to within a run, 7-6. Coach Dick Berquist lifted King at this point and brought in Olsen. The tall right-hander fanned Tim Hanaggan to end the uprising with two on and two out.

UMass increased the lead to 8-6 in the bottom of the sixth when Brian Martin tripled home Palau who had drawn a base on balls.

The final two Redman runs scored in the seventh inning on a fluke two-run single by Conroy. The left fielder, who had two hits and a great diving catch for the day, hit a hard grounder with two men on that headed up the middle. UNH pitcher Dennis Keusel stuck out his glove and deflected the hot shot into right field, allowing both runners to score.

While the Redmen were increasing their lead, Olsen, although wild at times, was having very little trouble disposing of the Wildcat batters. His strikeout pitch was working to near perfection as he fanned Hanagan to end the sixth, struck out the side in the seventh, had two K's in the eighth, and fanned the side in the final frame. He yielded only a scratch hit by Corky Newcomb in his relief stint while preserving the victory for starter King.

REDMAN RANTINGS: Bergquist mentioned after the game that it was a good one for his team to win because "we were not particularly sharp today." He was disappointed that King faltered and was not able to hold on to the big lead. Bergquist also felt that Olsen needed more work on his breaking stuff, although the Wildcat hitters probably think the stylish frosh has the best stuff in New England the way he mowed them down...

UMASS HOST BOSTON UNIVERSITY-This afternoon the Redman nine returns to action hosting strong New England independent Boston University in a game starting at 3 p.m. at Earl E. Lorden Field. These two teams have had a strong rivalry including the big payoff series two years ago when the Redmen defeated the Terriors in the final of the three game series to earn the right to represent District One at Omaha and undoubtedly both teams will be at each other with victory being a must for each. B.U. has been playing good baseball to date and is one of the top teams in the Boston area, probably rating only behind strong eastern power Harvard. Bergquist will be starting either senior Jack Bernardo or freshman Chip Baye for this game and the line-up Bergquist will go with probably won't be known until game time.

Stickers Trounce Wesleyan

Nine different players scored goals as the UMass lacrosse team overpowered Wesleyan 15-2 on Saturday. In playing their first home game in two weeks, Garber's Gorillas demoralized the Cardinals with two quick goals in the opening period and kept pouring it on until Paul Wickman garnered the final Redmen tally at 12:24 of the fourth quarter.

The first period was all UMass, as Lou Marinacci flicked the ball by the Wesleyan goalie after just 33 seconds had elapsed. Three of the next four scores were fashioned by John Gannon, with Charlie Hardy faking masterfully behind the Welyan net and hitting the tri-captain all three times with perfect passes right in front for Redmen scores two, three, and five. The other U Mass goal came at 10:27 when attackman Paul Ritch swept a loose ball in underhand unassisted. The lone Wesleyan score of the period came at 3:29 to make the count at that time 2-1. The quarter ended with the Gorillas on top, 5-1.

U Mass had a slight edge in the action in the second period scoring the only two goals of the frame. The culmination of a fast break saw Ritch take a pass from John Nagle on the left of the net and shoot it home to up the Redmen lead to 6-1 at 14:07. Forty-two seconds later Nagle scored his first of the game from way outside, as his shot hit the right hand pipe and bounced in. Late in the period Redmen goalie Crawford remained the knee he hurt in the Harvard game, but after a short pause in the action, the letterman returned and ended the half with eleven saves.

The eighth-ranked New England team, Wesleyan failed to score in the third period too, as the UMass defense stopped the visitors cold while the offense was upping the lead to 10-1. Power play goals opened and closed the scoring in the period, with UMass tallying its first of the stanza at 11:09. Ritch from Marinacci, to make the score 8-1. Nagle scored his second goal of the game at 5:40, with the assist going to Hardy, and it was Redmen 9, Wesleyan 1. Upping their lead to nine goals while a Cardinal was off the field for slashing, Hardy netted the score that made it 10-1, with he and Ritch combining on a beautiful play to close out the period.

The Gorillas came out growling in the final quarter and built their lead to 11-1 at 1:47 after killing off an early penalty. Kevin Bush caught a pass by Wickman and rifled it home for his first goal of the season. At this point, Coach Garber took goalie Crawford out of the game and replaced him with junior Ron DuMont, who came up with several fine saves in the period.

Wesleyan finally broke their scoring drought at 2:42 of the last stanza on an unassisted goal by Mark Fredland. 11-2 wasn't good enough for the Redmen though, and Tom Brennan added one to the stickmen's total with the assist going to Ritch at 9:49. The last five minutes saw UMass score three more times, as Dana Stone and Marinacci each took passes from Steve Hershcopt at 10:56 and 11:17, respectively, to boost the Redmen lead to 14-2. Wickman's goal with less than three minutes to play closed the coffin on the Cardinals, and Garber's Gorillas had a 15-2 victory.

LACROSSE LOWDOWN: All told, UMass had 44 shots on the Wesleyan goal, and had not the Cardinal netminder come up with several brilliant stops, the officials probably would have had to call off the fourth period.

Coach Garber said after the game that he had been concerned about the team being down after their loss to Harvard, and that practice on Tuesday and Thursday looked like a morgue.

"We knew we needed to get a good jump and score the first few goals, and I think that psyched Wesleyan out," said the Gorillas' leader.

This week the Redmen have matches on Tuesday and Thursday against two of the better teams on their schedule, Adelphi and Farleigh Dickinson.

Netmen Beaten

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

Only a week before the Yankee Conference Championships, the UMass tennis team got a hint at what they will be up against as they were knocked off by Rhode Island 6-3 last Friday. Yesterday in the cold, beneath the clouds in Worcester, Mass, the netmen came back strongly against Holy Cross. The score again was 6-3.

Yesterday's match saw John Bloom continue his excellent play in garnering UMass their first point of the afternoon. The 6-2, 6-0 victory by the Redmen's number three man was quickly followed by two Holy Cross wins.

The Crusaders were facing a Redmen squad that was playing without the services of their number one man in Alan Goldberg. Bob Webman took over Goldberg's spot, but came out on the short side of a 6-1, 6-4 score. Mark Brass went similar ways, as a 6-2, 6-2 match later. Holy Cross had the lead.

Then Steve Ferber, who was returning to action after a leg injury had sidelined him on Friday, evened the match downing his man 6-4, 6-2 in the four singles position.

Fred Braley and Jim Bornheim both put it together, and in 6-1, 6-2 and 6-2, 6-3 fashion, UMass had a four to two lead going into the doubles.

It was Bloom and Coffin that turned the trick as they continued their undefeated play at second doubles, winning 7-5, 6-1. UMass' fifth point was added to when Braley and Ferber captured third doubles 8-6, 6-3 to finish out the windy afternoon's activities.

After the Redmen-Crusader match UMass stood at 5-2 overall, as one of those losses was handed to them Friday afternoon down in Rhode Island. In playing their first match against a Yankee Conference team, UMass looked lacking, and left much to be desired in the way of fourth and sixth singles.

The defending Yankee Conference Champs, in extending their unbeaten streak to 21 matches, won four of the singles matches as UMass' Mark Brass set the tone for the day at fourth singles. Jim Bornheim, at sixth singles dropped a 6-2, 6-4 decision, as the Redmen's only reprive were victories at third and fifth singles.

Bloom and Braley were the bright spots as Bloom continued his great success and Braley kept the match alive as the doubles began.

In the doubles, only Bloom and Coffin came away victorious and dropping first and third doubles spelled defeat for the Redmen. Coach Kosakowski felt that his team never should have lost the contest, as he commented, "I can't even call the match disappointing, it was too disgusting."

URI has far from the personnel that captured the conference title last year, and the Redmen think that Friday's match was little indication as to how things will turn out come this weekend.

U Conn and New Hampshire are on this week's agenda for the netmen, and these two matches will mean a great deal as to who will receive the seeded positions in this weekend's championships in Maine. However they turn out, UMass is looking for a conference title.

With a surprise or two, and more consistent play all the way down the line, the Redmen just might take it.

Trackmen Set UM Record

BY ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

Performing against the toughest competition in the East, the UMass sprinters led the Redman tracksters to two fifth place finishes and a new school record at the prestigious Penn Relays over the weekend.

Walter Mayo, Tony Pendleton, Ron Harris and Stokes Hall combined efforts in the 440 yard relay and despite a pulled hamstring muscle by Hall qualified on Friday for Saturday's final.

In the final Gerry Spellman subbed for Hall and the four speedsters placed fifth in the College division behind Johnson C. Smith, Wayne State, Virginia State, and Penn State.

In all races there were two divisions with the top qualifiers running their final in the championship division and the next group running their final in the College division.

Of the 71 schools entered in the 440 yard relay the Redmen placed thirteenth overall which says something for their Saturday effort.

Dennis Busa subbed for Hall in the 880 yard relay and along with Mayo, Pendleton and Harris placed fifth in the College division and ninth overall out of 61 schools and this was after 45 minutes rest between relays. Again this is an excellent effort in this type of competition.

Harris, Spellman, Gene Costello and Dave Evans churned out a school record in the sprint medley with Evans' strong 880 anchor leg featuring this teams effort.

The opening leg almost met with disaster as Costello was involved in a pileup on the first turn which called for the restart of the race.

Still suffering from his mishap the freshman quarter miler got off to a slow start and by the anchor leg UMass was in seventh place. Evans took the baton and moved up well on the field and finished fourth with a new school record.

Tomorrow the tracksters return to action as a team against always powerful U Conn in probably the biggest track rivalry in New England.

The Huskies have a long unbeaten streak going in dual meets. This meet will be at home for the Redmen and a duplication of their performance against Northeastern in the inaugural meet will pose many problems for the men from U Conn.

QUICK PASS-Walter Mayo (left) passes off to Tony Pendleton for the second leg of the 440 yard relay in which the Redman speedsters placed fifth in the College Division and thirteenth overall in the 71 team field at the Penn Relays. These two sprinters came back to run two legs on the 880 yard relay team which placed ninth overall out of 61 schools to complete a fine day for both trackmen. (MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

Ali Charms Packed Cage

By EARLE BARROLL

Former heavyweight champion and Muslim minister, Muhammad Ali, told a packed Curry Hicks Cage last night "the first knowledge that we must achieve is of our purpose of life" in a lecture spiced with the emotional impact and respect that has followed the ex-champ on his nation-wide tour of College Campuses.

Sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, the lecture focused on an aspect of life that Ali said every person sooner or later asks himself, that being his purpose in life.

He called the purpose in life "the greatest discovery in life and until one finds his purpose in life he is dissatisfied."

"The very secret in life is desire and a goal that one seeks can be small comparison to the power he developes in the process of his determination," Ali continued.

"One is dissatisfied if he doesn't know his true purpose in life and unless this is accomplished he will not be satisfied. EVERYTHING HAS A PURPOSE.

"Knowing a purpose enables one to achieve their purpose and if he doesn't know it he is ignorant of life and becomes a machine of life," Ali drove home in the manner only he knows how to convey.

In seeking this goal he said that weakness comes from lack of endurance and patience and one will take what comes at the moment and will not wait for the next day.

He directly addressed the group saying "Only one out of the one-thousand of you seated out there has a purpose. The rest of you are placed in a job and are discontented."

"You are so absorbed in your college work that you have no time to think about the purpose in life and many of the youth are wasted in this manner."

"Many confuse happiness with pleasure. This is an ellusion. Pleasure is only a shadow of happiness and rarely can we find a

"How many of you can say that you are happy? Maybe one out of every ten," Ali went on showing that the only way that someone can be happy is when he has found his purpose in life.

He continued, "Deep within all man is the yearning for happiness, but the only man who is happy is one that has found the knowledge of his purpose of his life."

"Man is interested in one thing but moves on to something else. He don't know how to go after his purpose in life because he doesn't know what it is."

Life is short he went on to point out. "Those of you who are twenty years old have only lived for maybe a couple of years. If you subtract sleeping time, school time, traveling time, television time and other time consumers then you have only lived for about two years."

For this reason he stated, "In childhood one must find their purpose in life. Once one finds this purpose the switch is turned on and a light comes on."

To show the power of purpose, Ali said, "ten men with a purpose have more power that a thousand men that don't know their purpose.

"Go ahead in spite of all difficulties to your purpose", he urged the gathering. "Nothing should stop you from going after your purpose."

"My purpose was to be heavyweight champion. I knew unconsciously when I was younger that this was what I wanted to be. Now they want me in jail, but I'm still happy, because the sacrifice I made was great, but in the end I have more power," said the ex-champ in drawing his career into line with his topic.

He concluded his lecture by telling the throng "if 99 times you fail, the 100th time you'll find your purpose."

The question and answer period that followed brought out the lighter and humorous side of Ali that everyone has come to expect from him.

He called his prediction of Wilt Chamberlain "timmmmmmmmber."

He said on Joe Frazier, "There ain't no doubt, he must go out."

But then asked how he could represent non-violence and yet light in the ring, Ali answered, "The intention of war is to kill. My purpose is not to kill any person. There can be no comparison between boxing and war. My fists are covered with cotton batten and gloves when I enter the ring and war wouldn't be bad if they used gloves. Nixon should challenge Ho Chi Minh with the gloves on to decide the Viet Nam war. And to top this off there are less casualties in boxing than in football, horseriding and many many other sports."

He called Howard Cosell his biggest supporter and agitator, but went on to say that this was why Cosell was the most popular sports announcer in the world.

To the pleasure of the crowd Ali concluded his appearance with his famous "Ali Shuffle" in a comical rendition with a student calling himself "Smoking Joe."

Trustees Do A Full Day's Work

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

Highlighting yesterday's Trustee's meeting was the appointment of Professor Robert G. Hoopes to the position of Associate Provost of the Amherst campus and the appointment of Mrs. Dorothy N. Marshall as Dean of Faculty and Provost at UMass in Boston. Both nominations received a unanimous vote from the Trustees present at the afternoon meeting held at the Yankee Drummer Inn in Auburn, Mass.

After the confirmation of the two appointments, the group voted in favor of the nomination of Roger B. Heckler, M.D. as Professor and Chairman of the Department of Medicine at the UMass Medical School in Worcester. It was also noted that next year's class of the Medical School will have the largest ratio of girls in the country.

The Institute for Man and His Environment was also approved yesterday. The Institute will have three main thrusts; education, research and training. Dr. Gluckstern stated to the group that a director and associate director of the institute will be appointed within the next month. Under consideration are Dr. Carritt for the position of Director, and Dr. Carl Swanson as Associate Director.

President Wood

Tenure recommendations which were presented at the Trustee Committee On Faculty and Educational Policy on April 16, by Vice Chancellor Gluckstern were approved Monday afternoon. There was conseusus that student participation in tenure decisions was of vital concern and should be assured.

Also during the meeting, the Trustees approved several Student Exchange Programs. The student exchange programs with the University of Birmingham and the University of Keele, England were passed.

Trustee voting was in favor of a UMass Soviet and East European Studies Program. This will provide for language competency in Russian or Polish along with emphasis on interdisciplinary studies.

Department name changes were also on yesterday's agenda. The dept. of Environmental Sciences was changed to The Suburban Experiment Station. The Dept Of Hotel and Restaurant Administration is now named the Dept. of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration.

An added feature of the meeting was Mr. James Brooks who informed the Trustees of the sanitary landfill problem on the UMass Campus. He produced photographs which showed the problems and danger to the environment created by this operation. He stated that the purpose of his presentation was to show the public that the state Dept of Public Health doesn't have an adequate number of personnel to safe guard the health of the public. Chancellor Tippo replied by saying that the present operation will be terminated on May 1st and that a joint landfill operation with the colleges in the area will be instituted off campus.

The meeting also marked the official introduction of newly elected Senate President Lee Sandwen to the Trustees. Mr. Sandwen was introduced by outgoing Prexy Glenn Elters.

Viet Cong Claim American Deserters Fighting For Them

PARIS (AP)-The Viet Cong delegation at the Paris peace talks said Monday that "a certain number" of American deserters are fighting in enemy ranks against U.S. forces in South Vietnam.

Duong Dinh Thao, chief spokesman of the Viet Cong delegation, called a news conference to distribute an order of the day from the Viet Cong command. This promised safe conduct and "appropriate rewards" to U.S. servicemen who cross over the enemy lines out of sympathy for the Viet Cong cause.

In reply to questions, Thao said: "A certain number of American soldiers are fighting in the ranks of the National Liberation Front. The number is still small because the battles in South Vietnam are particularly bloody."

Thao claimed a much larger number of American deserters are behind Viet Cong lines but are not in the fighting.

These men, Thao continued, "are hiding in the towns of South Vietnam and waiting for an opportunity to return to their homes or find asylum in a neutral country."

Thao said he did not know the exact number of American deserters nor the details of their work with the Viet Cong forces.

"Once they reach our lines," he said, "and they tell us they wish to join our ranks, we give them tasks in accordance with their abilities or their wishes."

The Viet Cong's order of the day was issued because "the growing opposition to the war among U.S. officers and men in South Vietnam has created a new situation there," Thao asserted.

He said the Viet Cong command wanted to make it clear to all American troops in Vietnam that the Viet Cong has no quarrel with the American people and intends to give its full protection and help to U.S. servicemen expressing their opposition to the war.

He told a questioner the Viet Cong "has no difficulty whatsoever" distinguishing between U.S. soldiers and units who oppose the war and those who, on the contrary, "eagerly carry out U.S. aggressive policies."

"There are some American units whom we already know to be opposed to the war, and such units are not attacked by our forces," he said. He gave no details or specific examples.

The Viet Cong order of the day instructed all Communist command troops in South Vietnam not to fire on surrendering or deserting American soldiers, but to give them "good treatment...aid and protection."

Asked what the rewards would be for American sympathizers, Thao recalled that the Viet Cong previously made an offer of money to deserting soldiers of the South Vietnamese army. But in the case of American soldiers, he said, "their highest reward surely is to be recognized as fighters for peace."

He told a questioner that the order of the day applied only to Americans and not to Australians, South Koreans or other foreign troops fighting in Vietnam.

He said all deserting American soldiers would at their request be given a safe conduct to a neutral country for asylum.

Grof Favors Psychotherapy In LSD Treatment

"The LSD experience and Great Religions of the World" was the topic of discussion when Stanislav Grof addressed an audience last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Grof, in LSD research, spoke of his work in Spring Grove in Baltimore.

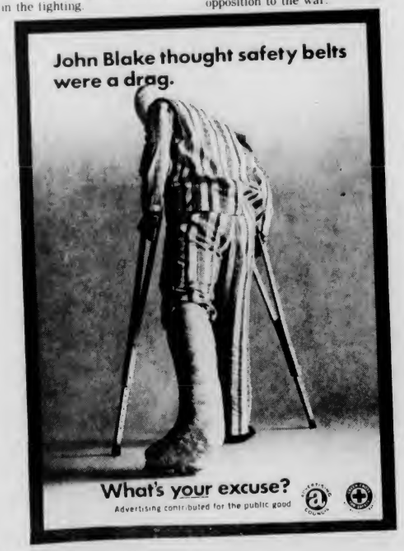
He elaborated on two approaches used in treating patients with LSD, the psychedelic and the psycholytic. Grof favors a positive psychotherapy approach with goals of "transcending the barrier between real human values and the present situation of the patient". Feelings of mistrust are overcome and a main goal of the therapy is to encourage the patient to "let go", he said.

Grof described the setting surrounding the psychedelic treatment. Music is played, the patient has on eyeshades and he is administered a dosage of 400-500 micrograms of pure LSD. Non-verbal communication by those present is used only if reassurance is necessary, according to Grof.

After four or five hours the patient is encouraged to talk about his experience, Grof continued. Later, walks outside are taken, where the patient is exposed to natural objects, he explained. Colors and tastes are experienced as in everyday life, he added.

Grof has worked with such groups as alcoholics, hard-core drug addicts and groups with serious mental disorders with "surprising success." He spoke of extremes of tolerance for pure LSD, noting that some hysterical patients exhibit "dramatic regressions on only 50 micrograms while others show no significant effects after receiving doses upwards of 500 micrograms."

Records of all sessions are kept by psychiatrists in the hope of discovering any laws for predicting the types of experiences which the patients will have, Grof explained.



He stated that the second half of all sessions is the crucial period. Prolonged reactions to LSD are not a result of LSD remaining in the body, he said. Flashbacks are a continuation of the "out-consciousness" in the individual as he experiences feelings which remind him of experiences under the influence of LSD, he explained.

Dr. Grof told the audience of certain stages in the LSD experience such as anguish and the feeling of dying, giving away to experiences of "blinding lights and colors symbolizing religious feeling and rebirth."

He gave examples of people citing detached information on ancient cultures later admitting they had never read anything on the subject. Some felt they were experiencing life in other time periods, he said.

Many patients became more interested in human relations than in material gain after extensive LSD therapy, Grof explained. Increased zest for life, appreciation of music and art typified the acquisition of a new set of values, he said.

Grof concluded that the evidence he presented shows "the possible therapeutic value of psychedelic treatment for the successful rehabilitation of former social outcasts."

AMARILLO, Texas (AP)-A new wardrobe can be eye-catching but the one worn Saturday by an Amarillo man caught the wrong eyes.

Eva Tooms, 45, of Amarillo thought the clothes looked familiar. Sure enough, they were. They belonged to her son Robert, 24, and were taken in a burglary of her home April 2.

Mrs. Tooms slapped a half-nelson on the man and dragged him to a pay telephone where she called Potter County Sheriff's deputies.

The 28-year-old man was in Potter County jail Monday while deputies continued to investigate the case.

Romney And Sargent Agree On Fiscal Solutions

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

Housing and Urban Development Secretary George Romney and Governor Francis W. Sargent both endorsed President Nixon's Revenue Sharing Plan before "A New England Town Meeting on Intergovernmental Reform" yesterday morning in the Campus Center.

The plan, now facing stiff congressional opposition, involves decentralizing the bureaucratic management on the Federal level through returning the power to the state and local governments.

Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and former Presidential candidate George Romney seen speaking in favor of the President's revenue sharing plan now before Congress.

"People at the local level have the great advantage in that they understand people and are in a better position to make effective use of given amounts of money," Romney said.

Romney outlined the President's proposal, which involves returning income tax revenue back to the states in two forms. The first sends back 1.8% of a state's income tax payment for the local government to use as they see fit.

The second involves Congress' eliminating the more than 150 Federal grants and aids existant and defining specific purposes for the money uses. These would include funding for law enforcement, manpower, education, transportation, and urban and rural development.

"Return this power and responsibility to local levels: that's what constitutes the new American Revolution," Romney declared.

Governor Sargent concurred with Secretary Romney and stated his belief that Revenue Sharing is the first step to avert a major crisis.

Sargent forcasts the crisis for two reasons. First, despite tax cuts, revenues are rising on the Federal level. Second, taxes on the state and local levels do not meet present needs.

Governor Sargent stated the state's case yesterday as to why he favored the President's plan which would bring additional federal revenue to cities and towns.

Calling the Federal Government a "swollen bureaucracy", Sargent said Washington monopolizes the revenue of the income tax and the states are left to pick up the pieces. They must do this, the Governor added, through the enactment of "special" taxes such as gasoline and sales taxes.

Sargent said Revenue Sharing would "call a halt to this parallel growth" and would meet and stop the current fiscal crisis.

Revenue Sharing would be the first major single move away from a centralized federal government, the Governor said.

Both Romney and Sargent believed there would be little chance that the plan would be passed at the current session of Congress, although both see hope for its passage next year.

At a press conference which followed the meeting both Romney and Sargent expressed their respect for those who kept the massive demonstration in Washington this past weekend as peaceful as it was.

Washington

Protests Move To Streets

WASHINGTON AP—Anti-war protesters roamed the Capitol Monday in a sort of extended guerrilla theater of shouts in the Senate, a "wailing wall" on the steps, and a paint-splashing spinoff into a congressional office.

The antiwarriors were in small groups acting under the general theme of "People's Lobby." This a follow on to Saturday's peaceful protest which drew more than 200,000, and a prelude to a "May Day" week of widespread calculated disruptions by a predicted 50,000.

The day's activities had no measurable effect on conduct or governmental business.

Seven were arrested for blocking a Pentagon entrance, nine for shouting in the Senate, nine for blocking an intersection near Georgetown.

In a half-hour Senate debate was halted three times with shouts of "stop the war," "peace now," and "what about the children in Vietnam... You're a bunch of fools." Three shouters were removed quietly by police and the spectators' gallery was cleared and closed but reopened in a short while.

Seven students began a fast in the office of Sen. Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Republican leader.

There was a rally on Capitol steps in favor of a $6,500 income for welfare families, and the demonstrators heard five congressmen as them to be peaceful.

About 50 demonstrators jammed into the office of Sen. Barry Goldwater, R—Ariz., splashing red paint on the walls of one room, saying they were producing a massacre.

Goldwater aide Leonard Kilgore said one of the demonstrators would fire a toy machinegun, and others would toss plastic bags of blood-colored paint. The senator wasn't in. Sen. John Tower, R-Tex., said between 30 and 50 protestors "stormed" his office shouting, taking over the reception room.

In both cases demonstrators fled the offices ahead of police. Threatened with arrest, 25 demonstrators broke up their hour-long sit-in in front of the office of Sen. John Stennis, D—Miss., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The "wailing wall"-their name for it-was a tactic involving low moans to represent the anguish of death, writhing on the floor, crying.

Wailing went on on the Capitol steps, the Senate chamber-about 20 people after the earlier disruption-the Senate cafeteria, and at the hearing of the Senate Veterans Committee.

Elsewhere in the Capitol small groups talked to anyone in the corridors who would listen and tried to lobby their congressman to stop the war.

Gas Pains

NEW ORLEANS AP—Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Monday that most congressional critics of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover are presidential aspirants trying to score political points with the radical left.

"It gives off an unpleasant political odor," said Agnew. The vice president, here to address the Southern Gas Association convention, devoted his 28-minute speech to defending Hoover. He derided reports of FBI spying on members of Congress.

Agnew said Sen. Edmund Muskie, D—Maine, "shares the phobia of those who believe they are under surveillance."

Time Enough For A Long Trip

By JIM GOLD
MDC Staff

"You know where I'm going? Florida," said a UMass junior in reaction to the new calendar arrangement for the 1972-73 academic year. He was expressing the joy of having finals over before Christmas vacation and a month off before the spring semester. "Time enough for a long trip," he said.

Most reactions to the calendar taken in an MDC survey indicated vast support of the plan. However, several did not understand why the new calendar plan could not be implemented in the fall of 71 instead of 72.

"Great", said a sophomore male.

"As long as they leave us out of school until after Labor Day, I think it's fine," said a Freshman girl explaining how her summer job at the Cape is contracted to end after Labor Day. The original calendar proposal was to have students returning to school on August 26, but the accepted proposal extended that to September 5.

One faculty member said he liked the idea and said how the calendar will now more closely coincide with those of other area colleges.

Most people like the part of not having to worry about taking finals after Christmas vacation. This, said one freshman, will allow time for a real vacation between the fall and spring vacations.

The calendar allows for a 13 week fall semester and a 14 week spring semester.

Student Busted For Foul Play

The unidentified man in the picture stole a few too many bases yesterday, not to mention the balls he picked up along the way. The first (left) picture shows the jubilant lad carrying away a souvenir from the field-the arrow points to the baseball in his hand. The second frame shows the Campus Police hustling him away for the heinious crime of making off with a ball that could have been a record home run, but was actually a foul ball. Phosphate Aging Accepted

Nixon Seeks Delay In Pollution Warning

What can I say? seems to be the question President Nixon is asking here. The Nixon Administration asked the Federal Trade Commission yesterday to postpone requiring manufacturers to warn consumers of the dangers of phosphate pollution possible through the use of certain detergents. And this is Earth Week?

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Nixon administration, backed by the nation's largest detergent maker, asked the Federal Trade Commission Monday to delay action on a proposal to require manufacturers to warn consumers of phosphate detergents pollute water.

U.S. Surgeon General Jesse L. Steinfeld and Russell E. Train, chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, requested more time to conduct tests on phosphate substitutes.

Both, however, agreed that phosphates contribute significantly to the accelerated aging of the nation's lakes, streams and impoundments.

Train, in a statement read by an aide, added that "we must continue and intensify our efforts to obtain reduction or elimination of phosphates in detergents as soon as assurance is available that the material or materials to be used as a substitute will not cause equal or worse pollution problems and will not endanger human health."

The FTC proposal, if enacted, would require all detergent makers to print on packages the statement:

"Warning: Each recommended use level of this product contains grams of phosphorous, which contributes to water pollution. Do not use in excess. In soft water areas use of phosphates is not necessary."

Phosphorous is an element which accelerates the natural life span of a lake or stream by artifically fertilizing the water, touching off a boom in plant growth. In a process known as eutrophication, the plants eventually choke the water and decaying vegetation can absorb so much oxygen that fish and other forms of marine life will suffocate.

About two million pounds of phosphates in detergents are consumed annually in the United States. And about half of the phosphates in the nation's sewage systems come from detergents, an aide to Train testified.

"The long-term solution to phosphates from municipal sewage must include both reduction or removal of phosphates in detergents and phosphate removal processes in municipal waste treatment plants," Train said.

Steinfeld asked for a delay because "It should be realized that tests conducted thus far indicate that some of the currently used substitutes for phosphates are clearly toxic and pose serious accident hazards, especially to children."

Howard J. Morgens, president of Proctor & Gamble, the nation's largest detergent manufacturer, objected to the labelling requirement proposed, charging it "would have the effect of forcing the industry to remove phosphates from its detergents.

"The industry would have to replace the phosphates with other materials before those other materials have been proved to be safe for people and the environment."

"Certainly there is no proof anywhere in the world taking phosphates out of detergents alone would eliminate excessive eutrophication," Morgens added.

Rogers Visits Mid-East

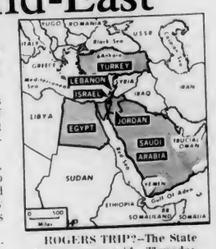
Secretary of State William P Rogers arrived in London on the first leg of his Mideast trip Monday voicing hope for step-by-step movement toward "a binding peace that will be just and lasting."

After a Southeast Asia Treaty Organization-SEATO, meeting here and a Central Treaty Organization CENTO-session in Ankara, Rogers caps his tour with a one-week journey to four Arab countries and Israel.

"Our purpose is to strengthen U.S. ties with the countries of the Middle East and to play a helpful role in giving added momentum to the painstaking process which we hope will lead, step by step to a binding peace that will be just and lasting," Rogers said in an airport arrival statement.

Rogers' presidential jetliner flew in from Washington after a seven-hour flight.

His two-week jet-speed journey will take him to four European and Mideast capitals and bring him face to face with the leaders of 14 governments. Turkey declared martial law in 11 provinces, aimed at student disorders but also to provide security for Rogers' visit Thursday.



In Tel Aviv, Israeli leaders predicted a new outbreak of fighting along the battlefronts that have been quiet since the U.S.-sponsored cease-fire in August.

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, in a Memorial Day letter to relatives of slain soldiers, said Egypt, encouraged by sophisticated new Soviet weapons "threatens to resume the war."

His statement followed a warning by Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Haim Bar-Lev that the Egyptians found themselves with no recourse other than renewed fighting.

There was shooting along the Suez Canal on Sunday.

Israeli antiaircraft batteries opened fire on an Egyptian MIG21 when it overflew Israeli lines in the northern sector, the Tel Aviv command announced. Asked if the plane was hit, a spokesman said, "We just don't know."

ROGERS TRIP?—The State Department said Thursday that Secretary of State William P. Rogers will leave Monday on a trip taking him at least to Turkey. Officials here and abroad indicated he would probably go also to Egypt, Israel, Jordan, Lebanon and Saudi Arabia. (AP Wirephoto Map)

Rogers' visits are expected to stir anti-American demonstrations in some of the Mideast capitals.

Court Gives Towns Low-Housing Rights

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court Monday gave the people in towns and cities all over the nation the right to block construction of low-rent public housing in their communities.

The 5d3 decision may blunt a broad campaign to disperse poor minorities from inner cities to outlying areas.

Justice Hugo L. Black spoke for the court as it sustained an amendment to the California Constitution that requires voter approval for federally assisted public housing. He said the 1951 amendment was not ained at any racial minority and though it may disadvantage the poor, it is not unconstitutional.

Eleven other states have similar voter checks on public housing. The ruling supports the theory behind them and may encourage other states to adopt like procedures.

"Provisions for referendums demonstrate devotion to democracy, not to bias, discrimination or prejudice," Black said. He was backed by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices John M. Harlan, Potter Stewart, and Byron R. White.

Justices Thurgood Marshall, William J. Brennan Jr., and Harry A. Blackmun dissented while Justice William O. Douglas disqualified himself. Blackmun's vote was his first major difference with Burger, a fellow Minnesotan.

Marshall said that "singling out the poor to bear a burden not placed on any other class of citizens tramples the values that the 14th Amendment was designed to protect."

Pres. Commission Asks China-U.N. Membership

WASHINGTON (AP)-A presidential commission which views membership in the United Nations as "a duty, not a privilege" Monday urged President Nixon to back U.N. seats for both Communist and Nationalist China.

The commission, headed by Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge favored also U.N. seats for East and West Germany, North and South Korea as well as the two Chinas.

The report came at a time when President Nixon was studying a separate U.S. government report dealing with recommendations for U.S. strategy at the United Nations toward the China question and for U.S. recognition of the Peking regime.

It was released also at a time when the State Department confirmed that the United States had utilized third governments to act as go-betweens to inform Peking that President Nixon wished to improve relations with the Peoples Republic of China.

State Department spokesman Charles Bray confirmed that the Nixon administration's desires had been discussed with a number of other governments and it seems quite possible that representatives of those other governments made known our views to the Peoples Republic of China."

The State Department did not say what response there has been from Peking, if any. But Edgar Snow, in an article written for Life magazine, said Mao Tse-tung told him he would be happy to talk to Nixon, either as a tourist or as President.

The report by the blue-ribbon Lodge commission said the United Nations "can best do its job of war prevention and settlement of disputes if its membership includes all governments of the world provided they subscribe to the principles of the U.N. Charter."

UMass Trustees Name New Department Heads

The UMass Board of Trustees has named four heads of department for the UMass-Amherst campus.

Appointees and their departments are: Prof. Warren D. Anderson, chairman of comparative literature; Prof. Raymond O.P. Farrish, head of agricultural and food economics; Prof. R. Clinton Fuller, head of biochemistry; and Prof. Harold L. Rauch, chairman of zoology.

The appointments were made yesterday at the Board's regular monthly meeting, in Auburn.

Prof. Anderson came to the UMass Program in Comparative Literature in September, 1970. He had taught at the College of Wooster, the University of Michigan, and the University of Iowa. His degrees include a B.A. from Haverford College, and M.A. and Ph. D. from Harvard University, and a B.A. from Oxford University.

Publications by Prof. Anderson include a translation of "Aeschylus: Prometheus Bound," "Hymns That Are Lords of the Lyre," an article in "Classical Journal."

Prof. Farrish is professor and acting head of the department of agricultural economics at the University of Connecticut. Beginning June 6 he will be professor and head of the UMass department of agricultural and food economics. He has a B.S. from Cornell University, an M.S. and Ph. D. from the University of Connecticut.

He has been an agricultural economist for the U.S. Department of Agriculture and Extension Marketing Specialist for the University of Arizona.

His publications include: "Bigness in Industry and Agriculture," "Some Comments on World Food Supply," and "The Effect of Income-Transfer Programs on the Distribution of Income."

Prof. R. Clinton Fuller, who will begin in September as head of the department of biochemistry, comes to UMass from the University of Tennessee-Oak Ridge Graduate School of Biomedical Sciences, where he is director. He is also on the scientific staff of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory, biology division. Previously he held positions at the University of California at Riverside, Dartmouth College, and Dartmouth Medical School.

Among approximately 100 publications by Prof. Fuller are several on photosynthesis. He has a B.A. from Brown University, an M.A. from Amherst College, and a Ph. D. from Stanford University, and an honorary M.A. from Dartmouth College.

Prof. Harold L. Rauch has been acting head of the zoology department, and will become head of the department immediately. He has been at UMass since September, 1950, beginning as an instructor and becoming professor in 1961. His field is genetics.

In 1944 he earned his B.S. degree from Queens College, in 1947 his M.S. from the University of Illinois, and in 1950 his Ph. D. from Brown University. His publications include work on such topics as hair growth and pigmentation in mice, and ectodermal parasites in hamsters.

Hoopes Appointed Associate Provost

Prof. Robert G. Hoopes, presently dean of faculty at UMass-Boston, was names to the position of associate provost for UMass-Amherst by the Board of Trustees at its monthly meeting yesterday.

Dr. Hoopes, who will begin as associate provost September 1, has been with the University since January of 1970. He came as professor of English in Boston and became dean of faculty there last September.

As associate provost he will assist Robert L. Gluckstern, provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs, with faculty personnel matters, planning and implementation of academic programs, liaison with student groups in academic matters, and working with all schools and colleges at the University.

Before coming to UMass, Dr. Hoopes was chairman of the English department at Oakland University. He has an A.B. degree from Cornell College, Iowa; an A.M. from Boston University; an M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard University; and an honorary D. Litt. from Cornell College. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and has been vice president of the American Council of Learned Societies, and dean of faculty and assistant to the chancellor at Oakland.

His many articles and books include "The Undergraduate in the University," "The Discovery and Encouragement of Humanists," "Science in the College Curriculum," and "Form and Thought in Prose."

WMUA Special-Washington, D.C.

Tonight, beginning at 7:30 P.M., WMUA will present a special program on the massive anti-war demonstration held in Washington, D.C., on Saturday, April 24th.

The 90-minute program will feature taped speeches of a number of participants in the peace rally staged Saturday afternoon on the steps of the Capitol before an assembled audience of more than 100,000 anti-war protestors.

Among the speakers to be heard on tonight's special program are: former Navy Lt. John Kerry of Waltham, Mass., leader of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War; Mrs. Coretta King; Mrs. Sally Davis, mother of the indicted Angela Davis; Senator Vance Hartke (D-Ind.); and the Reverend Ralph Abernathy, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Among the musical artists who addressed the crowd with anti-war songs--also recorded for tonight's program--were Peter, Paul, and Mary; Country Joe MacDonald; and Pete Seeger.

Tonight's presentation will be narrated by WMUA commentator Ken Mosakowski, who taped most of the Capitol rally on Saturday.

Environmental Institute Established By Trustees

A new institute designed to focus the resources of the University of Massachusetts on the problems of the environment has been approved by the UMass Board of Trustees.

At its meeting in Auburn yesterday the board approved a set of guidelines for the establishment of the Institute for Man and His Environment. In its first two years the institute will concentrate on the planning, development and implementation of education for graduates and undergraduates. At the same time it will develop a programmatic or problem-solving approach to interdisciplinary research and public service.

The institute will be a statewide facility for teaching, reserach and service administered by the office of Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, provost and vice-chancellor for academic affairs at the Amherst campus.

"We hope to appoint a director and associate director of the institute within the next month," Dr. Gluckstern said.

The Institute for Man and His Environment will have three main thrusts, Dr. Gluckstern said. "One will be a broad education program so that the average citizen will be able to make value judgments about the environment. A second will be the training of people to evaluate the state of the environment. The third will be research--devising ways of bringing together the aesthetic, the economic and the sociological inputs with engineering and the biological and physical sciences."

Mrs. Marshall Named Provost of UMB

The new dean of faculty and provost at UMass-Boston is Mrs. Dorothy N. Marshall of Wayland, who is currently director of special studies at the College of the Holy Cross.

Mrs. Marshall was named to the position yesterday, by the University Board of Trustees.

In 1942 she began as an instructor at Bryn Mawr College in Pennsylvania and from 1947 to 1970 was dean of the college. She served two terms as acting president of Bryn Mawr, and throughout her stay there taught at least one course in the Spanish department each semester.

In addition to being director of special studies at Holy Cross, she is a visiting lecturer there and teaches an upper division seminar in Latin American Politics. She is also development consultant for President Harris Wofford of Bryn Mawr and for President George Hazard of Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

Her academic background includes an A.B. and M.A. from Smith College, a Ph.D. from Bryn Mawr, and study in Spain and Latin America.

She is a member of the Modern Language Association, the American Academy of Political Science, and Phi Beta Kappa; and has been a trustee of Smith College (1959-69), member of the dissertation year selection committee in Modern Languages of the Woodrow Wilson Program, and the Regional and National selection committee for the Fulbright Award to Latin America.

Her husband, J. Nathaniel Marshall, is an executive engineer for R.C.A. She is the mother of one son, Nicholas, and one daughter, Emily.

House OK's Lowering Drinking Age To 19

BOSTON (AP)-The Massachusetts House Monday gave final approval to a bill which would lower the legal drinking age to 19.

The bill now goes to the Senate for action.

The measure originally would have lowered the age to 18, but was amended last week to substitute the 19-year-old provision.

The amended bill received final approval last week, but a motion to reconsider that vote was taken up Monday.

That motion was approved on a 116-112 roll call and the bill again was approved on a 120-109 vote.

"Some Of The Things You Hear These Days Are Absolutely Shocking"

Art Buchwald

Surveyed To Death

WASHINGTON — The world will not end with a bang or a whimper. It will probably end with a poll. Americans are being polled to death at the moment and you can't leave your house without someone asking how you feel about something.

The other day I had to fly up to New York. As I adjusted my seat and got ready to snooze, the stewardess handed me a questionnaire. "Would you mind filling this out for our airline?" I looked at the questions. "Are you happy with our service?" "How many drinks did you buy?" "What is your color preference for our baggage racks?" "Why did you choose to fly this airline?"

I dutifully filled out the questionnaire and went to my hotel. After checking into the room I found a questionnaire on the nightstand.

"The management would be grateful if you will fill out the following: Did you find the room made up when you checked in? Were there enough towels in the bathroom? Wash cloths? How often do you plan to take a bath during your stay?" And so on and so forth.

I canceled my lunch so I could fill out the questionnaire honestly. After turning it over to the manager I went out to hail a taxi. A pretty girl in a mini skirt with a clipboard came up and said, "Would you answer a few questions for a survey our company is doing on New York tourism?"

"I'm very late," I pleaded.

"It will only take a moment. How long have you been waiting for a taxi?"

"Just a few moments. There's one," I said.

"Please, sir, I still have some questions to ask you."

"Hurry," I pleaded.

"Why did you come to New York?"

"For meetings," I said anxiously.

"Then not for pleasure?"

"Well, I'm hoping to get some pleasure in, but I can't until I find out what they tell me at the meetings. There goes another taxi."

She stopped me from hailing it and continued. "What irks you the most about New York City?"

"Being polled while I'm trying to hail a taxi."

"I have only 20 more questions to ask, sir. When you walk around New York, do you look in the shop windows?" And so on and so forth.

I finally got rid of her, but there were no taxis in sight so I had to walk to my appointment. Ten blocks later I was stopped by a man with a briefcase who said, "I beg your pardon, but could you tell me if you think Mayor Lindsay is doing better, doing worse or holding his own in New York City?"

"I don't know. I'm a stranger here. I live in Washington."

"Washington?" He took another poll out of his briefcase. "Do you think President Nixon is doing better, doing worse or holding his own?"

"What gives?" I asked. "First you ask me about Lindsay, then Nixon?"

"Don't tell anyone," he said. "But I'm moonlighting and working for two political pollsters at the same time."

I tried to get around him but he blocked my path. "Look, if you don't want to talk about politics, I'm also doing a survey for a market research company on chocolate-flavored cigars."

I started to run down the street and he followed me so I sought sanctuary in a church on Fifth Avenue.

The service had just finished and a minister handed me a mimeographed sheet of paper which said "In order to make our afternoon services more relevant would you kindly tell us whether you were: (A) Emotionally involved. (B) Spiritually fulfilled. (C) Satisfied with the musical number selected by our organist. (D) Did you have a good view of the altar?"

I filled it out and left. The man with the briefcase was standing in front of the church. "How about giving me your thoughts on hot pants?"

In The Face Of Death

By NEIL COLEMAN

The campus was rather quiet this weekend; no doubt owing, at least in part, to the many people who went to Washington. I was struck with nostalgia by reading Silverman's editorial on the first peace demonstrations in D.C. in 1967. In a way I can imagine how Adam Clayton Powell felt. He was a congressmen from Harlem who was elected for many years with the slogan "I paid my dues," which of course he had. He had been demonstrating for equal rights back in the thirties when there weren't too many such demonstrations. I have been to my share of demonstrations, and I would have been to many more except that back in 1964 and 1965 there weren't that many of us to demonstrate.

In those days the dove faced a four fold problem. He questioned the omnipotence of the United States government which was viewed as unpatriotic. He questioned the tenets of the anticommunist crusade as laid down by John Foster Dulles and his successor Dean Rusk; men whose opinion was sacrosanct in the era of foreign policy. Anyone who questioned a policy directed at the "Red menace" or the "yellow peril" was certainly open to attack. In those days, the dove also attacked liberalism and its chief saint, Lyndon Johnson, who had just won election by a large majority. Lastly the dove seemed to be attacking democracy itself, the principle of the rule of the majority. Even then, of course, not everybody sided with the commandor of the V.F.W. who wanted to use nuclear weapons, like most good liberals most people were in the middle. What a scene to contemplate, liberal America maintaining its equilibrium between two platitudes, wanting peace, but supporting war. Fortunately somewhere along the line it lost its balance.

Today things have changed, at least on the theoretical level. Questioning the American government has become more common place. John foster Dulles' anti-communist policy of brinkmanship is gone. We no longer hear about "unleashing Chiang-Kai-shek" Lyndon has retired to Texas leaving Hubert to fight a rear guard action for liberalism. Even the people have come around. All of which is quite a bit, when you look back and it is a healthy sign until one realizes that it cost 1 1/2 million Vietnamese lives and 45,000 American lives and the war itself still goes on.

There are more people now than in 1965 and demonstrations have become a happening. They want to stop the war or stop the government. They're frustrated, I'm frustrated, everybody in the country is now frustrated with the war. We've done all we could; we are doing all we can; we want to do more and indeed we must do more. But for all that has changed, things still remain the same. There is, it seems, a sameness to life and to death. It seems that there should be a statute of limitations to such things as wars. For it really appears almost hopeless and frustrating and yet it must end. Many of us are frustrated by our lack of success, some are so desperate that they allow themselves to be side-tracked by Nixon and still others grow bored when the day to day struggle for peace is not as exciting as a strike. You begin to feel the futility of Sisyphus struggling against the heavy rock of war. Yet even in the midst of our futility there is hope and nobility. For if we have achieved nothing, even if we can achieve nothing, we must try. In apathy lies damnation, in effort lies salvation. For with our continued efforts, we can exert our lives and our humanity for peace in the face of death and inhumanity which is war.

Needless Slaughter

(Ed. note-The following was submitted by the Friends of Animals, Inc.)

Americans revolted by the massacre of baby harp seals, the threatened extinction of whales, and the killing of polar bears have a golden opportunity to translate their justifiable outrage into direct action.

An incensed citizenry can strike a telling blow against the brutality and needless slaughter by writing their representatives in Congress, demanding they vote for the Harris-Pryor Bill of Rights for Ocean Mammals.

Jointly sponsored by Sen. Fred R. Harris (D-Okla.) and Rep. David Pryor (D.-Ark.), the Bill would:

1. Make it a criminal offense for any American to kill seals, polar bears, whales, sea lions, walruses, or any other ocean mammal,

2. Ban the importation into the United States of all products from ocean mammals, thus removing the economic incentive for their slaughter.

3. Phase out the seal kill on our Pribilof Islands without abrogating the current treaty with Japan and Canada. The United States now agrees to kill seals on land for those two countries in exchange for which they prohibit their nationals from killing seals in the open waters. They treaty, which expires in 1976, gives Japan and Canada the option of accepting their shares in the annual kill in dollars--as they have done in past years; or, if they insist upon the skins, the Aleuts will kill 18,000 seals for them each year until 1976.

4. Direct the United States State Department to initiate a truly international treaty in which all countries agree to stop killing ocean mammals, both on land and at sea.

The Governments of the United States and Canada must be told by their employers--the public--that barbarity which stuns the minds and sickens the hearts of all decent people must be outlawed.

Right now is the time to push for passage of the Harris-Pryor Bill--which bans slaughtering the 42,000 seals usually clubbed for the purported benefit of the U.S. Treasury--before the next Pribilof kill begins the end of June. A copy of the Harris-Pryor Bill may be obtained by writing Friends of Animals, 11 West 60th Street, New York, N.Y. 10023.

Equal Under The Law?

By JIM MORAN

I bet you don't even know that you support three racially segregated groups here on campus. We must be a real bunch of suckers. Do you know why we have to support them? Because your senate hasn't got the damn guts to tell them to stuff it.

This is not to say that the goals of these three groups are in error. It's to say that you just can't hold one group above the other to achieve that goal. You can not under any circumstances refuse membership to any student because he is not of the proper race.

Look back on all the work that was done to make everybody equal under the law. And think about all that damn hate and brutality that had to be endured, then go ask yourself if it is right to support these three groups.

It seems quite possible that if our own general court can not correct this situation then the American Civil Liberties Union will be called in next fall to handle it.

On something else. The "dump-Nixon campaign" is unnecessary. Nobody in their right mind could vote for him again. I just hope the loyal opposition doesn't stick somebody up on the band wagon that will force so many to vote for so little, again.

How many years has Dick been a lawyer? It's been almost 25, and in the almost 3 years that he has been President he has made at least 3 remarks about pending cases that even an idiot knows you don't do. If he can screw up as a lawyer after more than twenty-five years, imagine what he could do if he were President for eight. If you can't recall the incidents just mentioned, one was with the Manson case, and 2 and 3 were with the Calley case.

Martha Mitchell is running the government. Who else could screw things up that bad?...oh yah...Dick. Have you heard her latest gem? She thinks the nine justices on the Supreme Court should be fired because of their ruling on bussing in public schools. I wonder if J. Edgar listens to her phone calls?

Letters To The Editor

Mr. Elters' Confusion

To the Editor:

The Collegians #129 (4/23/71) report about the Faculty Senate meeting of 4/22/71 was devoted mainly to the statement which Mr. Elters read at the beginning of the meeting. Since the statement was printed verbatim on the same page this seems redundant, considering that the majority of agenda items of the meeting were not mentioned at all in your report. This seems to be standard practice. The reason for mentioning it at this time is that it seems characteristic of the sort of studious disregard on the part of the student leadership of faculty concerns which Mr. Elters-falsely and in ignorance-accuses the faculty and its senate of practicing with respect to students' concerns.

In particular it would have been sound journalism if you had reported the comments about Mr. Elter's statement which were made toward the end of the faculty seante meeting. Let me reiterate my comments on Mr. Elters' statement for your readers. Mr. Elters referred to Mr. Brogan, Mr. Lewy and Mr. Hollander as "academic fascists." No doubt it would be convenient to Mr. Elters if this vicious attack were disregarded and thus treated as an instance of what he calls "adolescent rhetoric." But choosing to take Mr. Elters as seriously as I have always taken my students, and having experienced the grim actuality of fascism personally and at first hand, and remembering the bitter struggle against it, a struggle in which I had a good fortune to take part, I must regard the designation of these particular colleagues and, by implication, of like-minded colleagues, as an odious obscenity.

Such colleagues are in the forefront of the continuous struggle to establish and to maintain the measure of academic freedom which makes Mr. Elters' and, we hope, all students' education truly liberating and thus worth their while. And such academic freedom has a chance to live only if the pressure of agitation on the part of both, established and passing, interests is kept away from the University. For the pursuit of scholarship wilts and dies under such pressures, and is, in fact, vulnerable to any show of force. Scholarship and command performances are antithetical. We are painfully aware of what the universities are like in totalitarian regimes. And some of us remember what happened to the universities under fascism. It is the pressures extraneous to the academic enterprise that pave the way to fascism.

In light of all this it is understandable that Mr. Elters' confusion of the motive of academic freedom with academic fascism is perverse and pathetic.

Mr. Elters' statement is full of wholesale condemnations, generalities, sweeping statements and misplaced labels. Concrete issues, specific references to suggestions as bases for discussion are absent, perhaps by design. For example, I would have liked to hear what academically relevant concerns on the part of students the faculty is putatively uninformed about. The only effect which Mr. Elters' statement could possibly have is to create bad feelings, an atmosphere of suspicion, and to foment trouble; perhaps this was also by design. But no student who thinks is fooled by Mr. Elters' statement, because attaching labels neither identifies nor solves problems. No doubt the opportunities for communication should be used more fully; but Mr. Elters does not promote communication. No doubt further opportunities can and ought to be developed in consideration of specific needs for such opportunities; but declaring war, in Mr. Elters' sense, is not designed to promote such opportunities.

War in Mr. Elters sense means extraneous pressure and force, precisely the sort of thing that destroys the academic enterprise, together with its freedom. Not that this enterprise is by its nature pacific. Far from it! The academic enterprise is a matter of critical challenge and response, a vying for excellence in the discipline of the mind. Here the best argument and the most plausible evidence prevail-and not physical and psychological force. Whoever is prepared to present himself to this challenge, is welcome to the academic ranks. All else is ancillary or adjunctive, or else extraneous and hence potentially destructive of the academic enterprise.

Not Easily Cowed

To the Editor:

Our "academic Fascists" seem to be a highly select group of those who disagree with the proposal for a unicameral student-faculty senate made by the Governance Commission of which Glenn Elters was a member. This Commission, appointed last May, failed to make the interim report the first semester which its charge called for, but suddenly delivered its final report thus late this second semester, requesting speedy approval.

Several members of the Senate expressed the opinion that the report came too late on a crowded calendar to permit proper consideration at this time and raised numerous objections to the proposal itself. Only one senator expressed approval of the proposal as it was presented.

Mr. Elters himself was present and offered no answer at that time to these objections, nor did he offer an answer to any one of them in his intemperate statement to the Senate this past Thursday. His conception of faculty-student dialogue on this issue is to single out as "academic Fascists" three of the faculty supposedly responsible for hoodwinking all the rest. One of these is not even a member of the Senate. Two of them have had sad experience with the grim Fascist menace to which Elters refers with such glib inexperience. As for myself as the third, I must confess being surprised to find I am a Fascist since it has hardly been a decade since a university president accused me of being a member of a Communist cell, apparently because I disapproved of his arbitrarily firing one of my younger colleagues.

Since the Faculty Senate did not accept the proposal at once (never mind how delinquent the Commission report, never mind how weighty some of the objections to it might be), a state of war is declared against us. The hope seems to be that what cannot be thrust down our throats without permitting us even to gag may yet be force-fed to us by means of threats.

Mr. Elters showed his skill at manipulating the Faculty Senate by threats last spring on one notable occasion, but it may be doubted that this trick will work as well in these quieter times. Moreover, the particular victims he has singled out for intimidation may not be quite as easily cowed as he supposes. It may even begin to occur to some faculty members who have not hitherto been notably Fascist that Mr. Elters is not setting a particularly persuasive example of the benefits that can be expected from the unicameral senate which he advocates.

A First Class Slum

To the Editor:

I decided this past December that because my final semester was approaching, it would be favorable to live it off campus. I made this decision although it meant giving up the paid position I held then as assistant head of residence. The paramount determinant in my choice was simply that three and a half years of living in a slum was sufficient. (The slum to which I refer is Kennedy Tower.

It was with great dismay, therefore, that I read in Friday's Collegian that, in fact, I was still living in a slum! Of the residences cited by the CEQ in its study of urban blight, mine was one of the dwellings listed. The problems CEQ spotted were a car park problem, and a yard in need of some attention.

The purpose of this letter is by no means a chastisement of CEQ, which has done a service to the University and Amherst community by its accurate descriptions and positive suggestions. It is rather an attempt to enumerate several of the significant difficulties involved in the maintenance of property faced by any student who might rent one of the large houses on North Pleasant St. (Let me deal specifically with the four or five houses owned by the Ray brothers.)

1. Money. Anyone who thinks it is less expensive to rent an apartment (other than those in Villages) is seriously mistaken. The landlord receives $190 a month from three of us for a five-room apartment. He will charge the four girls who will live here next year $220. Unfortunately, that does not include oil, ($95 in January alone) phone, utilities, or trash pickup. There is a significant saving on food, of course, but after paying for all the above, you have little desire to expend any further resources, be it money or energy.

2. The landlord provides little in the way of tools (two old snow shovels). Even if you were inclined to approach him for a few rakes, etc., you wouldn't find him. He lives somewhere in Connecticut and the only time we've seen him was when a check bounced.

3. Finally, the nature of the problems themselves. There is not room to park all the cars on the driveway--thus the cars on the lawn. But tire tracks on the grass are far less objectionable than Anderson's tow trucks, the horrid fate of any automobile parked overnight on the street. The other problem is refuse on the lawn. It is foolish to imagine that is the product of the people living on that property. The trash is the result of a few inconsiderate people who are part of the throngs that parade into town daily, and see fit to make trash receptacles out of the bushes.

The car problem is beyond my control. However, I will personally make a sterner effort to rid our lot of beer cans and wine bottles, though it will mean paying someone to empty the barrels more frequently. My only wish is that the other parties responsible, i.e. the administration, Amherst, and the property owners, will also make the efforts outlined by CEQ in order to alleviate the conditions that could turn Amherst's main street into a first class slum.

Thanks For The Vote

To the Editor:

I wish to take this opportunity to thank all those who took the time to vote for me and to offer a solution to the paradox of why so many people voted for me and at the same time for Balboni. Perhaps they simply wanted one more chance to see him resign again.

A Boston Globe story reports that about $600,000 per year is spent by Massachusetts on the salaries alone for promotional service in the state's public relation's budget. From this end, anyway, it appears that it's going to take a lot more than that to make people believe that Massachusetts is such a nice place to live.

What's A Little Blood

To the Editor:

How many times have you heard fellow students claim the big problem with the older generation is its lack of compassion and interest in mankind? How many students do you know who are turning off the older generation for these reasons?

Well then what have you done lately that's really relevant? What have you done that really contributes to mankind?

If you have no answer to this question, why don't you decide now to do something to help others. Sign up to donate blood.

Big deal you say...what does that really do. Well, it is a big deal--to the family whose father may have had his life saved with your blood. To the parents whose sick baby received your blood. To the husband whose wife possibly was helped by your blood. They don't know you, and probably never will. But they know that someone helped when they badly needed it. And that's damned meaningful, damned relevant.

If you really care, then sign up to donate now. Recruitment is April 26-30 in front of the Campus Center Bookstore, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. It doesn't matter if you smoke dope either, so don't use that as your excuse.

Remember...the Red Cross can't transfuse excuses!

SURVIVING THE SEVENTIES by Benjamin DeMott, Dutton $5.95

"SURVIVING THE SEVENTIES is not what its title and dust-jacket would have us believe: a manual for surviving revolutionary times. No, it is not a manual in the strict sense; it is a more subtle book than that.

The search for the causes of what ails us has caught the interest of a number of writers; Roszak and Reich come quickly to mind. In some ways, Benjamin DeMott continues in their tradition, chipping away at American myths.

It is our possibilities and how we approach them that bind together the essays in the first two-thirds of the book. "Everywhere in the culture, in sum," he writes, "the same themes sound: the will to possess one's experience rather than be possessed by it, the longing to live one's life rather than be lived by it, the drive for a more various selfhood than men have known before..."

The idea is not new, but exciting: that there is much we as a nation and as individuals can become if only we will it. On the one hand, DeMott champions the search for alternate experiences, but also he warns that such optimism incurs costs. "The great god Possibility encourages men to be fantasts, forgetful of the responsibilities that begin in probabilities rather than in dreams..."

Or, as another observer has put it, it tends to get us in trouble when we begin really to believe that "The impossible takes a little longer."

The essays proceed to examine the women's lib and ecology issues as extensions of our investigating that which we might become. When DeMott writes about men and women we sense that here is more than a social commentator; speaking to us is a man who understands by experience their changing relationships.

The last third of SURVIVING THE SEVENTIES should be of special interest to one at UMass: it contains a journal of last spring's strike at Amherst College.

It's surprising to learn that we know so little about our neighbors at the top of the hill. Even the strike which was supposed to draw together students of different colleges didn't work with us except for a few brief hours on the town common.

In DeMott's journal we meet, perhaps for the first time, the characters about whom we've heard so much. Calvin Plimpton, the super-rich physician-president who makes house calls and marshals the money.

David Eisenhower, who "ate alone, left alone: and the look of unself-preoccupation, of comfort, of non-disturbance, of good nature, didn't leave his face. Seeking no eye, he didn't evade any either."

George Kateb of Political Science, "possibly our best mind," who galvanized the community at the outset of the strike.

And most of all, Benjamin DeMott, for twenty years professor of English at Amherst; part of the strike as a member of its steering committee, yet detached to his journal. Subject to the same bewilderment by money and social distinctions as anyone else. Brimming with ideas on education, ecology and women's lib, thoughts on what we might expect from the Seventies.

His Truth Goes Marching On

By BOB NESTI

The Battle Hymn of Lt. Calley.

Mel Brooks made a film several years ago entitled "The Producers." In it Zero Mostel played a down-and-out Broadway producer who needed to make some quick money. His plan was to produce a Broadway musical of such incredible bad taste that it would fold immediately. Mostel then would take off with what remained of the backers' money.

The show with which he hoped to assault his audience's sense of taste and propriety was a musicalized version of Hitler's rise to power in Nazi Germany entitled "Springtime For Hitler." Just one example of the utter tastelessness of it was a production number which featured goose-stepping chorines making a huge human swastika in the best Busby Berkley style.

The irony of it all was that the audience didn't take it seriously. they couldn't, and it became a resounding hit. The producer, by the way, was found out and sent up on an extortion rap.

Mostel's basic mistake was that he underestimated the depth taste in this country could go to. We have had some excellent examples of this in recent years, starting with the Kennedy fetish and continuing to an obnoxious degree with the entire Middle Class Peace Movement. Nothing though is as poor as the right wing chauvinism of self-styled patriots extolling the praises of the American Way.

Some years back an American Legion convention was held in Northampton. There hasn't been one there since and for good reason. It seems when the boys get together for their annual God, Family, and Country eartharsis, they usually spend more time guzzling and rutting. Not that there is anything particularly wrong with this behavior, it simply does not jive with the dear old Motherhood and Apple Pie Virtues.

Then again though, neither does the murdering of civilians during a war. Somewhere in the distant past, in a devastated defeated nation at our feet, a trial was held. There high-ranking Nazis used as their defense against war crime charges that they were only following orders. The decision, if I remember correctly, said that despite military rules and regulations the individual was responsible for his actions. The Boston Blobe made the point yesterday when it said: "Lt. Calley obeyed orders, and so much for the virtue of military obedience."

The entire Calley affair has sickened many Americans. James Smith, a computer manager down in Nashville Tennessee, a young American, was quoted in the recent issue of Rolling Stone Magazine as saying "the Lige magazine pictures of My Lai were possibly the most appalling thing I ever saw. I could not let them stay in my house. I didn't let my wife see them."

James Smith is a purveyor of that bad taste, mentioned earlier. James Smith penned the lyrics to the incredibly successful song "The Battle Hymn of Lt. Calley."

In case our isolated existence here in the valley has allowed you to miss this nauseous exercise, let it suffice to say that it is a paean to Calley. He becomes the Vietnam Sergeant York. It is the first time in recent memory that a mass murderer has become a culture hero. a major culture hero. 1,000,000 (one million) copies of this record have been sold in one (1) week. People believe this man has been victimized, individual responsibility is once again passed by, the logic of guilt is carried further up leaving no one guilty.

The entire Calley issue is undoubtedly going to make some people very rich. Mr. Smith who, to further quote him, shrewdly wrote the song to give "the prevailing opinion in Middle America." You don't need a weatherman to know which way the wind blows, said some folksinger some years back. The only things which distinguishes Smith from many others is that he sensed this somewhat appalling feeling and had the balls to write about it.

Eventually Calley too will write a book and become quite a wealthy man, which leads me to ask the question: How you gonna keep 'em down in the trenches after they've heard of Calley?

Bicycle Is Earth's Best Friend

"Bikecology" is ecology through bicycling, according to Friends for Bikecology in Santa Barbara California. Bicycling causes a minimal amount of stress on the earth's ecological systems since it requires so few natural resources to function and at the same time creates little distruption to the earth.

The Bikecology Movement is concerned about people--particularly bicyclists with regard to their environment. The movement hopes to create an awareness of bicycling as a positive influence on the ecological reform of our land, and to establish the bicycle as a significant mode of transportation.

The advantages brought about by functional bikesystems would be plentiful according to Friends for Bikecology; the beneficiaries are all individuals and the total environment.

Friends for Bikecology claim the following:

—The bicycle offers no abnormal stress to our natural, physical or mental beings; it does not pretend to isolate us from our environment.

—The bicycle is dependable and ideal for everyday use. It is an excellent tool for light shopping, errands and paper route delivery. The bicycle makes going to work a relatively easy and enjoyable matter.

—The bicycle represents a most economical solution to today's transportation problems; it gives individuals from all levels of society an opportunity to participate in and enjoy a means of personal mobility which is socially, economically and environmentally beneficial.

—The bicycle allows new friends to be encountered; the bicyclist can speak to the pedestrian; the bicycle is an excellent tool for "people watching."

—The bicycle allows participation in family-oriented activity; it promotes togetherness.

—The bicycle allows individuals to gain wholesome exercise and personal physical fitness.

—The bicycle brings about reform in costume by the use of freer clothing.

—The bicycle offers a comparatively unstructured experience of the environment and provides an opportunity to get close to nature. It affords a means of free and independent locomotion through a variety of spaces. Bicycling provides an opportunity to become sensitized to the landscape as well as to people, thus strengthening the bond between people and ecology.

—The bicycle offers opportunities for sensuous experiences beginning with the sensation of motion and including the ageless joy of the free ride. Smelling the scents of nature and home cooked food while bicycling is most pleasant.

—Mild demands are placed upon the individual for maneuvering skills and intellectual judgements.

—The bicycle aids in reducing traffic congestion in urban and suburban areas and represents a partial solution to congested highways.

—The bicycle creates no air or noise pollution (except a very friendly tic-tic-tic of the gears).

—The bicycle is small in size; it requires very little of the earth's resources. No fuel is required for motion, only manpower.

JV's Dropped By Huskies Yesterday, 7-2

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

A Prodigous two run homer by Mike Phillips far over the 350 foot marker in left field in the second inning helped back righthander Glen Campbell's four hit pitching as the Little Redmen went on to humble Springfield College 11-1 in the opener of a Saturday doubleheader before dropping the nightcap 3-2.

The Redmen bats finally came alive for the first time this season. Phillips' blast with Steve Newell aboard in the third propelled UMass to a 2-1 advantage. From thence the Redmen never let up with Ken Brewer banging out three of the nine Redman base knocks good for three "ribbies" the yearlings coasted to an easy 11-1 verdict.

Campbell, after allowing a quick tally to the Chiefs, blanked the hosts the rest of the way. The tall righty stranded 6 runners via free passes, KO'd four, and dished up but four scratch singles in registering the impressive win.

After Phillips powered the visitors into the lead to stay, the JV's rubbed it in with a six run package to add to a 5-1 lead. The winners picked up a two run package in the six ran package

After Phillips powered the visitors into the lead to stay, the JV's rubbed it in with a six run package to add to a 5-1 lead. The winners picked up a two run package in the sixth as Ken Brewer plated Tony Serino with a double and scored on a single by Mike Phillips.

UMass put the lid on the opener with six runs in the ninth on five hits. Ken Brewer's booming two run triple was the key blow that sent the Redmen merrily on their way until they tangled with the Chiefs in the nightcap.

In quest of a sweep Coach Wilson sent ace lefty Steve Merrill to the kill, but the mound stalwart was touched for a three run fifth that plummeted the Chiefs to a 3-2 win and a split in the doubleheader.

Merrill was nursing a 2-0 lead until the fatal fifth when a walk, a pair of stolen bases, and three singles pushed across the necessary runs for the winners. In all Merrill issued only four hits, walked two, and fanned five in a seven inning performance.

A walk to Tony Serino leading off the fourth eventually led to the first run of the game. A fielder's choice and Ken Brewer's line single drew first blood for the visitors. In the fifth Merrill ripped a two out triple which preceded Tony Serino's RBI single which eventually closed out the scoring for UMass.

Once again Steve Merrill looked sharp on the hill but the Redman bats cooled considerably in the nightcap as the Chiefs bunched three of their four hits in the fifth to provide the margin of victory.

Yesterday in the cold and rain behind Varsity Field, there was no solace for the Little Redmen as their record slipped to 3-4 via a 7-2 setback at the hands of the UConn JV's.

A six run Husky explosion in the seventh provided the damage which obliterized a warly lead. Starter Ed Kurr had looked sharp until that point but was reached for three runs on a pair of hits as many walks and an error.

Singles by Ed Kurr, Ken Brewer, and Steve Newell had accounted for the go ahead runs in the third. With Kurr carving a two hitter until the seventh, it looked as though the Redmen would sneak back above the .500 level. But then came the barrage.

After Kurr was raked from the hill, reliever Eric Levine weathered more of the storm. A sharp bases loaded single to center by Sinatro chased home two more Huskies as starter and winner, Jones, kept the hosts at bay to register the triumph.

UMass once again has suffered from inconsistency from the dish. Limited to but four hits, the runs were but too few and far between. Walks hurt the Redman fortunes as Kurr's own wildness spelled his own disaster.

The JV's now limping with a 3-4 overall mark hike to Hanover N.H. to meet Dartmouth College JV's tomorrow at 3 PM.

Netmen Host UConn Today

By SINCLAIR FOSTER
MDC Staff

In their last home match before the middle of March, the UMass netmen will face the Huskies of UConn at 3 p.m. this afternoon. The Huskies have been hovering around the .500 mark all season long, as they are the only Yankee Conference team that will have played all five teams in the conference by championship time.

UConn's fourth conference opponent will be the Redmen, as UConn sports a 2-0 mark, beating New Hampshire 5-4, and clobbering Maine 8-1. The Huskies have also played Vermont, but at the time of this article's writing the results were unavailable.

The 5-2 Redmen will be facing a "stronger than usual UConn team," said Coach Kosakowski. They will have three returning lettermen in the first, fourth and sixth positions. Also among UConn's finest will be the number one man from last year's freshman squad.

Two transfers, Alan Peck and Tom Ulrich will complete the Huskie lineup as both teams prepare for the conference championships this coming weekend.

Thus far, Tufts and Holy Cross are the two teams that both UMass and UConn have faced, and the outcomes of those matches shed some light on today's contest. Tufts downed UConn 5-4, two days before the Bostonian team came to Amherst. At home, the Redmen soundly swamped Tufts in 7-2 torm, and looked impressive throughout.

As far as the Crusaders are concerned, both Yankee Conference teams came up with wins, UConn by a 5-4 margin, and UMass winning 6-3. In both match-ups the Redmen came out on top, and if any prognostications can be afforded, UMass clearly looks to get the edge.

Coach Kosakowski does not expect an easy win, and is being especially cautious after the Rhode Island blunder last Friday. The playing status of Steve Ferber, the Redmen's number four man, is still up in the air. Kosakowski might just rest Ferber until the Conference championships so as to really surprise the opposition.

Today's visitors have had a good deal of exposure to tight matches, having had three 5-4 matches, emerging with victories in two. In comparison, the home netmen have yet to play in a match that went right down to the wire, and if this afternoon's contest tightens up, no doubt the Huskies will have some experience to fall back upon.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The past two years have not been easy for those born under Leo, Taurus, Scorpio and Aquarius. Tremendous improvement is indicated, beginning in June, especially for Taurus and Leo.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Desire for change is strong, but there are numerous details to be considered. Don't be afraid of delay. Take time to check out essentials. Restless relative is best ignored.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Expenditures should be examined. You may be paying for something not received. Check values, requirements. Budget should not be stretched to breaking point. Take inventory.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Views are expansive. Take mate, partner into confidence. You need added cooperation. Refuse to base efforts on promise, illusion. Get information in writing. Then you avoid broken promises.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Associates may argue. Maintain neutral stance. Do what must be done, within rules and regulations. Overcome temptation to make radical move. Even course now is constructive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Obtain hint from Cancer message. Some of your hopes, wishes are subject to revision. Friend who made promise may not be in position to fulfill it. Take this in stride. No quarreling.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Fresh outlook is necessary. Getting bogged down in family troubles would be an error. Know this and respond accordingly. Put off property decisions. Facts now are puzzle pieces.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Hold off on journeys. Check reservations. Goal may be something other than currently anticipated. One at a distance tends to garble important message. Read between the lines.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Tendency exists to spread efforts in too many directions. Don't take on more than you can handle. Otherwise, there is emotional and monetary loss. Change routine. Dine out with friend.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be expanding operations at too fast a pace. One close to you requires special consideration. Be aware of details, pitfalls. Partnership angles need more study.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Message from one who had gone out of your life may be received. Key is to maintain sense of proportion. Steer clear of commitment which can only result in needless controversy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lover's quarrel may occur. Don't magnify it. Strive to be diplomatic. Avoid saying things which leave emotional scars. Family member may say something out of line. Be understanding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Study Aquarius message. Don't be in too much of a hurry. Applies especially in domestic area. Take time to consider family, domestic requirements. Not good for long-range commitments.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you draw people to you with their problems. You inspire confidence, are concerned with law, medicine. By October, you get chance for greater happiness through self-expression. One who seems indifferent will become close; you will be happier.

Answer to Yesterday's Puzzle

Redmen Subdue Terriers, 11-1

By DAN KAMAL
MDC Staff

The only question yesterday afternoon was whether the rain would hold out long enough for the game to be official, as UMass trounced Boston University, 11-1 at Earl E. Lorden Field.

In upping its record to 11-4, the Redman nine came up with a good all-around performance. Jack Bernardo, Chip Baye, and Tom White combined for a four-hit, 13-strikeout pitching gem, and the Redmen hitters banged out 13 hits off two Terrier hurlers. BU's record dropped to 3-6 with yesterday's loss.

UMass broke open a scoreless ballgame with a four-run outburst in the third inning. Billy Ryan opened the home half of the third by drawing a base on balls from Terrier starter Bill Babcock, and moved to second on a sacrifice by Bernardo. Charley Manley, who is now batting at a torrid .367 clip, followed with a single moving Ryan over to third and moved to second when the throw went through to the plate.

Jack Conroy drove home Ryan with the first Redman run with a squeeze bunt. Manley came home on a wild pitch, Mark Palau singled to knock Conroy in, and Brian Martin, who had reached on an error, came in on another BU miscue.

The Redmen increased their lead to 5-0 in the fifth when Martin singled home Manley who had doubled for his sixth hit in the last two games.

Both Manley brothers reached base in the sixth inning via walks, and Earl romped home with the sixth UMass run on a Conroy single.

With Baye having taken over for Bernardo in the seventh, the visitors broke the shutout with their only run of the game. An infield hit, an error, and an RBI-single by Dan Osmanski accounted for the BU tally.

UMass dispelled the Terriers' thoughts of a comeback with a five-hit, five-run eighth inning that was aided by two costly BU errors. The big blast in that inning was a triple by Dan Esposito, a line shot to right field that had Terrier right-fielder Osmanski completely baffled.

DUGOUT DATA: Coach Dick Bergquist was quite pleased with the performance of his pitchers, particularly Bernardo. The senior righthander worked a strong six innings, allowed two hits, struck out five, walked only one, and had only one ball hit into the outfield off him....

Baye and White were also impressive. Baye, although he was touched for the BU run, had five strikeouts in his two-inning stint and was really firing....White finished up the game by fanning the only three men to face him....

Bergquist was also pleased with the hitting of Esposito who was three for five at the plate....The first five hitters in the order accounted for 11 UMass hits; C. Manley, Conroy, Martin, and Palau all had two hits to go along with Espo's three safeties...

The Redmen travel to Dartmouth Wednesday for a crucial contest with the powerful Indians....

JV Oarsmen Con Cup

By BRONA SIMON
MDC Staff

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.—Saturday was a day of mixed emotions for the UMass Crew Club. In the first race, the Redman varsity eight were long faced after not rowing as well as they could and frustrated by St. Joseph's into second place. In the second contest, the jv boat arrived at the finish line in exhaustion and joy before all opposition to beamingly carry home the President's Cup trophy for their event. All frosh oarsmen from UMass were silent and disappointed when their four and eightman combinations were beaten by the field of contenders, and when their other set of four were not given the opportunity to race because they did not have a boat.

However, when one group of teammates, the jv's, puts on such an overpowering display, it's easy to be contaminated with feelings caused by the disease of victory. Especially when there are a large, gaudy trophy and the dunking of a coxswain involved.

The President's Cup Regatta, sponsored by Marist College, opened ceremonies with the varsity competition after a 45 minute delay. Disorganization was great, as each event took a long time to begin, with crews left just sitting on the water. Here the varsity was forced to make two starts after eternal lining-ups.

Described by coach Mike Faherty as "the worst race the varsity has ever rowed," the Redmen should have been surpassed by more than just St. Joseph's. But, even on a bad day, UMass is tough competition.

St. Joe's captured the event for the third year in a row, when their crew pulled ahead of the Redmen, Marist, Holy Cross, and Villanova, who finished in that order, at about 800 meters into the 2000 meter distance, and stayed sizably ahead for the duration. Finishing times were: St. Joe's, 8:42, UMass, 8:55, and Marist 8:56.

Continually the Hudson waters were increasedly roughing it up, and the incoming tide was getting stronger, worsening rowing conditions and slowing down the times.

Waiting quite a while again at the starting line, the Redman jv's got off to a very bad start, and St. Joe's and Holy Cross were the leaders at 500 meters. Then the Redmen gathered themselves together and surgingly made up for lost ground. 1000 meters through, UMass overcame Holy Cross and a threatening Marist, in on St. Joe's, and magnificently overrode the Philadelphians by a length. The 8:01.4 victory fulfilled Coach Faherty's Friday prediction that "the jv's have a more than adequate chance to win." The trailers were St. Joe's at 8:05.9, Marist at 8:11.4, then HC, Merchant Marine's Academy, and Fordham.

In a cardiac, come-from-behind-to-win performance, surrounded their new trophy, and then celebrated their success by heaving cox Jayes into the mucky Hudson.

The promise of lending UMass a four man shell was broken, and frosh, Rich Clair, Jim Kennedy, Chris Kudla, John Lund, and their coxswain Kenny Raymond were denied the right to compete.

Cut down to a two boat race, the Little Redmen, Fred Scalese, Joe Labenski, Mark Brown and Steve Ryan, piloted by Jody Lianides, had to fight the rough waters as well as the Merchant Marines varsity. The bulk of the race was rowed fairly even, but the result was lopsided as MMA came across in 10:12.7, and UMass came across in 10:30.7 and in a boat full of water.

Both freshman boats rowed well. In the eights, Jim Ulwick, Bob Sanderson, John Gombar, Rich Jamara, Phil Kenney, John Curtis, Russ Schott, Kevin Kaylor, and steerer Mike Thompson, kept up, but St. Joe's had too great of a lead for anyone to equal. Marist and Villanova surged at the last minute, and left UMass last.

"The varsity had a bad day alot like the basketball team did against Springfield," Coach Faherty similarized. "The jv's, however, rowed extremely well, and I have no doubts that both our boats will be top-seeded in this Saturday's Callow Cup to determine the number one crew in New England.

Trackmen In Tartan Showdown

By ROBERT MEDEIROS
MDC Staff

The UMass track team will play host to UConn this afternoon. The meet will be a continuation of one of the most intense track rivalries in New England. The meet will see a confrontation between two teams who have dominated the Yankee Conference in track since its inception. The throwing events will start at 3:00 with the running events getting underway at 4:00.

The Redmen will be out to improve their record to 3-1. Their only loss this Spring came in the last event to Northeastern who went on to win the recent BC Relays. UMass and UConn have shown throughout the Spring season that they are capable of achieving top New England honors. This meet will also prove to be a preview of the Yankee Conference Championships which will be held at UMass.

This meet has all the makings of being a typical UMass-UConn match up. If past performances hold true, this meet should go down to the last few events with the winner possibly being decided in the last event. Team depth should play the greatest factor in the final results.

UConn's Ron Evans is one of the most outstanding and versatile athletes in New England. Evans is the recent winner of the decathelon in the BC Relays. Evans will pose a threat to the Redmen cause, and should be involved in some interesting head on battles.

The high jump is Evans' strongest event, but he should receive stiff challenges from Cal Carpenter and Ed Shaughnessy. Competition in the javelin and long jump will see Evans taking on Rocco Petitto and Rip Dyer, respectively. The triple jump will see Evans main competition coming from Mark Robinson and Barron Littlefield.

Ron Wayne and UConn's Dick Spurling will renew their rivalry in the mile and 2 mile. In the Yankee Conference Indoor Championships Wayne won the mile while Spurling was finishing second. The opposite was true in the 2 mile as Spurling was the victor, and Wayne the runner up.

The 880 will also see the continuation of a dual between Dave Evans and Jim Verdon. Verdon will be attempting to avenge his loss to Dave Evans in the Yankee Conference 1000 yard Championship.

The Redmen will have the edge in the sprints and hurdles. The sprinters and hurdles have performed well in recent weeks as seen by their outstanding performances in the BC and Penn Relays.

The throwing events have been the key to the Redmen success this Spring. This will be especially true today as these events represent strong points for both teams. Eddie Arcaro, Peter Natti and Rocco Petitto will provide the impetus in an attempt to secure a UMass advantage in these important events. If the Redmen are to win today's meet, they will have to come up on top in the throwing events.

Gorillas Host Rugged Adelphi In Major Test

By HOWIE BLOOM
MDC Staff

After its sixty minutes of target practice on the Wesleyan goalie Saturday, the Redman lacrosse team will be looking for more of the same as it hosts Adelphi in a game beginning at three o'clock this afternoon.

The Long Island-based club, ranked among the top 20 teams of the nation all season, sports a 5-3 record, having dropped close decisions to Brown (11-7), Cortland (11-7), and Air Force (9-7), while defeating MIT (20-5), Middlebury (11-4), Colgate (22-1), Rutgers (10-6), and Towson (17-2).

"One of the truly better teams around", as Coach Dick Garber put it, Adelphi is enjoying its best season in several years and chances are there will be no repeat of last Saturday's laugher.

Controlling the play for the visitors will be attackmen Russ Burton, Charlie Arnone, and crease attackman Terry Wallace. At the midfield position Sammy Oldick will lead the rush along with Dan Mayer, a high school teammate of Redman Charlie Hardy.

Adelphi has been running three midfield units this season, much like UMass. Their starting team is the one which stands to give Gorilla goalie Bruce Crawford the toughest time though with Garber rating it as being "very, very good". Every player on the Adelphi squad is an experienced Long Island lacrosser, that part of the country being the hotbed of the sport.

Giving the visitors the toughest time this afternoon should be leading scorers Hardy, four goals and 19 assists, Paul Ritch, fifteen goals and 5 assists, and Phil Sheridan, 11 goals and one assist. If Hardy keeps up his early season pace, he could break former Redman Tom Malone's one season assist record of 44.

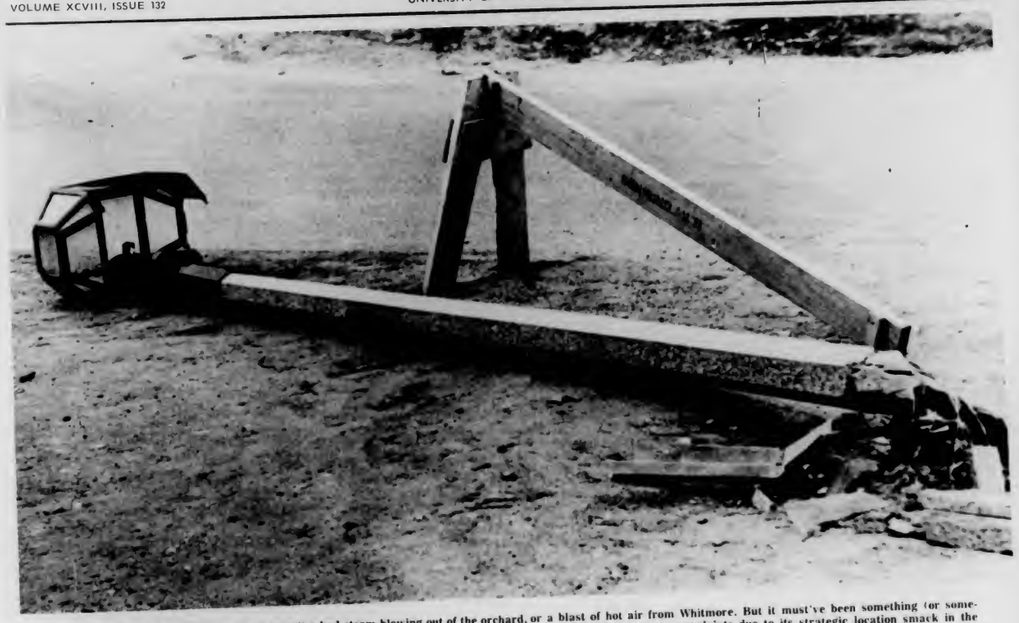
"The Adelphi game will be our first of three in what should be a really tough week with Farleigh Dickinson on Thursday and Connecticut on Saturday", Garber warned. With only one day of rest separating each of these games, the Redmen had better be prepared for some aching bones come next Sunday morning.

Today In Sports

LACROSSE-Adelphi at UMass, 3 p.m. Garbers Gorillas take on another of the top teams in the country in this contest. The stickmen are 5-3 coming into this game.

TRACK-UConn at UMass, 3 p.m. This is the second meet of the year on the new UMass Olympic track and pits the top two teams in the Yankee Conference against each other in probably the hottest track rivalry in New England. UConn has a long unbeaten streak coming into this meet.

TENNIS-UConn at UMass, 3 p.m. Coach Steve Kosakowski's netmen are coming off a big Yankee Conference win at Rhode Island and are preparing for the league championships next week. This match should be a good warmup as the Huskies will also be at these championships.



GOLF-UMass at A.I.C. against the Yellow Jackets and UConn. Match begins at 1 p.m. with Dick Page's undefeated linksters gunning for their sixth and seventh wins of this season, while preparing for defense of their conference title next week.

Charged With Operating 'Bar'

Grayson Seven Face General Court

By BOB CALLAHAN
MDC Staff

With a large body of support totaling approximately sixty people, the seven residents of Grayson House in Orchard Hill went before the General Court last evening to answer to 5 charges brought against them by Asst. Area Coordinator Mr. Nicholas F. Boys.

The charges concerned the sale of alcholic beverages by the seven operators of the alleged "Bar". The group pleaded not guilty to all five charges after they were read by Robert Rochford who presided over the session.

The seven defendants were represented by Henry Bouffard, who is a student Senator from Dickinson House. Representing Mr. Boys was Mr. Mike West.

In a preliminary motion, the speaker for the defense brought up a motion for dismissal of the charges. He stated that his reasons were that the charges may be duplicated in District Court and that the hearing was a violation of the Defendant's 14th amendment. The motion was denied by the court.

Mr. West then spoke for Boys saying that the alleged bar was in violation of State and campus regulations and that it was not licensed and that it sold to minors. He added that Mr. Forsythe, Interim Director of Security recommended that the case be brought to the General Court rather than to the District Court of Northampton.

Speaking for the Defendants, Boulfard noted several bars which had and are operating on campus with the Administration's knowledge. He felt that the University is at fault because of the fact that it is bringing charges only after action by the District Court.

Mr. Boys when questioned by the Defense stated to the Court that he was aware of alcohol on the seventh floor and that he became aware of the situation after being invited to have a beer. Boys also told the Court that he "advised" of the dangers of the "Bar" but he never told the group that the bar had to be closed. Boys who has been Asst. Area Coordinator since Sept. stated that he was personally aware of "alcoholic activity" in other dorms in the area but he did not mention that it was illegal and that they should be closed. He also brought out that when talking to the Grayson Counsellor he never told him that the bar had to be closed.

After this round of questioning in which Boys had been extremely hesitant at times, Paul Quinn the counsellor of the seventh floor took the stand to answer questions by Mike West.

Quinn stated to the Court that he was aware of some of the University policies concerning alcoholic beverages. At a meeting April 5, he was told to see that no trouble occurs "upstairs". He said that he took no action to see that the Bar was closed. He added that he had personally seen Dr. Barron frequenting the bar. Continuing his testimony he stated to the court evidence of a number of parties and dances on the campus at which beer had been served for a fee. He added that no administrator ever objected to these functions being held.

Miss Lynne McCoy took the stand after Mr. Quinn. The area Coordinator told the Court that she took no action to shut down the operation. She added that she never viewed her role as a police function and she felt that students are responsible for their own actions.

Due to printing deadlines the story is unable to be covered in its entirety. Tomorrows Collegian will carry coverage of the final part of the meeting and the verdict declared by the Court.

Pierpont's Project-10

An Attempt At Humanism

By BARBARA ANN CLEARY
MDC Staff

Project 10, the experimental program in Pierpont, evaluating and examining itself, has broadened its operations and reaffirmed its objectives.

In an informal discussion last week, new and old participants and advisors of the Project discussed their experiences and plans for the future.

Although the Project is in the process of structural changes, it has basically the same goals as when it started.

One of the basic goals is to make education personalized. The student must take full responsibility for his education from design to execution.

The Project rests on the assumption that the living aspect is as or more important than the classroom experience. They are therefore trying to create a living structure that is humane and non-alienating.

An under graduate's education is no longer simply to develop expertise, but is also a place where he discovers his identity and what it means to be a human being.

How is this principle carried out in P—10? One of the major areas is the academic program which is now the strongest it has ever been. More and more courses are being offered and there is more and more student participation in the course design and orientation.

The goal of the teachers and students who are most active is to integrate what is in real life with whatever wisdom is in books.

An example of this is the Five Course Plan. In this faculty and students will get involved in special interest groups. At the moment they are doing studies from Nietche and Marcuse to studies in existential philosophy to groups doing traveling in Washington.

The general feeling is that given the resources available and certain misunderstandings, the Project had done the best it could. One of the major misunderstanding was that a lot of people came in with the idea that Project 10 was there to give them things rather than facilitate their own efforts.

Many project achievements and outstanding individuals were mentioned.

The Project has given birth to Free University and Roadarte, the "media collective tribe". These were used as examples to show that the Project is what you make of it, that it is not Utopia, but a starting point for a lot of really fine things.

As one participant said, "We don't give people everything themselves, they have to go out and do it for themselves, but they are given every opportunity to do it."

There were many people from the Project who helped to organize May Day activities. Recently, workshops in non-violent revolution were held.

There have been seminars dealing with drugs and the problems involved in the use of heroin and psychedelics.

This all contributes to a feeling of involvement in a cultural, political, and educational adventure.

This has also spawned a guerilla theatre troupe which has performed at the Dow recruitment and at Hampshire College, and continues to exist.

One of the most successful programs is the effort to deal creatively with the drug problem.

Much of this activity is an attempt to get things out of the theoretical plane and get the feeling of ideas.

The seminars themselves are not of the type usually given in the University, but deal with more specific topics.

In addition, there is a series of guest speakers, described as "old and young funky people." Most of these visitors, also known as Project Fellows, are people who have made a mark in experimental education.

Morris Mitchell, involved in the Trans-World College in New York, the Nielsons, directors and founders of the New Experimental College in Denmark, and the twenty-four year old president of Franconia College were recent speakers.

This program is the result of an orientation toward cultural enrichment which is looking for more and more interflow between the Project and the real world.

A RARE VIEW-Pierpont isn't usually this quiet, or this solemn. But there's an experiment going on within, and the results could benefit the whole campus in the search for more humane living conditions. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt.)

The purpose of Project 10 is to create a condition for alternate ways for self-discovery and to create an atmosphere in which people can be liberated. They hope to be as diverse and pluralistic as possible. There is a heavy experimental emphasis and pressure to apply what you are learning.

Recently a Project 10 long range planning committee developed a proposal for a semi-autonomous college with its own core faculty and perhaps eventually its own degree granting capacity.

This is structurally similar to Orchard Hill, but the project will attempt to retain its own peculiar character.

There will be more of a tutorial arrangement with faculty who will work out individual learning programs. Maximum options will be provided.

The project is part of a movement across the country to decentralize large universities into component units. The aim is to let clusters of faculty and students get involved in having greater freedom and maximum options.

The ultimate aim of P—10 is to become an experimental college, and it is now growing in that direction.

They would like to see the Project as a model for what can go on in a dorm as far as the security system, co-ed environment, staff organization, and courses.

Next year there will be a tripartite head of residence consisting of psychology counseling, community development, and administration, with teams of undergraduates in each department.

The people who are really involved in the Project see the University as not merely a training place for a job, but as a place to learn how to learn and how to live.

One of the major obstacles which has been encountered so far is a feeling of lack of real commitment on the part of the University to make this idea a reality. What is necessary is the commitment of a core faculty, the waiver of core requirements, and an end to living arrangements which are not humane. This would involve permission to knock down walls where necessary in the maximization of alternatives.

The Project is planning to become a four year program next year. After a recruitment and publicity campaign this semester, it will begin with four classes of students next year instead of just freshmen and sophomores as it is now.

It is believed that the addition of juniors and seniors will add more stability and activism.

Included in the expanded program will be an attempt to ameliorate the transition of freshment from high school to college. Often all expectations are lost and the University is seen as just a glorified high school.

Therefore, freshman seminars will be instituted which are modes of inquiry, instead of survey courses. It is anticipated that these will be more challenging and also more stimulating.

The idea of Project Scholars is also being planned. Individuals will come up with proposals for independent study and spend a semester working on it with an advisor.

It is also hoped that individual concentration B.A. majors will come there to live. If someone wants to be in a place which is styling itself toward an experimental college and still get the best out of the larger university, then the new Project might be a good place to consider living and learning.

The Project will also be welcoming back ex-project people who would like to consider returning.

Project 10 is now open for application. The idea of mutual selection has been emphasized, and applicants are encouraged to come and talk to Charles Adams, the director, in the Project 10 office (545-0871) or anyone else involved in the project, such as Dave Hoffman, Denise Bisaillon, and Dave Dunkin, among others who can be found in Pierpont.

There is also a written application, which advises "If you want an alternative to this application, write your own. Feel free to use some other medium in place of in addition to written answers...Stay loose and try to enjoy your application."

Questions, all of which are optional range from "why do you want to be a part of P—10? to "Give us a rationale for your existence" to "Title this application."

There will be selection committee to read applications and where possible to talk to individuals.

Nixon On Television Thursday

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon will hold a White House news conference that will be open to live radio and television coverage Thursday at 9 p.m. EDT.

The session in the East Room will precede a presidential departure about 12 hours later for an abbreviated trip to California and the Western White House. A prime purpose of the flight will be to welcome back the First Marine Division-the last to return from Vietnam.

Nixon originally had considered spending a week on the coast but now will be coming back to Washington next Monday and holding a meeting with Republican congressional leaders the following day.

Nixon's latest news conference at the White House was on March 4, but on April 16 he held a question-and-answer panel session with representatives of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and White House correspondents of the Associated Press and United Press International.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler gave no indication Tuesday that the President was prepared to produce any major announcements at the one coming up Thursday. Ziegler said Nixon would go directly to questions.

The press secretary told questioners that the shortening of the California trip did not actually mean a change in plans because there had been only talk that the President would spend five or six days at his home by the sea at San Clemente, Calif., and never any formal firm decision to remain on until May 6.

Officer Installation Tonight

Student Senate Back To Normal

By BETH GOODELL
MDC Staff

Now that the Student Senate has concluded its lengthy deliberations on budgets for next year's student-funded activities, it will be getting back to routine legislation. Following the installation of the newly elected officers tonight, the Senate will follow an agenda that has piled up during the past month of budget debate.

One of the items which will probably be considered tonight is an act which would set up a fund to be used for loans to students who are appealing legal decisions. The fund for next year would be set at $2500.

The purpose of the proposed fund is to make money available for the prosecution or defense of issues of interest to undergraduate students. Any undergrad would be eligible to apply for a loan or a guarantee of payment for the purpose of paying the legal fees and costs of an appeal to a Superior Court in the state. The request could not exceed one half of the costs.

The Legal Defense Fund would be administered by a committee composed of the Student Senate President, Vice President, Treasurer, Chairman of the Student Matters Committee, and the General Counsel of the Senate, as voting members. The Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, or his delegate, and the University Ombudsman would be non-voting members.

The committee would decide on whether to accept a student's written request. It would apply the following criteria in making its decision: 1) need of the student; 2) likelihood of success of the appeal; and 3) the total cost involved.

Loans granted from the Fund would be subject to repayment in full within six months of either the final decision rendered by the Court, the separation of the student from the University, or the completion of any sentence served. No interest would be charged prior to the date that repayment is due. If any money is spent from a guarantee of payment, it would be repaid the same as a loan.

The Student Senate would also have the power to use up to one half of the Fund at any one time for any suit on behalf of the Student Government Association. It would take a two-thirds vote of the Senate to make such a commitment. Criteria governing such usage would include the interest and effect upon the general student body, the likelihood of success, and the cost involved.

Money for next year's fund has already been included in the Senate's budget. The Fund itself will not be established, though, until accepted by the Senate.

The Senate has reached its final figure for the Student Activities Tax (SAT) for next year. It has been set at $35.50, one dollar lower than last year's. Senate Budgets Committee Chairman Kevin Kulakowski has pointed out that the cut in the tax is also accompanied by the elimination of the class tax, which had averaged around $4/student in past years.

When the Senate first started considering budgets a couple of months ago, it looked like there might be at least a $4 increase in the SAT. But the Budgets Committee and the Senate made various cuts in many of the groups' requests, finally ending at the $35.50 figure.

Kulakowski says the Administration must now accept the tax figure, for it to become official. He has no doubt but that it will be accepted. Unlike last year, when the Administration for a time considered rejecting the Senate's figure, this year's proposed tax has been widely publicized, according to Kulakowski. The Administration's objection last year was over the fact that the tax was not set early enough by the Senate for students to be adequately informed.

Two items printed on tonight's agenda which will be removed, rather considered, deal with room telephones, and with a concerts commission.

The measure concerning dorm phones calls for the installation of at least floor phones for every dorm lacking individual room phones. The measure is being taken to area government for consideration instead of the Senate. Sponsors William Spinn and Larry Ladd say that their constituents in Northeast have been pressuring them to do something about inadequate service in their dorms.

The item calling for the establishment of a permanent Concert Commission will be removed from the agenda because the Senate last week rejected an interim committee's request for funds for next year for a permanent commission. The Commission, if funded, would have been set up to organize concerts, filling the vacancy created by the abolition of class government.

IT WASN'T A GREAT DAY FOR A PICNIC but nobody seemed to care last Sunday when Central Area sponsored an outdoor concert with free music and chicken. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt.)

Stop A Bus Thursday

There was a meeting last night at Amherst College to discuss stopping the bus going to the Springfield Induction Center Thursday morning at the Northampton Draft Board.

A spokesman for the group mentioned the connection this has with the actions in Washington this May. The action is intended to be a part of the larger actions that will take place around the country and around the world this May.

Demonstrators will meet Thursday morning in front of the Northampton Draft Board. All are urged to come even if they only come to support the demonstration and not actually take part. People are asked to be there at six o'clock.

Bike Riders Declare War

A Center for the recovery of Stolen Bicycles has been established. It is a reactionary attempt to recover bicycles that have been ripped off on this campus. Things are tough when your bike gets ripped off and the center will attempt to recover stolen bikes and return them to their rightful riders. If you have had your bicycle stolen and would like to see it recovered or would be interested in working in this center, Write: E. J. Roche c/o the Collegian.

Draft Director's Memo Outlines CO Status

The following information is the latest Local Board Memorandum issued by National Selective Service Director Curtis W. Tarr. It is intended to serve as a directive to all local boards in considering applications for Conscientious Objector status. All persons opposed to the war and/or participation in war should read it very carefully. If you qualify, or even think that you might qualify as a CO under the guidelines set down in these LBM, you should see a draft counselor as soon as possible.

Also please show this to friends and save it for future reference.

This memorandum discusses certain criteria, based on the provisions of Section 6(j) of the Military Selective Service Act of 1967 as amended, and decisions of the courts, which should guide local boards and appeal boards in considering registrants' claims for conscientious objector classification.

2. Compulsory military service legislation in the United States has always recognized conscientious objection. The law as it exists today in statutory form requires for classification in Classes I-O or I-A-O:

(a) That a registrant be opposed to participation in war in any form;

(b) That his objection be founded on religious training and belief; and

(c) That his position be something other than "essentially political, sociological, or philosophical views, or merely personal moral code."

WAR IN ANY FORM

3. The clause "war in any form" should be interpreted in the following manner:

(a) A registrant who desires to choose the war in which he will participate in not a conscientious objector under the law. His objection must be to all wars rather than to a specific war.

(b) A belief in a theocratic or spiritual war between the powers of good and evil does not constitute a willingness to participate in "war" within the meaning of selective service law.

RELIGIOUS TRAINING AND BELIEF

4. The primary test that must be used is the test of sincerity with which the belief is held. The board should be convinced by information presented to it that the registrant's personal history reveals views and actions strong enough to demonstrate that expediency is not the basis on his claim.

5. The belief upon which conscientious objection is based must by the primary controling

5. The belief upon which conscientious objection is based must be the primary controling force in the man's life.

6. The term "religious training and belief" as used in the law may include solely moral or ethical beliefs, even though the registrant himself may not characterize these beliefs as "religious" in the traditional sense, or may expressly characterize them as not "religious."

7. The registrant need not believe in a traditional "God" or a "Supreme Being" to be considered favorably.

8. The registrant's conscientious objection to war must stem from his moral, ethical, or religious beliefs about what is right and should be done and what is wrong and should be shunned, and he must hold these beliefs with the strength of traditional religious conviction.

9. In order for the local board to find that a registrant's moral and ethical beliefs are against participation in war in any form and are held with the strength of traditional religious conviction, the local board should consider the nature and history of the process by which he acquired such beliefs. The registrant must demonstrate that his ethical or moral convictions, once acquired, have directed his life in the way traditional religious convictions of equal strength, depth, and duration have directed the lives of those whose beliefs are clearly founded in traditional religious conviction.

10. Board members should make every effort to weigh the claims of all registrants on the standard of sincerity, not giving particular advantage to a registrant who is learned or glib. The registrant need not use formal or traditional language.

11. A registrant who is eligible for conscientious objection on the basis of moral, ethical, or religious beliefs is not excluded from the exemption simply because those beliefs may influence his views concerning the nation's domestic or foreign policies.

12. The law does not require that a registrant claiming conscientious objection be a member of a "peace church" or any church, religious sect, nor does the law require affiliation with any particular group in order to be classified as a conscientious objector.

13. Where the registrant is or has been a member of a church, religious organization, or religious sect and where the claim of conscientious objection is related to such membership, the board may properly inquire as to the fact of membership, and the teachings of the church, religious organization or religious sect, as well as the registrant's religious activity. However, the fact that the registrant may disagree with or not subscribe to some of the tenets of his church does not necessarily discredit his claim.

14. Boards may not give precedence to one religion over another. All religions or beliefs are to be given equal consideration.

15. Beliefs which are real and valid to some may be incomprehensible to others. Boards are not free to reject beliefs because they consider them "incomprehensible". Their task is to decide whether the beliefs professed by a registrant are sincerely held and whether they govern his action both in word and deed.

EXCLUSIONS FROM CLASSES I-O AND A-O

16. Persons whose beliefs are "essentially political, sociological, or philosophical views, or a merely personal moral code" are ineligible to be classified as a conscientious objector. Such persons consist of two groups:

(a) Those with beliefs of religious, moral, or ethical nature, but whose beliefs are not deeply held, and

(b) Those whose objection to war does not rest at all upon moral, ethical or religious principles, but instead rests solely upon consideration of policy, pragmatism, or expediency.

CLASS I—A—O

17. A registrant claiming Class I-O who is in the opinion of the local board has not provided sufficient evidence to warrant the I-O classification, shall not be classified in Class I-A-O as a compromise.

18. A registrant who is found to be eligible for classification as a conscientious objector should be placed in Class I-A-O when his conscientious objection encompasses only combatant training and service in the armed forces.

What To Do In Case Of Appeal: Don't Panic

Now, with copies of the written summary of my financial situation and a list of all the documents which should be in my file, I keep my appointment with the board.

If possible, I bring a witness with me, preferably someone with whom the board members can identify (such as a clergyman, businessman, or some other fairly "reputable" person). It should be a male because most draft board members are male chauvinists and think that women know nothing about anything, particularly when it relates to the draft. I know that the board may not admit my witness, but it's worth the attempt.

When I enter the inner sanctum, I introduce myself and pass out copies of my statement, which I then read aloud. This ensures that they will at least be familiar with the summary, since I cannot be sure that they have examined any of the document.

When I enter the inner sanctum, I introduce myself and pass out copies of my statement, which I then read aloud, this insures that they will at least be familiar with the summary, since I cannot be sure that they have examined any of the documents I have previously submitted. I also read my list of supporting documents. Then I ask them if they have any questions about the information, or any doubts about the validity of my claim.

As much as possible, I try to remain calm and reasonable, even in the face of their hostility, if there should be any. When they get tired of talking to me or when I have completed the presentation of my information (whichever comes first), they will tell me that they will let me know.

I immediately write up as exact a transcript of the discussion as I can, checking with my witness to make it as complete as possible. Then I send a copy of this to the board of inclusion in my file, sending it Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested. My copy and the receipt, when it comes back, go into my own copy of my file.

Unfortunately, they were not convinced, and I get another I-A in the mail. My draft counselor advises me that I may submit a letter of appeal within thirty days of the date on the classification card, which I do. In the letter, I say again that I am not satisfied with my classification, and that I wish to appeal. I also request another meeting with the Govt. Appeal Agent. As usual, the letter is sent Certified, etc., and I keep a copy for my own records.

Again I meet with the Agent, fill him in on what's been going down and ask for advice. Then I write up the discussion and do the usual bit with it. On his advice, and the advice of my counselor, I add last-minute additional supporting material to my file.

Eventually, my board notifies me that my file has been forwarded to State Headquarters for action by the State Appeal Board. All is now out of my hands. The mysterious body meets and decides my fate. If they reach a unanimous decision to continue my I-A, that is the end of my formal appeals. The board may even send me an induction order with the notification of the Appeal Board's decision. If the decision is not unanimous, but is against me, I have the right to appeal to the Presidential Appeal Board.

In either case, at this point I should consult an attorney who is competent in Selective Service law. If the Appeal Board was unanimous against me, a lawyer will help prepare some steps to either halt the induction or build a defense if I decide to refuse induction. If the appeal is to go on to the Presidential Appeal level, he will help prepare a legal brief to add as additional supporting evidence or at least to advise me of my chances and options beyond that point.

In other words, there is a wide range of appeals available to any registrant who feels he has received an undesirable classification. Use them for your protection and see a draft counselor to help you use them in the most effective way. Peace.

Whenever you receive a classification card from your friendly local, it includes a statement saying that you have thirty days in which to file an appeal of the classification. You should use this appeal right at any time you are not satisfied with the classification. All you have to do is write to the board, tell them that you do not want the classification they have assigned you, that you wish to appeal through a personal appearance, and that you would like an appointment with the Government Appeal Agent before the personal appearance. It helps, but is not required, to tell them what classification you would like.

For illustrative purposes, let's assume that I just graduated and have been reclassified I—A. The classification card arrived in today's mail. After a brief moment of panic, I realize that it's finally time to act. I hire me hither to my nearest draft counselor and sob on his shoulder. We decide that I have a fair chance for a III—A hardship deferment because my wife just had a baby and can't work, her father just got laid off from his job because of Nixon's latest move to stimulate the economy and can't support her, my folks are putting two more kids through school and are just barely making ends meet, and we have doctor bills up the proverbial.

With the counselor's assistance, I compose a letter outlining the situation, add a couple of tear-drops for effect, and mail it to my board. (Certified, return receipt requested, of course.) In the letter I ask for a III—A classification. They send back the appropriate form, and back I go to my counselor. We fill out the form and return it to them. (Certified, etc.) After due deliberation, they send me another I—A.

Aghast, I rush back to my draft counselor. He tells me to appeal it. Together we compose another letter:

"Dear Draft Board,

"My name is John Q. Public, SS #XYZ (note the dehumanizing use of numbers...just like the university). I recently received a I—A classification which I wish to appeal. I should be classified III—A on the basis of extreme hardship. Please schedule me for a personal appearance so that I may discuss my circumstances with you.

"In addition, I would like a appointment with the Gov. Appeal Agent prior to the personal appearance.

"Thank you, etc., etc., etc."

This letter is also sent Certified Mail, Return Receipt Requested, as is all material sent to the board, and a copy is kept in my personal file at home.

Finally, I meet with the Appeal Agent. Like most, he is an attorney, and his loyalties are, at best, divided. He is supposed to advise me of the best way to proceed within the law in seeking the classification I desire, but if he thinks I don't deserve it, he will tell the board. So I don't tell him anything I don't want the board to know. But I dutifully note his advice and consider it in planning my future actions. I also write down, verbatim, a transcript of our discussion and send a copy to the board to be included in my file.

Supposedly, I would have brought all the available documentation of my financial situation with me, and he would have told me where my case was weak and what I could do to make it stronger. My next step, then is to seek out the strengthening material, so that I can bring it with me when I meet the board.

Finally, before I go to my personal appearance, I write a summary of my situation and prepare a list of all the documents which should be in the file. I run off enough copies of each of these to hand to each member of the board.

result of military-related injuries, you are IV—A and may not be drafted.

MINISTERS AND MINISTERIAL STUDENTS—If you are a full-time divinity student or a practicing clergyman, you qualify for a IV—D. Some legal interpretations as to who qualifies for a IV—D are yet to be made. (The law requires that a minister must spend at least 100 hours a month practicing to qualify. As yet, the law does not believe, apparently, that one can serve God unless one is wearing a collar.) This is an area still open to challenge in the higher courts.

OVER AGE—If you're over 35, you are V—A, over age. To all practical purposes, you are over age once you have your 26th birthday. There are some exceptions, but in general, life begins at 26.

CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR—This is not a religious or pacifist deferment. People with religious and/or pacifist backgrounds are of course eligible for the I—O or I—A—O classifications, but others may also qualify. The law provides CO status for those opposed to participation in war (Note: it does not say opposed to war) for religious, moral, philosophical, or ethical reasons. My experience is that nearly everyone who takes the time to think about it is a conscientious objector. (In fact, it seems to me that the Selective Service attacks the problem backwards. Those who want to serve in the military should be asked to request status as conscientious participators, and made to prove that their conscience and training require that they kill people.) The I—A—O classification is for those willing to serve as noncombatants in the military, usually as medics; the I—O is not required to serve in the military, but must work for two years "in the national health, safety, or interest." Never request CO status without first consulting a draft counselor.

WARNING! Selective Service regulations change frequently. This material is intended to be used only as a guide to suggest various alternatives to the draft to you. To be sure that you qualify for a given deferment, or to get advice on what to do about your draft problem, consult a draft counselor.

Do not, under any circumstances, request advice from your local board or from a draft board clerk. The information they give is frequently wrong or misleading; at times your conversation might actually prejudice your chances of getting or keeping a deferment.

Passes Senate Committee

Draft Bill Jumps Hurdle

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Armed Services Committee approved Tuesday a bill extending the draft for two more years and permitting President Nixon to end deferments for college undergraduates.

The bill, close to the version requested by the Nixon administration, is expected to face a strong fight in the Senate from Indochina war foes and advocates of an all-volunteer army seeking to limit the extension to just one year.

Consideration is expected in the Senate in about two weeks. The current draft law expires June 30.

The two-year duration is the same as voted earlier by the House. But the Senate version carries only a $987 million increase in pay and allowances-the figure sought by the administration-rather than the $2.7 billion approved by the House.

Both versions would give the President the authority he sought to end deferments of college undergraduates.

The Senate version would make this effective with enactment of the legislation, thus permitting all students now in college to finish their undergraduate education.

The House version would make the authority retroactive to April 23, 1970, making students who entered college last fall eligible for the draft at the end of the current academic year.

Panel Discusses Pressure Groups

Maurice A. Donahue, former president of the Massachusetts Senate, will moderate a panel on "The Role of Pressure Groups" in state government tonight.

The last in a series of four, the panel will be in room 174-176 of the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m. Prof. Donahue is Walsh-Saltonstall professor of practical politics, in the UMass government department.

Discussing the topic of pressure groups will be; panelists Dean C. Cushing, executive vice president of Massachusetts Merchants, Inc.; Joseph P. Hagerty, Jr., Esq., manager of American Mutual Insurance Alliance; Thomas M. Joyce, Esq., banks and utilities; Walter P. Muther, Esq., legislative counsel of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts; and Edward Sullivan, business agent and secretary-treasurer of the Building Service Union, Local 254.

The public is invited, free of charge.

Strike Poll Gains Strong Backing

The UMass Strike Organizing Committee is holding its second meeting tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Room 175 in the Campus Center. At its previous meeting, held a week and a half ago, a majority of those present voted to organize a one-day strike on May 5th as a memorial for the six students who were murdered in May of 1970 at Kent State and Jackson State.

It was decided that a referendum would be held among the residents of each dorm on campus in order to estimate support that such a strike would receive. This referendum has not yet been completed, but returns that have come in so far show an overwhelming backing. John Adams dorm approved the strike by 77% of their ballots; John Quincy Adams by 84%; Collidge Tower by 80%; and 50% of the ballots from Crabtree favored a strike.

At this evening's meeting, plans will be made for conducting numerous workshops and a general memorial service. An open invitation to attend is extended to every person who is interested in contributing ideas and effort for the May 5th strike. The anti-war spirit did not end on April 24th in Washington.

Three Mayday Reps Will Blitz Tonight

A team of three Mayday representatives from Washington, D.C. will discuss the "Mayday Action" tonight at 10 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

The purpose of the Mayday blitz is to give last minute information to area colleges, and to counteract government propaganda, according to one of the team. He said Mayday will be a series of non-violent acts of civil disobedience on a mass scale, designed to shut down normal government operations until the war in Indochina is ended.

The team also reported that a rock and folk concert will take place on May 1st & 2nd, around the Washington monument. They reported that the following groups had already agreed to perform: Pete Seeger, Tim Hardin, Mother Earth, Richie Havens, Arlo Gurthrie, Phil Ochs, Jesus Christ Superstar cast, J. Giles Band, James Brown, MC5, and Peter Yarrow and Mary Travers. At the same time, a people's fair of crafts will take place, and members of the team invited people to show their own products. Other events and details will be discussed at the meeting.

Members of the team are Jim Walsh, Jennifer Windsor, and Art Heitzer

Dada Features Bagged Poetry

Faculty and students will chirp, twitter, roar, groan, and recite--some of them simultaneously--in a presentation of Dada-Surrealist poetry in SBA 120 at 8 this evening. The poetry in paper bags will be handed round and the audience invited to make up its own collage poems in the Dada-Surrealist vein.

One of the guest readers will be Prof. Mary Ann Caws of Hunter College, who is giving two talks on Surrealism and Poetry today and tomorrow. Today's lecture, "The Soluble Fish and the Useless Vessel," will be at 3:30 in Herter 227. Tomorrow's lecture, "Circus Scene and Games: a Dada-Surrealist Approximation", will be at 3:30 in the Converse Hall Red Room at Amherst College.

Stenotypy Course Offerred Next Fall

Stenotype is keyboard shorthand, combining a fairly simple machine and a highly skilled operator. It is used by court reporters and others who must make verbatim records of words as they are spoken.

The Division of Continuing Education of the UMass and the Continuing Education Department of the Amherst Public Schools will join forces to offer a course in stenotypy beginning in the fall. A meeting of all those considering taking the course will be held tomorrow evening at 7:30 p.m. in Room 905-909 of the Campus Center.

The course will meet once a week for two hours an evening on Wednesdays at the Junior High School beginning Sept. 8. The preliminary meeting this month is designed to determine the amount of interest in the course and to provide interested people with information about stenotypy as a field.

Interested people may call or write the Division of Continuing Education at the University

Another Kind Of Revolution

A "COLLEGE LIFE" special tonight at 8 o'clock in the S.U. Ballroom will mainly feature Dr Ernie Wilson of Philadelphia speaking on the black man's search for alternatives (i.e. revolution), in relation to the ultimate alternative, Jesus Christ.

Dr Wilson, evangelist and teacher, a former jazz musician and prize fighter, has traveled extensively in this country, in Europe and Africa speaking to thousands of young people about the revolutionary Jesus.

The very informal program will also feature a "dynamite" gospel singing group. A few students will talk for a few minutes about how Jesus Christ relates in their lives, and a "refreshment - rapping - get acquainted" period will follow. This is an open invitation; but the Black community is especially urged to "check out" this worthwhile experience.

He is a member of the Board of Directors of the Planned Parenthood Federations of America, and the Sex Information and Education Council of the United States (SIECUS). Trustees OK New Program For Ecological Education

A new institute designed to focus the resources of the University of Massachusetts on the problems of the environment has been approved by UMass Board of Trustees.

At its meeting in Auburn Monday, the board approved a set of guidelines for the establishment of the Institute for Man and His Environment. In its first two years the institute will concentrate on the planning, development and implementation of education for graduates and undergraduates. At the same time it will develop a programmatic or problem-solving approach to interdisciplinary research and public service.

The institute will be a statewide facility for teaching, research and service administered by the office of Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, provost and vice-chancellor for academic affairs at the Amherst campus.

"We hope to appoint a director and associate director of the institute within the next month," Dr. Gluckstern said.

The Institue for Man and His Environment will have three main thrusts, Dr. Gluckstern said. "One will be a broad education program so that the average citizen will be able to make value judgments about the environment. A second will be the training of people to evaluate the state of the environment. The third will be research-devising ways of bringing together the aesthetic, the economic and the sociological inputs with engineering and the biological and physical sciences."

Yogi Food Simply Wonderful

"Simply Wonderful" is a yogi restaurant of sorts that will offer a "spiritually and physically beneficial diet" to all those willing to sample it this week in the Berkshire room of the old Student Union.

Lunch prasadam will be offered at 11:30 a.m. and served at 12:00 noon, through Friday May 7th by members of the Bhaktiyoga Society in conjunction with the International Society for Krishna Consciousness.

Food offered to God is called prasadam in sanskrit and it means "mercy", said a spokesman for the group. He said: "In shopping, in preparation and in eating prasadam we are given a chance to remain conscious of Him, to be engaged in His transcendental loving service."

To most people food is the means by which their bodies can be maintained in good health and to satisfy their sense of taste, it was said. The spokesman explained that food offered to God before it is eaten by man "also gives us the purifying strength to maintain our consciousness or awareness of God."

Krishna, or God, requests in the Bhagavad Gita, "Just offer me a leaf, a flower, a fruit or some water with love and devotion and I will accept it." In offering food to God the spokesman explained that only those items are included, plus milk products, because Krishna is called the protector of cows.

The prime ingredient in all preparations is the loving attitude with which the prasadam is prepared, offered and eaten, he continued.

"This love makes God 'transcendentally hungry', the Bhaktiyoga spokesman said. "When the food is nicely prepared, we offer it back to the Source from which everything emanates and by so doing our contaminated consciousnesses become gradually purified and blissful."

Everyone is invited to offer prasadam this week and next. Donations are requested to help cover costs, but are not mandatory.

NO—BUST POLICY for emergency drug patients has been formulated in San Diego, Calif., by the county's district attorney and law enforcement agencies, according to the UCal-Riverside Highlander.

The result is that persons suffering from a drug or alcohol overdose will not be arrested while seeking emergency treatment at authorized emergency clinics. In addition, such clinics, and hospitals, are not required to report persons seeking such aid, nor will the centers be subjected to general observation by law officials seeking to apprehend narcotics users.

Which seems like a sensible attitude.

Useless Gesture

One can usually be assured that all of the Student Senate's "political" maneuvering is fairly harmless to the average student's vital interests. But, usually isn't always and at times, those dedicated denizens of the Campus Center deep lose sight of the right time for making a useless gesture toward freeing their constituency from the harsh realities of this "big businessman's" world.

We are referring to the Student Senate's rather inane initial response to the inevitable raise in room and board fees next year.

The Senate recommended that there "be no increase" in the residence hall and dining commons fee so long as students are forced to pay interest and capital for the construction of facilities they will never own. That coupled with "a moratorium" on the construction of new facilities, a forceful advocation of rent control for Amherst and the formation of a committee which will permanently deal with "non-academic fees" seems to be the Senate's own way of exercising student power.

No doubt the Senators who passed these measures are sincere in their desire to tell the proverbial system to disappear, but the recommendations, with the exception of those forming a committee to keep tabs on room and board rates and advocating rent control for Amherst, are useless and delay furthur the decision which most students want to see; how much more is it going to cost to go to UMass next year?

The Administration's presentation of facts and figures behind the need for the increases, represent what we feel is a sincere effort to help the students. The options presented by Vice-Chancellor Campion during meetings with the Senate are generally viewed as the best available.

The only possible reasons for the Senate's actions Sunday night are those of flexing the Senate's ego. The Senate is trying to make the right point to the wrong people.

We would implore the Senate not to make such gestures, commonly made to depict a feeling of bad faith, and to complete debate and action on the increases students will pay as quickly as possible.

A Time Of Desperation

About a year and a half ago I climbed onto a bus in the middle of the night when I should have been sleeping, and rode for eight hours to participate in what was, up until that time, the largest demonstration ever held in Washington. Or so it seemed anyway. Some would have you believe that the Poor People's March had been bigger. But that was the thing about Washington in November of 1969. You came away with an overwhelming feeling of cameraderie.

It was a very powerful feeling and not only seemed to come from those around you in the crowd, but also seemed to well up mysteriously from within yourself. It was the type of feeling that made people link arms spontaneously in a marching line. It was the type of feeling that made people sing and dance up and down to the tune of "Let the Sunshine In" as performed by the original Broadway cast of Hair. Just the merest mention after the fact would make people who had gone swell up in pride and say "I was there."

For me, the closeness that I remember feeling with the crowd, the feelings of just sheer kinship with the hundreds of thousands of others, were missing this time.

This time there were people who were dedicated, or mad or something like that.

Washington in 1969 started off auspiciously enough for me, I was convinced even while getting on the bus that the whole thing was something of a field trip. But even back then (as if this were all ancient history which in a sense it is since, as people say, things happen so fast) there were a few people who had gone off the deep end so far as to be actually 'serious'. The vast majority of the people who went looked, to me anyway, as if they should have had at least a little curiousity about what the System had to offer before they helped to bring about its demise. But I let it go at the moment: it's only natural to expect a crowd of UMass anything's to look all the same.

So I got on the bus and went to Washington and marched around and got tired and got ripped off for a green bookbag full of apples and generally had a good time. I came back to campus with the enormously pleasant feeling of having accomplished something. I couldn't explain it except to myself. Not having a reputation as being very vocal or outspoken about my political beliefs, I was beseiged by questions asking why had I gone? My immediate answer was that I had had a chance to go with someone that I thought would be fun to go with. Since this answer, although only partially true, seemed to be more in keeping with character, people went away satisfied.

For a while I actually found myself getting caught up in some kind of revolutionary fever. I began to believe that I had gone to Washington to protest a war.

The feeling went away after a while, and I was relieved.

I began to explore other parts of the World and the antiwar movement gradually began to catch less and less of my attention. Nothing that a person feels ever dies in him, no matter how removed the person gets from what caused the feelings in the beginning. But the spirit of protest began to dwindle and fade in me. It was revived again during the Strike but I almost consciously forced it out of myself after a week.

The spirit of protest didn't die in others. The Movement came back from Washington hungry. They could have come back satisfied, at least for the moment. But they didn't and they saved themselves. The Movement attracted more and more people, some of whom had never before voiced any kind of protest. They quickly grasped the trappings and the lingo, and most importantly, the concern.

In another part of the World, so to speak, I began to decide that I didn't want to do anymore protesting. It wasn't as if I were shirking my responsibility or anything, I just decided that I could better spend my time doing other things. So when Washington rolled around this year, I barely gave it a thought. I toyed with the idea of going down with Silverman and getting up an MDC Washington Bureau but even the thought of all that bother wore me out. I stayed on campus and let everyone else who cared go.

Last Friday night I was sitting in the Little Hatch where I stumbled across a pamphlet named 'Mayday.' Since I invariably read anything that's stuck under my nose, I began to look at 'Mayday' to see what it was all about. Of course it was about Washington but it was different than seeing the petitions and the leaflets that appeared in 1969 when the Student Senate tried to pay everyone's way to Washington. When that happened everyone was up in arms about his (or her) money. The UMass contingent was led by Tony Teso and Gil Salk and people like that. They looked radical and talked radical, but through their words you could discern some careful thought. They weren't fiery, exhorting people to burn and disobey. They were calm, almost tranquil, about the purpose of the trip.

Protest against the Vietnam war increased because the war continued. As the government committed horror after horror in Southeast Asia, the public's skin grew almost tender, and it howled with every new atrocity. Small wonder, then, that this time, Washington in 1971, saw not concerned people, but desperate people heading for the protests. The same people who went in 1969 went in 1971, but this time they weren't angry or mad. This time they were frantic.

I sat in the Little Hatch last week and read this 'Mayday' thing. A little information booklet on how to survive, it read with a quiet, tightly controlled feeling of panic. I tried to think of what it would read like in 50 years. It's message is timely, yet somehow trivial and I read it and laughed. A half million people go to the Capitol to stop a war and a country and demonstrate and then come home and pride themselves on the fact that there was no violence, that no one got clubbed or gassed.

What better way to destroy a monster than by waving your arms in excited silence in front of its face?

A Sense of Urgency

(Ed. note-The following message was received from the People's Coalition for Peace & Justice)

You may have received materials which we have sent out describing the activities we've planned for late April and May here in Washington.

As you may already know, people are coming to Washington with a sense of urgency about the present and future policies of the government of the United States. Key movements for peace and social justice have united on the basis of three inter-related demands which we will put forth here in Washington:

1) Immediate and total withdrawal of all U.S. military forces from Indo-China.

2) Freedom for all political prisoners.

3) An adequate income for all Americans.

We feel that each of these demands is crucial to raise at this time - with the increasing devastation and slaughter in Southeast Asia; rising unemployment, falling incomes, and substantial cuts in welfare payments; and a number of serious political trials now underway. These include the conspiracy trials of the Harrisburg 13 and the New York 21 as well as the murder trials of Ericka Huggins and Bobby Seale in New Haven and the Soledad Brothers, Ruchell Maggee and Angela Davis in California.

A people's lobby and civil disobedience actions are scheduled for Congress (April 26); the IRS (April 28); the Department of HEW (April 29; Selective Service (April 27); and the Justice Department on April 30 and May 4 to drive home these three demands.

And we will culminate our week's activities with a massive people's rally on the New Haven Green, May 7, to demand that Bobby and Ericka be set free.

We would like to request strongly that in any stories you may wish to prepare about the activities of late April and May, you include a clear statement of all three demands so that everyone will appreciate the serious commitment we have to them all.

Yours in struggle for peace and justice,

A Chance For A Voice

To the Editor:

The Student Senate has elected its Constitutional officers for the next academic year. Consequently, the new President will soon be making his appointments for the chairmanships of the Senate standing committees. Any student is eligible for a chairmanship—the prime requirement is interest and a certain knowledge of that particular committee's jurisdiction. A brief description of the Senate committees follows:

Academic Affairs - deals with feasibility of academic reforms, the adoption of new grading procedures, Teacher and Course Evaluation, and potential improvements of the educational process.

Activities: - grants the charters to any student group that wishes to become a Recognized Student Organization, and handles related questions and RSO policies.

Budgets - prepares a budget act, granting appropriations to RSOs that are deemed to have a valuable concept and a set of programs that will benefit the University community.

Finance - appropriates small sums of financial aid or loans to RSOs that again have a need and a worthy cause.

Public Relations - handles all advertising for elections, referenda, and other Senate projects.

Services - deals with all auxiliary enterprises on campus - dining commons, dorms, health council, parking, vending, etc.

Student Matters - maintains watch over all disciplinary rules and regulations; it provides suggestions for improvements of all non-academic procedures; is the committee responsible for the direction and up-keep of the student judiciary system.

Social Action - coordinates the activities of the National Student Association here on campus in Social action also provides a sounding board for all social reforms, relating what other universities are doing and how their programs can help us.

Student Government Affairs - SGA is responsible for the running of all elections and referenda. It maintains responsibility for the SGA Constitution and other legal documents of the Senate and other student groups.

Ways & Means - examines the financial standing of RSOs, if someone wants to have the books examined, as to the legal expenditure of Student Tax Funds.

Next year's Committees are going to be shaped by the new chairmen. I urge you to consider either joining or chairing a committee next year - it could benefit both you and the student government association. If you are interested, please contact either Lee Sandwen or myself this week at the Senate office.

Filling The Vacuum

To the Editor:

Muhammad Ali was splendid. The former heavyweight boxing champion proved once again that behind his fast hand there lives a sensitive, intelligent, and fantastically humorous individual. The sparring match with "Smoking Joe", the "Ali Shuffle", and the "rapid fire" give and take in the question/answer period again showed Ali to be a star (as if we had to be reminded). His sermon about "purpose in life" was the only thing in his appearance that left us hanging off the edge of our seats. We felt Ali had a way or design to achieve this purpose, but if he did, the solution wasn't conveyed to us in a way we could understand. Each of us in our own lives must somehow find this "purpose", or as Ali so correctly pointed out, "we are apt to become wealthy men and women with little happiness. Many confuse happiness with pleasure. This is an illusion." He also led us to believe that if you have not found your purpose in life by the time you're a child, you will never really find it. This is not true, if "only one out of the one thousand of us seated out there has a purpose", this is surely a sorry state we are in.

What the former heavyweight champion started, another former prize fighter may finish for anyone who is interested in hearing about how to have a real purpose in life. Ernie Wilson will be here Wednesday, April 28, in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:00 p.m. to speak on this very subject. Mr. Wilson, also a former Jazz musician, has found a purpose in life through the person of Jesus Christ. He claims to know of a way that he can enable any of us to fill up the vacuum in our individual lives if we have the desire to do so. He is not connected with any institutionalized church or religion, nor does he represent any fund-raising front group. Ernie is simply a man who has tasted ob both poverty and wealth, loneliness and fame, lack of purpose and finally purpose. If you can spare an hour you may find it's the most worthwhile time you've invested in the "two years" you've been alive.

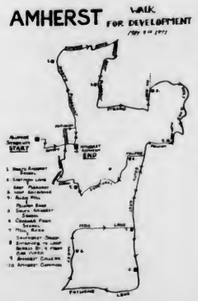
For Contemplation



To the Editor:

In response to letters yesterday by Mr. Brogan and Mr. Ehrlich let me merely state that I am referring to academic fascism. Academic fascism is having curriculum, grading procedures, course content, etcetera, decided for you and not being allowed any meaningful input. Academic fascists are those who believe in this philosophy. As far as the whole philosophy of Mr. Ehrlich is concerned, I believe as does Harold Taylor (ex-President of Sarah Lawrence College) that "(T)hose who now deplore the attacks on what they refer to as the fragile structures of authority and freedom within the university are late in discovering that the authority of the university is fragile because it rests on obsolete ideas about learning."

Mr. Bragan feels that my whole statement to the Faculty Senate was based on "sour grapes" because of apparent Faculty Senate disapproval of the report of the Campus Governance Commission. I would suggest to Mr. Brogan that while I believe in the importance of a unicameral system of governance I would not be as crass as to indict the faculty or the Faculty Senate on this one point which in actuality has not really even been formally considered. As a matter of fact the Student Senate could, and indeed might, with the consent of the student body, create a University Senate merely by accepting faculty members to the Student Senate. Contemplate that, Howard O. Brogan, Commonwealth Professor of English.

A Feat For Fit Feet

To the Editor:

Today you can make a decision. Today you can declare yourself a committed human being--committed to the cause of development. And the way to accomplish this seemingly monumental feat is to participate in the Walk for Development to be held on Sunday, May 9.

The procedure for the walk is as follows: Several weeks before the walk, each individual walker will approach his friends, neighbors, relatives, etc., and ask them to sponsor him by pledging a given amount of money for each mile he walks. At 8:00 on the morning of the walk the walkers will assemble at the University Stadium and then proceed to follow a previously charted twenty-five mile course which is shown at the left. Each walker will carry a walk-card which he will have stamped at each of the ten check points spaced along the route. After the walk is completed, each person will return to his sponsors and ask them for the funds they have pledged for his efforts. The funds will be allocated to certain local and foreign self-help projects. The walk-cards are now available at the table which has been set up in the Campus Center, next to the bookstore.

So, today, when you walk through the Campus Center and see the Walk for Development table, stop by. Take a walk-card. Commit yourself to the struggle to end world hunger.

It looks like they're about to raise the cost of cigarettes again, in Massachusetts anyway. The Senate approved a four-cent-a-pack boost in the cigarette tax although a reconsideration vote is scheduled. Pretty soon it will be cheaper if they outlaw the stuff.

Boston College has decided to drop the school's six year-old Chinese literature and language program. BC President Joyce explained that Chinese was "now beyond the scope of subjects we can support." Rumors abounded that the real reason for the decision was that Asst. Prof. Li-Li Ch'en, the school's only professor in the program, could not play ping pong.

Response To The Critics

To the Editor:

Doubtless the campus community is very bored by now by the red-baiting controversy engendered by Tackeff, Baglione, and Corry. However, I cannot let their fabrications pass unchallenged.

Tackeff speaks of the "intellectual anti-communists" as exemplified, I suppose, by Bob Corry, whose "intellectualism" extends to include lies and outright fabrications. For instance Corry lied to the Veterans for Peace when he told them he supported the immediate withdrawal of all U.S. troops from S.E. Asia. He told the Vets his only objection to their program was that they should "urge" and not "demand" an immediate withdrawal. The fact that he was lying comes out clearly in last week's Collegian, where Corry supported a "phased withdrawal." I can only speculate what his motives were for lying to the Vets, but it seems clear he is an opponent of the antiwar movement, who will use any unprincipled action whatever to destroy it.

Corry totally fabricated the story of the Kenmore Square riot. Whatever riot took place last February, the Young Socialist Alliance, which is committed to building a majority for socialism through peaceful, legal actions, had absolutely nothing to do with it. We are not pacifists and we will protect ourselves and our brothers and sisters from physical attack by any means necessary, but we have a long record of arguing against and taking action to prevent ultraleft tactics of trashing and confrontation for the sake of confrontation, which only plays into the hands of provocateurs. We understand the frustration which had led some of our brothers and sisters to confrontationist actions, but they remain the victims, not the criminals. The real criminals sit in the White House directing the largest terrorist combing campaign the world has ever known. As for the Kenmore riot, if it ever took place I challenge you, Mr. Corry, to come up with one shred of evidence that the YSA was involved, besides your imagination.

I don't have to say very much about Corry's prediction of violence at the April 24 demonstration. The largest antiwar demonstration in history was also the most peaceful. Of course the reason for the nonviolence of the day was the good sense and peaceful intent of over 600,000 Americans in Washington and San Francisco. But special credit must go the thousands of march marshalls and medic marshalls, some of whom came from UMass. And special credit must go to the chief marshall of the demonstration, Fred Halstead, Socialist Workers Party candidate for President in 1968.

Consider the next "intellectual anti-communist": Mr. Baglione. He parrots Corry in saying the YSA isn't really for an end to the War. A better example of Orwellian Doublethink could not be found. To be for an immediate end of U.S. involvement is to be for its continuation. Come now, Mr. Baglione, your audience is smarter than that.

The last of the trio of "intellectual anti-communists" is Tackeff himself. Tackeff's pretensions of intellectualism should make the intelligentsia weep. In not one, except the last, of his letters to the Collegian of the last several weeks of red-baiting did he mention the slightest intellectual opposition to communism. In each of these letters he was content to point out what everyone knows; that there are YSA members in the antiwar movement and that they in fact had been elected democratically to leadership positions. If Tackeff had taken it on himself to point out that the Student Mobilization Committee (SMC) was led by Irish Catholics, (O'Toole and Moriarty) everyone would have thought he was crazy. But no, he charged that there were revolutionary socialists in the leadership and thereby invoked the entire McCarthyite hysteria of the 1950's.

Finally in his last letter he tells why he thought his accusations are significant: the Commies have impure motives. If Tackeff wants to indulge in Corry's lies, let him claim wanting to stop the blood-letting, which I believe is done solely in the interests of U.S. imperialism, is an impure motive. If he wants to convince us his own motives are pure, let him state exactly how he supports the antiwar movement, which he claims to do. Let him state if he supports the demand for immediate and total withdrawal. And if he doesn't, let him state exactly where his position differs from Nixon's.

And if he still wants to join the legion of liars, let him claim that the YSA supports the police states of Stalinist Europe and Asia. Too many of our comrades have rotted and died in Stalinist prisons and continue to do so because they fought against the Stalinist bureaucracy, for me to let that Tackeff innuendo pass unchallenged.

In the end red-baiting hurts most the many thousands of independent antiwar activists whose moral and intellectual opposition to the war is passed off as "manipulated" and whose hard work is ridiculed as having been "duped." The red-baiters' fascination with pointing out the commies in the movement is really a criminal maligning of the talents and energy of these independents.

Sid Finchirsh

P.S. If the red-baiting trio wish to continue this discussion I suggest we stop using the valuable news space of the Collegian and boring the majority of the campus. Mr. Tackeff, Mr. Baglione, and Mr. Corry, are you willing to have a face-to-face debate?

Sea Train

Seatrain Spans All Styles

After almost two years of work, Sea Train has set sail, dropping anchor almost everywhere as its admirers jump on board. The group, built with the ashes of the Blues Project has an exciting sound created from unusual instrumental combinations and musical backgrounds that span country classical, folk and jazz.

These [illegible] young men have formed what could be in time one of the finest musical aggregations anyone may be listening to for a long while. Says the Washington DJ Star: "Their producer, George Martin [illegible] who also handled the Beatles albums, thinks they may be just as good as the Fab Four some way."

The group's members are Andy Kulberg, flute/bass, Richard Greene, electric violin, Peter Rowan, guitar/vocals, Lloyd Baskin, keyboard/vocals, and Larry Atamanuik on drums.

Kulberg began to form Sea Train as the Blues Project was falling apart. On that group's last album, he had played with Greene, who had already gone around with the Greenbriar Boys, Bill Monroe's Blue Grass Boys, and Jim Kweskin's Jug Band.

Kulberg and Greene are the only remaining members of the original Sea Train, which released a disappointing album in 1969. "It was just too complex," according to Kulberg. "We tried to do too many things that we really weren't ready for."

Sea Train has since re-formed into a tighter group of versatile, polished musicians that are commanding respect wherever they play. A highlight of their concerts comes when Kulberg launches into the classic "Flute Thing," an old Blues Project piece which builds slowly into a driving workout. Greene demonstrates his skillful electric fiddle playing on the old country tune, "Orange Blossom Special," as he makes his instrument sound like a train chugging down the tracks. In a sweet number called "As I Lay Here," he plays a recorder part on the fiddle and finishes with a jig.

Rowan, a solid guitarist with a rich baritone voice, backs them with country, blues and even soul lines. The ex-leader of Earth Opera, he met Greene when they played together for Bill Monroe.

"This band really set the woods on fire," a reviewer wrote in Crawdaddy recently. "It is thrilling to witness the effect Sea Train has on an audience. Getting back to rock and roll, driving in front of themselves, a music which at once is filled with sincerity and magnetism."

More Live Adventures of Al Kooper

Al Kooper is one of the great production men in music today as well as being an excellent performer in his own right.

Kooper sings driving white blues as first shown in his work with Blood, Sweat, and Tears, the group he helped build. Before leaving the group he was featured on their first Columbia album, "The Child is The Father To The Man".

Kooper then set out on his own, producing and performing. He worked with Mike Bloomfield in a jam session and produced half of "Super Session", one of the best rock albums of the late sixties. This led to "The Live Adventures of Al Kooper and Mike Bloomfield", a double-album set recorded live at the Fillmore West.

Kooper has made two single albums along with producing and doing pack-up with other groups. He worked with the Rolling Stones on their "Let it Bleed" album, playing horn, piano, organ, and guitar.

Recently it was reported that Kooper is returning to Blood, Sweat, and Tears and they are currently working on their next album.

Boz Scaggs Moving Up Fast

Something of a cross between country-rock and blues, BOZ SCAGGS is a seven man group that looks to be the next San Fransisco-based group to make it really big in popular music.

Their recent Columbia single is beginning to move up the charts as are both their albums. The group has also been receiving some excellent concert reviews being compared to Paul Butterfield's Blues Band and the lamented Electric Flag.

Boz Scaggs leads the group doing vocals and lead guitar along with writing some first-rate songs. He was formerly the lead guitar with the Steve Miller Band until he broke away some two years ago.

The group's first album on Atlantic, produced by Rolling Stone Magazine Editor Jann Wenner, went virtually unnoticed despite some fine reviews. SanFransisco columnist Ralph J. Gleason called it "a great album, absolutely one of the best of the year and the free style undisputed champion undiscovered album of 1969-1970."

Despite this good press, the album did not begin to sell until recently. Boz then changed record labels, to Columbia, and also made some personnel changes. The group now includes trumpet, trombone, tenor sax, second guitar, doubling electric piano, bass, and drums. Their sound is tight and their set is varied.

From the recent concert reports and judging from the release of their new album, BOZ SCAGGS is showing they're getting better all the time.

The Blessed Event Has Arrived

By BOB NESTI
MDC Staff

You probably heard first from a friend or maybe simply just overheard it about two months back when you were sitting in the Hatch after your 10:10 eating a sticky honey--dip donut between sips of your coffee. A girl you saw at the Drake last Friday night comes through the door and as you follow her through the Hatch, you pick up the conversation at the next table.

". . . Yeah, I guess they're having the Airplane and the Dead for free this May. It's gonna be outa-sight, let me tell you."

Then Mick Jagger came blaring from the juke box and you lost the conversation. Pretty soon though it was established in your mind that there would be a major concert come this Spring. After all, the Traffic concert had ended any hopes of any major group coming up here to play in the Cage and in the past this place had been a haven for good groups, why not outside!

Last year you braved the Cage and the crowd, to see Sly, Laura Nyro, Jethro Tull, Johnny Winter, Ten Years After, Three Dog Night, and the biggie-of-the-year the Jefferson Airplane. Then, despite the fact you moaned and pissed about the crowd and the heat and the rather mediocre performance, you could at least say you saw Ian Anderson or Alvin Lee or Gracie Slick which is all that counts when freaks get together these days.

This year things began to get a little bit grosse. The Steve Miller concert brought foreshadows of doom that finally broke loose with the Traffic fiasco at Homecoming. Here people were finally hurt and, in good conscience the Administration outlawed any further Cage concerts.

This, though, did not outlaw outdoor concerts and with thoughts of Spring Day and memories of the delightful freebies of last year (with James Taylor, Pentangle, Hedge and Donna, et all), people began anticipating the good weather. Also, you wondered, about all that money which normally funded such audacious occasions as SENDOFF and Winter Carnival now that they were reduced to sock-hops in the Campus Center?

The thought went through many people's minds, many different people in many different groups. Someone, probably after seeing Woodstock for the fourth time and having joined the Executive Council, decided that everyone should band together, throw all the collective bread into one large sum and bring to campus a "supergroup."

Which is where you came in, the Hatch, overhearing the Phi Sigma Deltaguy at the next table telling his chick that a brother in his house was on the concert committee and they were about to sign a contract with the Airplane or the Dead.

Things continued along these lines. You heard a bit here, a piece there. The Administration was hassling those planning the concerts. They didn't want to turn the campus into a zoo, that was last Spring's scene, hopefully not to be repeated.

The Administration didn't want certain groups, but they need not had worried for the Woodstock spirit was beginning to wear and little-by-little promised funds did not appear. Group names which were tossed around now were of lesser magnitude.

Those packaging the big event began to realize the affair wouldn't be as big as expected. The thought was refreshing, to say the least, for the idea of this campus being swamped by four times its student population paled the mind. Those working on the concerts attempted to make it a student affair--not some press agent's dream--and price rip-off groups like Grand Funk, Chicago, and Santana were put to rest (despite the cries and much to the dismay of Harold Koltin).

They worked quietly, while the rumors flew they did their best to cover all musical tastes within their by then shrunken (by original estimates) budget.

Finally everything was ready; the groups picked reflect taste and foresight (when James Taylor was here last year, he appealed to a limited cult as Brewer and Shipley and Boz Scaggs do now). Some people are bound to be disappointed but they'll go and probably have a good time, which is all that should be expected.

Brewer and Shipley

Making It Over The Line

One toke over the line
Sweet Jesus
One toke over the line
Standing all alone in a railway station
One toke over the line.

If you've been through the Hatch recently you've probably heard that chorus. It's replaced James Taylor and The Who as being one of the more frequently played songs on the jukebox and on the radio throughout the country, and it belongs to Brewer and Shipley.

Ira Trachter in a review in the Dec. 19th Billboard said, "they shine with some great-sounding guitar work and vocal harmonies and ingratiating chatter. Their gentle protest is of the persuasive kind, and although not at all subtle, the melodic, almost singalong material takes out some of the sting. "One toke over the line" and "Oh Mommy" from their current "Tarkio" album, with their provocative themes and country style melodies, were audience favorites at the Bitter End in New York.

Brewer and Shipley are a group that can come off in a live performance as good (if not better than) as on a record.

High decibel levels aren't a prerequisite for a capacity hall. A one show sellout concert by Brewer & Shipley at Carnegie Hall proved this. In a review of this concert, Variety Magazine said "that the two guitarists from Missouri are well versed and extremely comfortable in the acoustic country-folk idiom. Their voices and guitars smoothly fuse together to form a mellifluous harmonic collage that is buoyed by their strong vocal couplings. Aside from their own fine material, the pair show themselves on "Mighty Quinn" and "All along The Watchtower" to be excellent Bob Dylan interpreters.

Brewer & Shipley is a group that was overlooked once. But that was a long time ago. If the vibrations that were felt at the Bitter End and at Carnegie Hall are any indication of success, then Brewer & Shipley have it made.

The pair's tight harmonies and acoustic guitars are augmented by a collection of musicians including Jerry Garcia, formerly of the Grateful Dead, Nick Gravenites, Mark Naftalin, and drummer Bob Jones.

Besides appearances at the Bitter End and Carnegie Hall, Brewer and Shipley have put on many shows at clubs, colleges and on television. The listing of their important recent appearances is long, but a few worth noting are: The Boston Tea Party, The Family Dog In San Francisco, Oklahoma State University, and the Upbeat Show.

Brewer and Shipley are now emerging on the music scene as one of the more talented, less assuming groups about. Their appeal is almost universal because their music is easy and makes nice listening. During the next year Brewer and Shipley look to be one of popular music's important new finds as they combine the best elements of rock, country and folk in songs that are suited to their talents.

Curtis Mayfield Says Don't Worry

WE PEOPLE WHO ARE DARKER THAN BLUE by: Curtis Mayfield 1970

We people who are darker than blue
Are we gonna stand around this town
And let what others say come true?
We're just good for nothin
They all figure.
A boyish grown-up shiftless jigger.

Now we can't hardly stand for that
Or is that really where it's at.
We people who are darker than blue
This ain't no time for segregation
I'm talking bout brown and yellow too.

High yellow gal, can't you tell
You're just the surface of our dark deep well.
If your mind could really see
You'd know your color is the same as me.

Girl Gymnast 4th In Nationals

The UMass Girls Gymnastics team received a set-back and some individual victories in the National Intercollegiate Gymnastics Championships held at Penn State University this past weekend.

On the darker side of the picture, injuries to key competitors prevented the girls entering as a team. Members who had qualified in the top 10 at Regional Championships could enter as individuals only.

On the lighter side, the three girls who entered as individuals did well and brought home individual honors. Senior captain Linda Seikunas made the finals on the balance beam and placed 12th in the final competition. Freshman Anne Burmeister earned a berth in the finals in both of her events. She placed 11th in the balance beam and 4th in the floor exercise competition. Her score in the finals was 9:15 which gave her a tie for second with former Olympian Kathy Gleason. However, in totaling the preliminary and final competition scores, Anne came out in 4th place.

The only other individual entry, Marina Rodiquez, did not place in the finals due to two falls off the balance beam. Without these falls (worth .5 each) her score would have been one of the highest in the preliminary competition.

Lady Umps?

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP)—An appellate court ruled yesterday that professional baseball's physical standards for umpires are not justified and discriminate against women.

The decision was favorable to Mrs. Bernice Gera, 39, a New York housewife who has been trying to land an umpiring job in the New York-Pennsylvania League since 1969.

The ruling by the Appellate Division, fourth department, State Supreme Court upheld a decision by the State Human Rights Commission that the league refused to hire Mrs. Gera because of her sex. The commission also had ordered the league to revise its standards, which require an umpire to be at least 5-foot-10 and no less than 170 pounds.

BALTIMORE (AP)—The Baltimore Bullets of the National Basketball Association signed Stan Love, their No. 1 college draft choice, to a reported multi-year $500,000 contract, it was announced yesterday.

The 6-foot-8 center from the University of Oregon will play at forward for the NBA Eastern Division champion Bulletts.

Texas in the American Basketball Association also drafted him.

Bullets coach Gene Shue said he didn't think Love would have any trouble making the transition from center to forward.

The university of Oregon star who set 20 school records, including the most points in a game in a season and career during his three years, signed the contract in Washington about two hours after a noon press conference at the Baltimore Civic Center.
